The President has issued a proclamation directing the removal of all cattle from grazing upon what is known as the Cherokee outlet in the northern part of the Indian Territory. The removal must be completed by the first day of October next. The President also directs that in case negotiations now pending for the cession of that Territory to the United States shall have been completed before next October, that the cattle must be removed forthwith upon notice. He also directs that no additional herds be permitted to enter their Territory after this date.

Trouble Threatened in Portugal.

The London News' Lisbon correspondent says that many symptoms show that the Republican cause is increasing in strength daily, and that the end of the monarchy might come at almost any moment.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

A Detroit Residence Wrecked by the Explosion of a Loaded Stick of Wood.

Detroit special: An outrageous attempt, presumably upon the life of Mrs. Lipmeyer, of this city, occurred recently. As a result her mother is seriously, if not fatally, injured, and her house is badly wrecked. A year ago last October Mrs. Lipmeyer procured a divorce from her husband, and at the same time was awarded his interest in her present home, of which Lipmeyer's brother owned the remaining portion. There has been continual strife between Mrs. Lipmeyer and her brother-in-law since then. He has frequently threatened her life and one time violently assaulted her. The other morning some wood was put into a stove and a fire started. Some time afterward the neighborhood was startled by an explosion which was heard for blocks. It came from the Lipmeyer residence and investigation showed that the stove was blown to atoms, practically, and Mrs. Lipmeyer's mother seriously injured. The cause of the explosion was immediately investigated. It was found that a strong odor of powder pervaded the house. Further search disclosed a block of wood which had been bored to a depth of one foot and the condition of the cavity showed only too plainly the presence of powder. It was a miraculous escape for the whole family, who were in the immediate vicinity of the stove. Mrs. Lipmeyer is at a loss to account for the occurrence except by the story of her trouble with her brother-in-law.

SENTENCED.

A Two Years' Term in Prison Given to the Young Duc d'Orleans.

Paris special: The Duc d'Orleans, son of the Count and Countess of Paris, who came to Paris last week with the avowed intention of enlisting in the French army, and who was then arrested on the charge of violation of the law exiling from France all pretenders to the French throne, was again arraigned before the Tribunal of the Seine Friday. He was adjudged guilty of violating the law and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. The court-room was crowded with spectators who had gathered to watch the proceedings against the young Duke. When the prisoner was arraigned the crowd broke out with loud cries for the army, the Duke of Orleans and the Republic. They became so demonstrative that the gendarmes were compelled to clear the room. Before judgment was announced the Duke addressed the Court in his own behalf. He said: "I came to France to serve as a common soldier. I have nothing to do with politics, which only concerns my father, whose obedient son and faithful servant I am. I knew that by entering France I rendered myself liable to the law, but that knowledge did not stop me. I love my country and wish to serve her. I am guilty of no crime." After sentence had been pronounced a thousand persons invaded the advocate's room. Many of them were monarchists, and shouted: "Long live the Duke of Orleans." Their shouts were met with counter cries of "Down with the Duke of Orleans," "Long live the Republic," The guards were powerless to restore order. After venting their feelings here for a time, the crowd shouted: "To the Statue. Let us crown Henry IV." With one accord they rushed to the side of the statue where there were cries of "Long live the King" from the Duke's sympathizers, and counter cries of "Long live the Republic," from his opponents. The police made twenty-five arrests.

BLOODY MARK.

The Boomers Proceed to Shoot and Cut Each Other Down.

A special from Pierre, S. D., dated the 14th inst., says: Last night serious trouble occurred in the Mile Square, and shooting was common all night long. One man, a leader of the South Pierre boomers, called "Jesse James," was cut and shot and is now lying in a serious condition. Another man named Wolgemach, is also badly hurt, and a number of others were sandbagged and hurt in the general melee which went on all night. A public meeting was held and committees were appointed to organize the county and city and for various other purposes, including one to confer with the Northwestern Railway regarding the conflicting claims of the road and settlers who are now occupying every foot of the Mile Square. A vigilance committee yesterday went to a widow woman named Evans, who had moved a house on to a lot which, she claimed, had been jumped by a man named McKee, and ordered her to move the building at once or they would do it for her. She defied them and this morning a mob bodily lifted the house and set it into the street. A car containing prominent Northwestern officials came in to-night and they will at once take means to enforce their claims as owners of the Mile Square. This will still further complicate matters and will surely lead to trouble. Men who were at the opening of Oklahoma say the disorder on that occasion was small compared with what can now be seen here.

HIT TO KILL.

Banzia, of Kilrain's Sparring Party, Breaks a Man's Neck at Dallas.

A special from Dallas, Tex., says Jake Kilrain and his sparring troupe exhibited at the opera house here. It was announced to be only a sparring and wrestling match. After some uneventful sparring by others, Tom James, of Dallas, encountered Banzia, the combination champion light weight, for $25, conditioned that James should stay four rounds. Banzia had it his own way from the first. In the fourth round Banzia struck James in the neck knocking him limp on the stage. James was unable to rise. He was sponged and restoratives applied and the show continued, no one supposing that James was hurt seriously. When the entertainment had about concluded, Muldoon announced that James was unconscious and called for a physician. As soon as the serious condition of James became known officers began a search for Banzia, but he had fled. At 12:30 James died and the entire combination, excepting Banzia, was put under arrest on the charge of murder. Kilrain was so overcome that he wept like a child. A few hours later Banzia returned and surrendered to the officers. It is generally supposed that James' neck was broken, but one doctor gives it as his opinion that he died from paralysis of the heart.

WRONG ORDERS.

They Are Sent by a Train Dispatcher and the Inevitable Disaster Follows.

Indianapolis special: A north bound morning passenger train on the Monon route collided with a freight train two miles north of Mitchell. W. H. Dillard, of Louisville, engineer, and J. B. Godinger, of New Albany, fireman of the passenger engine, were instantly killed, and Charles Wright, mail agent, of Orleans, fatally injured, dying in a short time. Injured: W. B. Green, news agent, Louisville, scalp wound; W. M. Smith, Louisville, head badly cut; John Bills, conductor, scalp wound; Mr. Morton, mail agent, scalp wound; F. E. Railshank, Buffalo, head bruised and cut; H. T. Beasle, Ligonier, drummer for United States Lounge Company, Indianapolis, leg and arm bruised and sprained. A few other passengers were hurt, but not seriously. The wreck was caused by wrong orders from the train dispatcher, who ordered the freight engine south on the time of north-bound passenger.

A HEROIC ACT.

An Old Man Rescues a Drunken Individual from a Horrible Death.

A remarkable escape from death occurred at Glidden, Wis. A train was pulling out of the depot. The engineer's attention appeared to be called away, and he did not notice the prostrate body of a drunken woodsman lying across the track about a hundred yards from the depot. However, an old man on the platform saw the situation and bounded on to the track and ahead of the engine. He ran rapidly to the man, who in his drunken stupor, was wholly unconscious of his danger. Seizing him quickly the old man rolled him off the track, but before he could get himself out of the way the engine was upon him. It struck him and threw him into a snowbank. His injuries are quite serious but not necessarily fatal. The old man refuses to give his name.

In Detectives' Toils.

Philadelphia special: The hearing of Private Detectives Leopld Alexander and Edward Hall, charged by Mrs. Emily B. Hooper with fradulently obtaining over $20,000 from her in cash, has been postponed. Mrs. Hooper swears that she first employed the detectives in the fall of 1886 to obtain information as to her missing daughter's whereabouts. She said they deceived her with false representations, and in four months obtained from her $5,000. They declared, she says, that her husband, who had deserted her, intended to place her in an Insane Asylum, and during the years which have elapsed since the beginning of her connection with them have obtained thousands of dollars from her. They represented that she was safe in their hands alone, removed her from the assistance of friends and relatives, and removed her from legal advisers and induced her to transfer to them the sum of $18,412.98 which she had deposited with the Pennsylvania Company for the insurance of lives and granting of annuities.

Prey of Incendiaries.

Marceline (Mo.) special: This little town has been in a craze of excitement for nearly a week over repeated attempts to burn it down. The first fire was one entailing a loss of nearly $20,000. Several of the best buildings in the town were at this time consumed, and those who were attempting to extinguish the fire in one of the buildings were horror-stricken to see a dead body, partially wrapped in a sheet, lying on the table in the back room of a physician's office. The flames spread so rapidly that no effort was made to break in the building. After the flames had subsided the blackened body of the corpse was found in the ruins. An effort was then made to find how the fire originated. Within the last few days several more buildings were burned, including a roller mill owned by B. F. White and Fred J. Schuff. Twenty-five thousand dollars worth of wheat were burned in the building, and the mill cost about $20,000. Large rewards have been offered for the incendiaries.

Farmers for Law and Order.

Dayton special: A State organization known as the Farmers' Law and Order League of Ohio, was effected in this city, at a meeting for that purpose, attended by representatives of local leagues in Montgomery, Preble and Greene counties. The object of the organization is fully stated in the declaration of principles. "The organization is for the purpose of uniting the various anti-crime organizations into one common brotherhood, with one common object in view—the enforcement of all the laws against crime, misdemeanors and disorder." Articles of incorporation will be filed with the Secretary of State. The organization elected officers as follows: President, Frank Wilhelm, Montgomery; Vice President, J. S. Stewart, Preble; Secretary, Cornelius Brown, Greene; Treasurer, Samuel Wampler; Executive Committee, George S. Bonner, Greene; Alfred Johnson, Preble; J. Q. A. Coover, J. W. Wenger, and Theodore Lorganaher, Montgomery.

Passengers Facing Fire.

The Bessemer and Ashland passenger train on the Wisconsin Central road was side-tracked at Marengo, Wis., to allow a freight to pass. While the train was waiting a flat-car loaded with logs came flying down the grade and plunged into the rear coach of the passenger train, wrecking it. The wreck at once took fire from the lamps. For a time it was feared that four or five passengers who were wedged in the wreck would be burned to death. After half an hour's hard work the imprisoned ones were rescued. A Mr. Zimmer, of Mineral Point, who travels for a Milwaukee firm, had a leg badly bruised, and received other injuries. J. C. Mullen, of Morse, was severely bruised. C. N. Lattimer, a traveling man, was injured internally. Miss Wandrau and Miss Mercier escaped with scratches. The cause of the runaway of the flat-car is a mystery.

A Letter from Stanley.

Henry M. Stanley, in a letter to Col. Thomas W. Knox, of New York, after acknowledging the warm greetings which he is receiving from this side of the Atlantic, says: "Africa is not a land to cause one to forget his friends, but rather emphasizes whatever happy impressions and memories of Europe he may have. She is exacting, but not unkind. You see, I speak of Africa as a goddess. She intimates very clearly that what she has in store for her voyagers is not to be compared with her richer and more cultivated sister, Europe; therefore I have been enabled to hold my friends very near by heart. Of course the first thing to do is to finish the report of our almost completed work, and this will keep me some months in Europe. Then I shall think of seeking my friends. That will be a rare pleasure."

Driven from Home.

Reports from Suislaw, Oregon, states that a number of people were driven from their homes by the recent flood and considerable property destroyed. The bridge across Lake Creek was washed away. A man named Turner was drowned. The loss to Lane County is estimated at $50,000. The mail carrier from Florence brings word that a landslide occurred on the mountain above the Suislaw River last week, burying the residence of A. F. Andrews, killing Mrs. Andrews, her daughter and little son. Andrews and an older son were thrown into the river, and after floating on the debris all night were picked up several miles below in an almost dying condition.

Volcanic Eruption.

Japanese advices by the steamer Gaelic, gives the details of a terrible volcanic eruption of Mount Zoo, in the Bingo district. On January 16 the mountain began to rumble, and the inhabitants of the neighboring villages rushed away from their homes in great confusion. The top of the mountain was lifted off, sand and stones being belched forth. The ground in the neighborhood was covered with sand and earth to a depth of over a foot. Stones and earth also fell at Midsunomimura, a village six miles away. Only one man lost his life, but some stock was killed and fifty-five houses were destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $3,500,000.

A Negligent Brakeman.

Through the negligence of a brakeman, the accomodation train on the Lake Shore road, from the west, ran into an open switch at Bellevue, Ohio, and crashed into a light locomotive on the siding. Both engines were demolished, and Fireman Young, of the light locomotive, was instantly killed. Engineer Phelps, of the passenger train, was severely, though not fatally hurt. Fireman Simpson, of the passenger train, had both legs broken and was hurt internally. A lady passenger named Wooster had several ribs broken but is not fatally hurt. Conductor Hoyt, of the passenger train, suffered a scalp wound and was badly bruised.

A University in Flames.

Toronto (Ont.) special: The Toronto University was totally destroyed by fire. Loss, $500,000. Falling lighted oil lamps caused the flame. All the buildings destroyed were insured for $164,000. A striking feature of the fire was the falling of the 3,000 pound bell in the main tower of the university. When the framework in which it stood burned away, the great bell fell crashing through the huge stone tower, its great tongue sounding as it fell the death-nell of the first university building in the country. The university was built in 1860. Sir Adam Wilson, President, is almost heartbroken. He was carried from the university grounds prostrated.

A Bank Robbed.

Salem, (Ill.) special: In the Salem National Bank cracksmen got in the neighborhood of $25,000 in cash and securities. The safe was blown open by drilling holes, using gunpowder and fuse. The robbers left a quantity of gold pieces scattered on the floor vault and overlooked at least $10,000 in currency and securities. A notice, signed by President Martin and Cashier Marshall was posted on the bank window announcing that the actual loss in cash would not exceed $10,000 and that the bank would be open for business. This had the effect of dispersing the crowds.

A Costly Overcoat.

Chicago special: A New York newspaper advertising solicitor, sued Potter Palmer for $15,000 damages for the loss of his overcoat, it being stolen from a peg in the Palmer House billiard room. Fifteen thousand dollars for an overcoat looks like a big sum, but it is not the loss of the overcoat that the advertising man complains so much. He says that in one of the pockets was a list of newspaper advertisings with their ratings—the most complete in the country—and that it was stolen. He sues more for its loss, placing its value at $15,000.

An Impudent Peddler.

A peddler, giving the name of Morris Kushman, of Dayton, O., went to the home of Mrs. Will Priest, a pretty young woman ot Muncie, Ind., and tried to sell her some goods. Her refusal to buy was met with some petty talk and an attempt to kiss her. Mr. Priest caused Kushman's arrest on a charge of assault. The police judge's reply to the defendant's plea of guilty was that he believed in protection and would fine him $25 and costs, in all $37, which caused the Daytonian to go to jail without the kiss.

Wyoming to Come In.

Mr. Baker has reported favorably to Congress a bill introduced by Delegate Cary providing for the admission of Wyoming to Statehood. It is stated in the report that the proposed State boundaries are the same as those of the Territory. The proposed new State contains 98,000 square miles. This would make it the eighth State in the Union in point of size, and equal in area to Delaware, New Jersey, Kentucky and New York.

Eight-Hour Settlement at Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh special: It is stated upon the authority of prominent leaders of the building trades that there will be no strike in this city on May 1, for eight-hours a day's work. The employes will be paid for the work done at so much per hour. There will be no advance over the price paid at the present time, but eight hours will constitute a day's work. There are about 8,000 men employed in the building trades in this district.

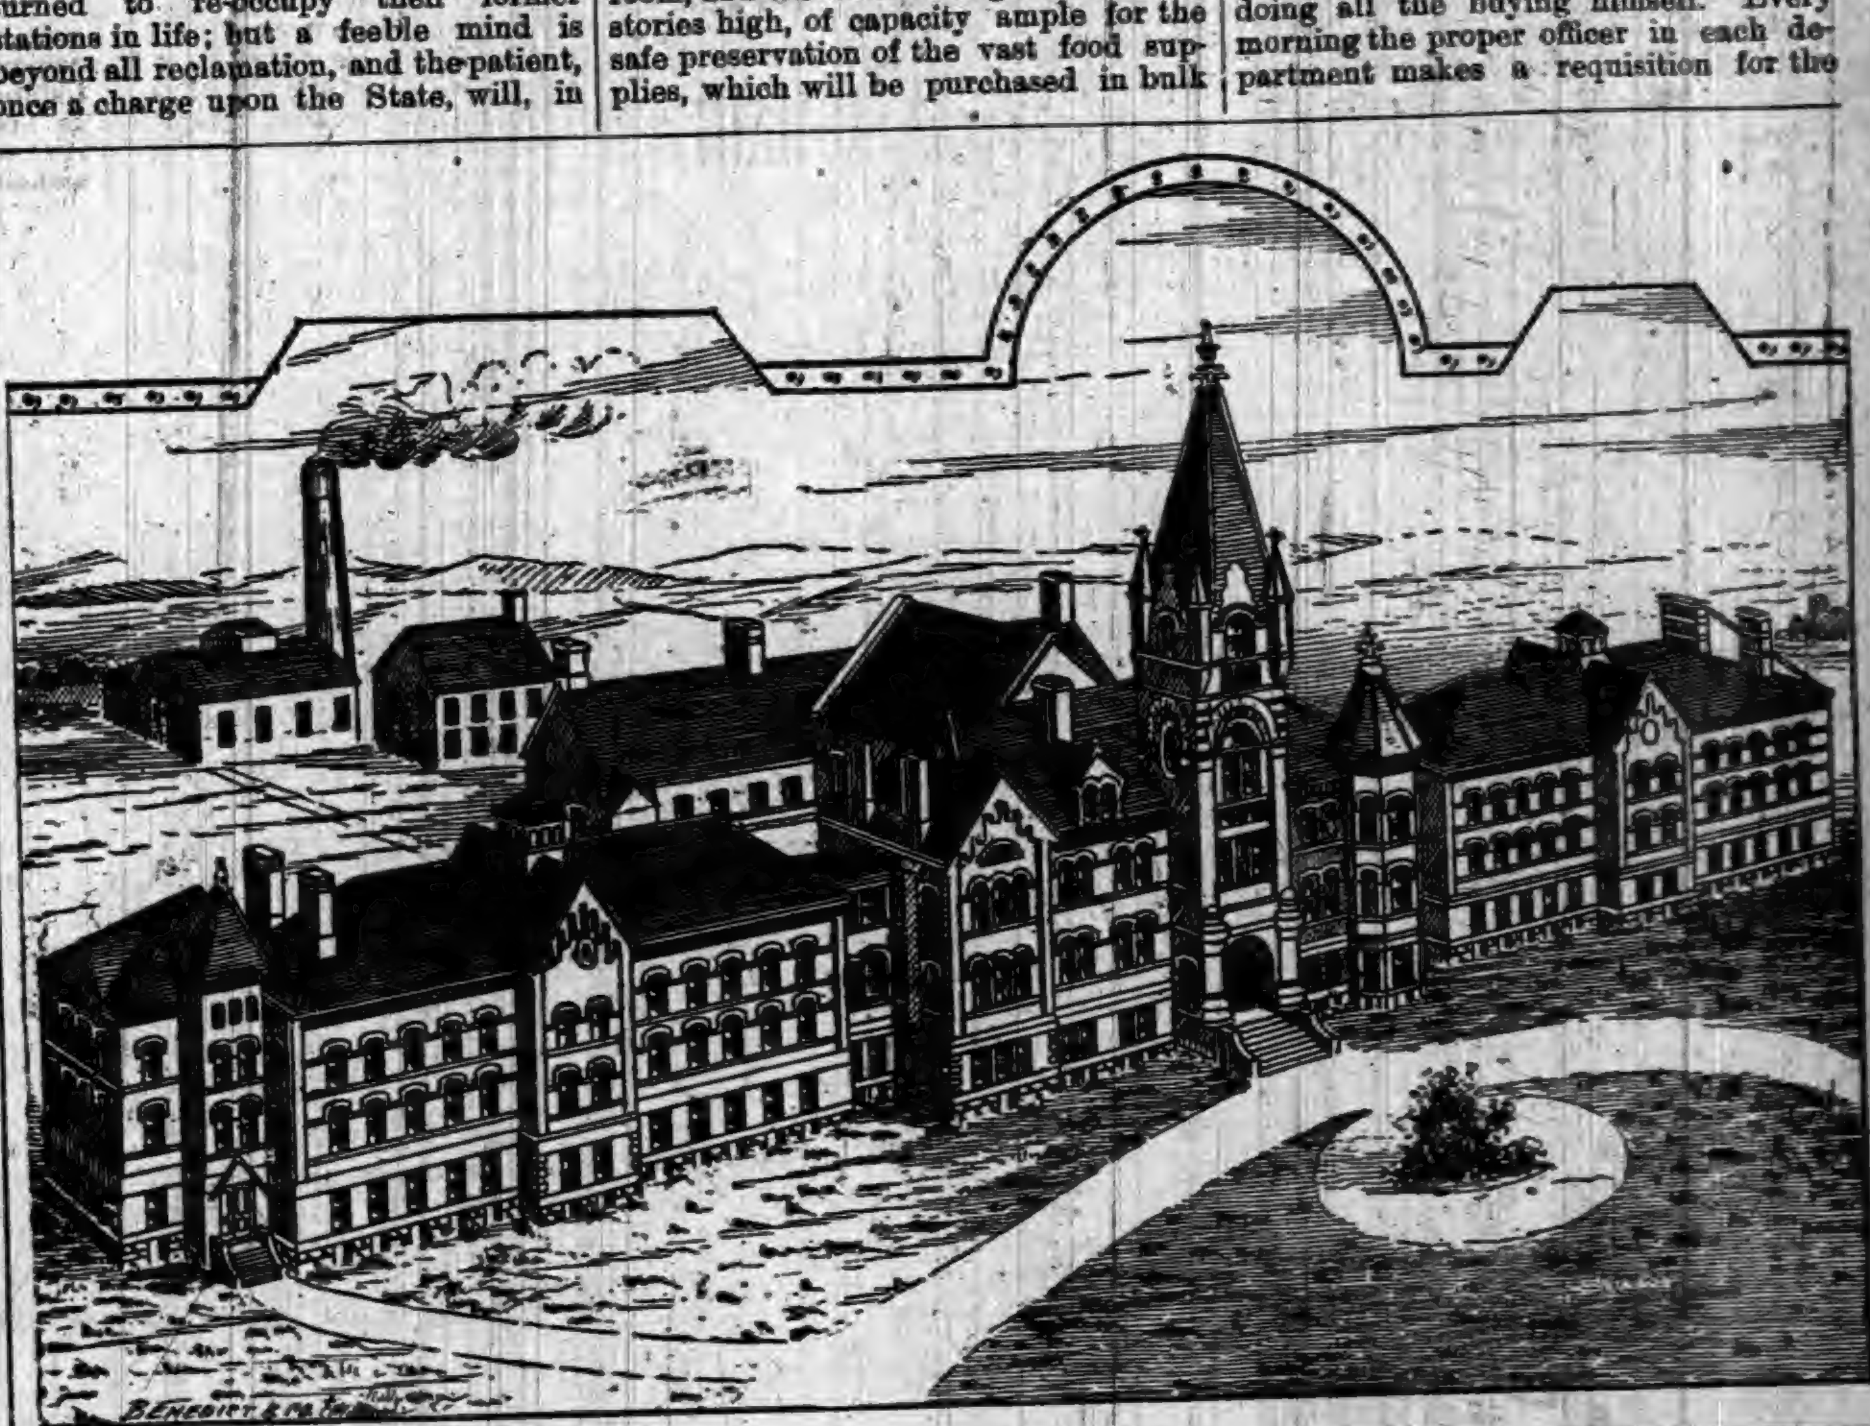
THE STATE'S WARDS.

A BEAUTIFUL HOME FOR FEEBLE-MINDED CHILDREN.

Full Description of the Buildings Erected at Fort Wayne—The Excellent Sanitary Conditions — Fire Protection — Electric Lighting, Etc.

A Fort Wayne correspondent says: The accompanying illustration well represents the magnificent school for feeble-minded youths now being erected by the State at Fort Wayne. For the peculiar purposes to which it is to be adapted, it promises to equal, if not exceed, in extent any of the State's buildings.



B. Hembert & Co.

Insanity, or dementia, which are the sad conditions of many of the charges upon the commonwealth, is often curable, and the patients, restored to the uses of their proper senses, are returned to re-occupy their former stations in life; but a feeble mind is beyond all reclamation, and the patient, once a charge upon the State, will, in all likelihood, remain so forever. Accordingly this Home for Feeble-minded Youths will, in time, become the place of residence for many aged people who will pass their lives there.

This was made clear when the law compelling the discharge of patients when they should have reached the age of twenty-one years was modified, and the Home was made their permanent abiding place.

Persons of feeble mind are capable of a considerable degree of instruction and are taught to perform in a very satisfactory manner many employments not demanding a high grade of intelligence. Farm work is easily mastered, and under the guidance of teachers is successfully prosecuted. Various mechanical and manufacturing employments are acquired, and the various aptitudes of the inmates are so studied and turned to account as to render the great institution not only self-supporting, but a source of cosiderable revenue to the State. Such is the history of similar institutions in other States.

THE BUILDING IN DETAIL.

The building, or rather buildings, are erected on what is known as the corridor system, each edifice being connected on every story by halls, fitted with fire-proof doors. The materials used in construction are brick, with light trimmings, and Stony Point buff sand stone. The effect is very pleasing.

The administration building, which occupies the center, and is intended for the use of the Superintendent and the working force, has a ground plan of 52x102 feet and is three stories high. The chapel building, 44x55 feet, is two stories high. The lower story is used for a dining-room for girls. The culinary building is 31x125 feet and three stories high. The east and west additions to the administration building measure, respectively, 52x100 feet and 52x66 feet, and are both of three stories, and an addition to the west dormotory is 45x58 feet, two stories high. Added to these vast buildings and connecting with them through an underground tunnel is a boiler house 50x50 with a brick stack of sixty inches inside diameter and eighty feet high. The engine room is 26x30 feet and next to it is the laundry, 36x49 feet, two stories high with a soap house attached. In the rear of the culinary building is the cold storage building, 23x36 feet, two stories high, and to the east of the culinary building a bakery, 30x40 feet, fitted with two brick ovens, 10x13 feet inside.

The buildings have a general east and west alignment, and face toward the south. An excellent system of drainage has been provided through a fifteen inch tile pipe, 2,000 feet in length, emptying into the St. Joseph River. The pipe is fitted with a siphon trap, catch basins, etc., and that portion under the buildings is a monster cast-iron pipe. Drain tile extends from all down spouts to cisterns of an aggregate capacity of 1,200 barrels.

The aggregate floor space of the buildings is 86,200 square feet of which 20,000 square feet is to be laid with encaustic tile, 1,000 square feet with cement, 1,000 square feet with asphalt and the balance with Southern pine, laid upon asbestos paper. The walls of the buildings are unusually heavy and the face brick are laid with white sand. All inside walls are laid with sand. This sand, of excellent quality and in great quantity, was found on the premises, whereby no small saving to the State resulted. There have been used about 3,200,000 brick. The principal part of all footings is concrete. The quantity of foundation, range and cut stone is about 3,434 perch, or about 171 car loads, which would make six ordinary trains.

HOW THEY WILL BE OCCUPIED.

The administration building, 52x102 feet, will be devoted to the uses of the superintendent and his assistants and will contain handsome offices, reception-rooms, and parlors, besides commodious dining-rooms, kitchen, pantrys, and sleeping-rooms. Connecting with this building in the rear is the girls' dining-room and the chapel, 44x56 feet, two stories high, and behind the chapel and connecting with it are the quarters for the help, the large kitchen, the scullery, servants' dining-room, and stewarts' room, in a building three stories high and having a ground plan of 32x120 feet. The servants' quarters are in the two upper stories. Adjoining this building on the east is the bakery, 30x40 feet, one story high, and a sink-room 12x12. The bake ovens are of the most approved pattern. An enclosed corridor, forty feet long, leads west from the culinary building to the boys' dining-room, 44x56 feet, two stories high.

The boys' dormotories, school rooms, and day rooms, fitted with lavatories, etc., connect on the west side with the administration building and on the east side are similar apartments for the girls, this plan permitting of the complete separation of the sexes. The boiler house contains boilers of 400 horse power and is placed at a safe distance from the other buildings, the steam being carried through a long underground tunnel. Near by are the engine room, laundry building, stewarts' room, and the cold storage room, two stories high, of capacity ample for the safe preservation of the vast food supplies, which will be purchased in bulk quantities. The maintainance will cost about $3,500 per month.

The finish of the interior of the series of buildings is of southern pine and is rather plain in appearance. The floors are also of southern pine and laid with asbestos fire proofing. The walls in the center building are plastered, while the walls in the wings are painted with three coats on the brick.

All the ceilings in the east and west wings, and the boys' dining-room are of fine crimped iron. The floors of the halls, corridors, lavatories, and the boys' and girls' dining-room are laid with encaustic tile. The stairways are of iron and slate and are reliably fire-proof. The ventilation of the center building is accomplished by means of grates, one placed in nearly every room, and the wings are ventilated by two fifty-inch fans, run by rotary engines, the air being drawn from these rooms and expelled up the shaft.

The buildings have an ample amount of plumbing of a very superior kind. Water is supplied from large iron tanks, placed in the attic. The bath tubs are cast-iron, porcelain lined, and the water closets are automatic and pull tank earthen closets. The basins are galvanized iron, porcelain lined, the urinal stalls are of slate and the supply and waste pipes of iron. The supply is so arranged that it can be used for a fire pressure line if desired. All pipes in the buildings are iron and extra heavy.

The water supply will be furnished from cisterns and from a series of six drive wells located near the boiler house. These will be pumped with a duplex pump, the water being forced into elevated tanks. Steam is furnished from various lines of high pressure pipes to heaters, placed under each line of fixtures. The system of heating is known to architects as the low pressure, gravity system, that is, all the condensation return to the boilers by gravity. The diameter of the pipe as it leaves the boilers is fourteen inches which is gradually reduced as it extend to the farther limits of the plant. More than five miles of pipes are used, and over 16,000 feet of radiation, divided about equally into direct and indirect radiation, making the largest "one pipe system" known to architects, the country over.

FIRE PROTECTION.

Unusual precautions have been taken to guard the inmates from the horors of a conflagration. Three large chemical engines have been placed in the basement, under each building and each floor has fire hose, ready for instant use.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

The lighting of the buildings will be by incandescent electric light, socket lamps and on circuits, with switches, fuse, boxes, etc. Power is furnished by a sixty horse-power engine driving a 600 light dynamo.

The laundry will be suppled with all modern appliances, among them three washers of great size, one centrifugal wringer, a sixty inch mangle, drying bars, soap and starch kettles, laundry stoves, trucks, etc, run by a ten horse-power engine.

Such is a brief description of the new Indiana home for feeble-minded youths as far as it has progressed. It is planned to erect isolated hospital buildings for each sex, capitally adapted for the care of sick inmates, to cost about $5,000 each, and a brick barn to cost $2,500, in addition to what has been built.

It is expected that the great work will be ended by June 1, but of course there will remain much to attend to before the buildings are completed.

There are now upwards of 400 inmates on the rolls who are temporarily quartered at Richmond until the Fort Wayne home can be made ready for their receptions.

The school gives especial attention to teaching the inmates useful kinds of manual labor. It is found by practical experience that the children make surprising progress. Individuals who have been regarded as hopelessly idiotic are found in many cases capable of learning to perform much useful labor. All the stockings, socks, and mittens needed in the institution are made by the girls, and the quality of the work is superior. Comforts and other bed clothes are also made, and bedsteads and first-class mattresses are also manufactured in the school. A very handsome steel-gray uniform has been provided for the boys, and the clothes are all made in the tailor shop of the school. Some of the boys are taught to sew and the girls are taught to use sewing machines readily. During the year more than 4,000 garments were made by the boys and girls. In the shoe shop one skilled workman is employed who is assisted by six of the boys. During the past year they made 875 pairs of new shoes, all that were used in the institution, besides mending 2,000 pairs. In the laundry, and on the farm, and in the housework, the inmates are employed in considerable numbers and with entire success.

The Superintendent has adopted a system of regulating the purchase and distribution of supplies which is found to work with perfect satisfaction. No steward is employed, the superintendent doing all the buying himself. Every morning the proper officer in each department makes a requisition for the supplies needed that day. These requisitions are scrutinized by the Superintendent and O. K.'d when satisfactory. Then the books are balanced every night, so that the exact amount of the running expenses for each day is known before the lights are out. The goods manufactured in the school must all go into the store room and be checked out in the same way.

While the school is yet new and only fairly ready to begin to show results, it is already said to be plain that there are great possibilities of reaching useful and humane ends. Children heretofore regarded as helpless burdens upon the commonwealth are found to be capable of becoming wholly or in part self-supporting, by proper training. Epileptics and paralytics can be cared for cheaply and well, and treated in the best possible manner, where the facilities are provided expressly with that object in view. The object which justifies the founding of such a school as this is based upon principles of sound economy and humanity.

"BOO."

BY OZIAS MIDSUMMER.

The brindle cow's music was drowsy and dull,
The dew of the grass wet her tail,
As Robin Adair drove her up to the stile,
Where Mary, the milkmaid, with mischievous smile,
Was waiting and watching with patience the while,
With her brown curly head in the pail.

The clouds and the darkness of night had just past,
The sun arose, big, round, and red,
As Robin Adair reached the stile with the cow,
And wondered just when, just where, and just how,
He had ever seen Mary so pretty as now,
With the bright shining pail on her head.

A moment he wondered, a moment he paused,
His heart beat a quickstep or two,
When he saw to his sorrow her rosy lips pout,
And heard the deep mutt'rings of sobs coming out
From the dear little heart he was thinking about,
As he waded the grass, wet with dew.

With a hop, skip, and jump Robin mounted the stile,
To learn, if he could, what it meant,
When Mary confessed, between sobs, then and there,
That her hope and ambition was Brindle to scare,
But the pesky old "handle" had caught in her hair,
So she could not say "boo" worth a cent.

THE JEWELED HAIRPIN;

—OR—

The Strange Tragedy of the Grand Hotel.

BY ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.

CHAPTER XIII—Continued.

To my surprise I was received by Captain Fawcett.

"I asked to be allowed to speak to Mrs. Sarsfield, or Miss Bertram," I began, very stiffly.

"They are both engaged. Mr. Sarsfield requires close, constant attention. Your second dastardly stab will have done its work effectually."

"Captain Fawcett, I must demand an explanation. You have once already held extraordinary language with regard to me, and I will not tolerate it, understand that."

"The evidence against you is unmistakable."

"Indeed! What evidence?"

"The first attack was made just as you were leaving Bythesea; it is renewed directly you return."

"Pshaw! man, you are willfully deceiving yourself. If Mr. Sarsfield has been threatened, it was not by me; that I solemnly declare, on my honor. But I can tell you——"

I had no time to complete the sentence. The bedroom door opened. I heard the rustle of a dress, and Miss Bertram came out, tearful, agitated, but with a bright look on her beautiful face.

"I knew it. I was certain of it," she said, as she seized my hand impulsively. "You could not have done so dastardly a thing."

"Oh, Miss Bertram, is it possible that you ever doubted me?" I asked, reproachfully, looking into her eyes.

"No, no; not really. It was he, Captain Fawcett, who insisted; who would make out——"

"Captain Fawcett will yet admit his injustice, I think. He will apologize——"

"Never!"

"We shall see. But we are losing time. I understand Mr. Sarsfield has been threatened?"

"Twice," said Miss Bertram, eagerly, ignoring a gesture from Captain Fawcett. "I shall speak. Twice. The first time by the letter you saw delivered; the second, this morning. Here, see what they say."

"No, you must not, Miss Bertram," interposed Captain Fawcett, trying to intercept the letters. "Do remember. It is Mr. Sarsfield's secret you are divulging."

"I do not think Mr. Sarsfield has any secret from me," I cried, quickly.

"I should like to know how you have gained the knowledge," said Captain Fawcett, still insolent.

"By fair means. I have learned all about the Dos Hermanos——"

"Oh, Mr. Leslie, do not be harsh; do not condemn too hastily. He may have been to blame—morally, perhaps, but not actually or knowingly. He withdrew at once from the firm when its wicked, disgraceful conduct was known. They had never told him; he was quite in the dark till after the capture of the ship."

"But he always dreaded exposure?"

"Don't you see, he would have been disgraced utterly in the city, in London, everywhere. The man came and threatened to publish everything. He had the fullest proofs, he said, and would produce them——" And this, then, was the secret that Cornelis Janssen had surprised!

"I can tell you," I said, "who wrote those letters. I may read them, I suppose! I must, if I can help you as I wish—for I do wish most sincerely, Miss Bertram. You believe that?"

She gave them to me without opposition now, and accompanied by a sweet look that thrilled through and through me, saying: "How can he be silenced? Must he have what he asks? Do advise us?" And Captain Fawcett's face grew black as he saw himself thus thrust aside.

I read the letters. The first, received just before I left Bythesea, was very brief. It said:

"Do not think yourself safe. He is dead, but others know."

That was all.

The second ran as follows:

"The writer has in his hands the proofs of your guilt. You authorized the massacre, and are responsible for it. You must [illegible]. Will you pay the [illegible] now [illegible] £500 in six

Rather than agitate Mr. Sarsfield further in his weak state I agreed to this, and promised, for the Bythesea police, that we would not interfere with Cornelis for the present. He should touch his coin and go; but we would not lose sight of him, and when he least anticipated capture, when all his fears of molestation were lulled, he must be arrested himself and his papers seized by a sudden descent.

It was so arranged. The blinds were manipulated as directed, and no watch kept on the Esplanade to see whether Cornelis came in person to see the signal. At sundown Fawcett, the friend of the family, went to the north end of the beach with the gold which had been brought down from London by one of Mr. Sarsfield's clerks, in obedience to telegraphic instruction.

There were the rows of disused bathing machines. The key was in the place indicated. To unlock the padlock, deposit the gold, relock the machine and replace the key took little time, and the coast was left clear for Cornelis to carry off his plunder.

Not quite clear, however. Hasnip and another detective in plain clothes watched all night from the very next machine, in which eye-holes had been bored and in which they spent the night. Their instructions were to observe who removed the money, to follow him at a distance, but without creating suspicion, to mark him down and never leave him till it was safe, having regard to Mr. Sarsfield's scruples, to run him in.

CHAPTER XIV.

FROM BYTHESEA TO ANTWERP.

Very early next morning Smart and I walked over to get Hasnip's report. At a concerted signal the detectives came out to report the result of their night's work.

"Well?" we all asked in a breath.

"Nothing. He never came," replied Hasnip, in a surly voice. "It was all a plant; we went the wrong way to work."

"You kept good watch?" I asked, incredulously.

"Naturally. We were on duty."

Hasnip looked aggrieved.

"A fine watch!" cried Smart, who had been examining the machine. "See, this door is unlocked."

"And the money gone?"

"Gone."

"He came, sure enough," said Mr. Smart. "I say, Hasnip, what were you about?" he went on, severely; "you'll have to be pulled up for this—both of you."

"It will have to be done all over again," I said rather sharply to Smart.

"To think that Hasnip, old Hasnip, should have served us such a trick. It is annoying," replied the Chief Constable, apologetically. "But, never fear, we shall get him yet."

"What do you imagine he'll be up to?" went on the Chief Constable, very coolly and quietly.

"Leave the country, probably, with his swag."

"Just my idea. But where would he go?"

"To his own part of the world."

"Right again. Well, we'll have all the issues watched. The London police will see to that. I'll wire at once. In the meantime can you find out the country he hailed from?"

"I think the head waiter said he was a Belgian, a Fleming. But we can easily ask."

"I'll leave that to you, only come round to the office as soon as you know anything more."

The head waiter's answer was prompt and explicit.

Cornelis Jansen. He remembered the fellow well—a very impudent man. Country? Ah, yes. From Belgium—from the Flemish provinces of Belgium—Antwerp, Anvers, that was his native place.

"We'll have all the Channel and Continental boats watched, as I told you, Mr. Leslie. He'll go abroad now, you'll see, meaning to enjoy himself till he runs short of cash, then he'll milk Mr. Sarsfield again."

"It's a thousand pities we allowed him to go so far."

"Have a little patience, Mr. Leslie; it'll all come right, and you won't find a day or two here unpleasant, I expect."

I am constrained to admit that he was right in this sly surmise. I found myself firmly established in the good graces of the Sarsfields. Captain Fawcett even confessed, with a muttered apology, that he had done me an injustice, but the admission went sorely against the grain, I could see.

He still hated me most cordially, but on grounds that were pardonable, after all. Miss Bertram, I began to flatter myself, decidedly preferred my society to his, and I became, in consequence, more devoted than ever.

It was evident that so long as Cornelis was at large, and in a position to break his promise or to renew his threats, Mr. Sarsfield would know no peace of mind. The truest kindness, in spite of his fears, would be to call his tormentor to strict account for his crimes.

Happily Cornelis did not elude us long. We heard of him on the third day. He, or a man answering to his description, had crossed by the Harwich steamer to Antwerp.

"What did I tell you?" cried Smart, triumphantly. "He has gone straight home."

"Where we had better follow him immediately."

"No; we'll give him a day or two, or rather the Antwerp police, just to get upon the scent, and then we'll join to run him in together. I'll send over instructions to-night."

This seemed a judicious plan, and I agreed to it readily. We were rewarded, for in a few days came news in the shape of a telegram from the chief of the Antwerp police.

"Have your man in view," it said. "Lose no time. Identification indispensable."

We were in Antwerp next morning, Smart and I—Hasnip, since his fiasco at the bathing machine, had been dr

the end of which the Chief of the Police said to me: "Come quick. He is still in bed——" and ran upstairs, three flights, followed by a party of policemen, with Smart and myself.

At the top was a single door, fast locked, and to a peremptory summons to open, no answer came. At a signal from the chief the obstacle was beaten down.

We rushed in; the room was empty, but the dormer window leading to the roof was flung open, and it was clear our quarry had escaped that way.

The Chief looked down into the street and shouted a few words, evidently of warning. The answering shouts plainly told he was understood.

The hubbub increased; cries and counter cries, exclamations of encouragement, sympathy, horror, disgust, fierce eagerness in the chase—there was no mistaking their varied sounds.

From the roof in front of the dormer window I watched the fugitive's progress. He was full in sight, rapidly clambering along as best he could. I saw him run down the leads, then make a spring on to the gable-end stairs, up which he climbed daringly. Thus he gained the ridge of a steeper roof, and along this he walked carefully, carrying his life in his hand.

At the end he encountered a fresh and unexpected obstacle—a tall chimney-stack that forbade all further advances. Here he paused, irresolute, sorely puzzled. He could not go forward, and to go back would be to fall into the arms of the police. From down below other policemen threatened to shoot him where he was unless he came down.

"Is that your man?" asked the Chief of me, hurriedly. "Can you see him? Are you quite sure?"

I had not the slightest doubt it was Cornelis Janssen, and I said so positively.

"Will you come down? It is your last chance. One—two—three!" the Chief shouted to him slowly, revolver in hand.

Still the miscreant would not surrender himself. With a new and more frantic effort he tried to climb round the chimney-stack, but his foot slipped, he lost hold, and next instant he had fallen down—there was no telling how far—down in the court-yard on the other side.

They took him up for dead, but, though fearfully mangled, he still breathed. He lingered in the hospital, to which he was removed on a stretcher, and I had several interviews with him before he died.

With the fear of death upon him he confessed to his crime, justifying fully the conclusions at which I had arrived. He had overheard the quarrel between Sarsfield and Yriarte, and knew sufficient Spanish to understand it. Then he resolved to make the Spaniard's secret his at any price, and utilize for his own advantage the power of extortion thus obtained.

The murder had been a simple affair. He had hidden himself in No. 99 before Yriarte retired for the night, but on the Spaniard's appearance, after the victim had emptied his pockets on the dressing-table, he, Cornelis, had seized the knife, crept behind his victim and finished him at one stroke. He had taken his own knife with him, but had been suddenly inspired to use Yriarte's as less compromising, throwing it from him on leaving No. 99 by the window of the fire-escape. After the deed he had spent an hour searching the portmanteau, but with little result. All he found were a few memoranda and the Cadiz address of Yriarte's mother. These he utilized in the manner the reader knows, and thus obtained the [illegible] he needed for the effectual intimidation of Mr. Sarsfield.

The whole of these papers, with many articles of a compromising character, were found in Cornelis' bed-room. I handed them all over to Mr. Sarsfield without examining them. The value he set on them was my justification for this.

When, a few months later, I made Miss Bertram my wife, I restored to her the hairpin on which I had laid hands, explaining why I had secured it. At the same time I cleared up the few points that had remained obscure in this extraordinary case.

Mrs. Sarsfield knew from the first of the hold Yriarte had over her husband. It was to implore the man to hold his tongue that she had ventured to No. 99.

When she discovered the murder she almost believed in her husband's guilt. She had confided her fears to Fawcett at the end of the interview of which I heard the commencement, who had begun by suspecting her. His action at first had been to shield Mrs. Sarsfield and then Mr. Sarsfield.

As for my dear wife, her whole idea was to screen her sister, even at the sacrifice of herself. Deep, unhesitating devotion to those whom she loves is an abiding principle with her, as I have found, after many years of the closest intimacy with this noble, unselfish nature.

Chinese Marriage Safeguards.

All Chinese ceremonies in social and religious life are pervaded by strange superstitions. Although we do not hear of old shoes being thrown after young married couples, many equally curious forms are gone through with to insure them good luck. A Chinese girl who is partaking of the last meal she is to eat in her father's house previous to her marriage, sits at the table with her parents and brothers; but she must eat no more than half the bowl of rice set before her, else her departure will be followed by continual scarcity in the domicile she is leaving. If a bride breaks the heel of her shoe going from her father's to her husband's house, it is ominous of unhappiness in her new relations. Afraid to Go to His Own Room.

David Henderson, Manager of the Chicago Opera House, aided and abetted by his Treasurer, Mr. Prior, concluded to make Mr. Harry Ballard a present. Having spent a day in knocking about the stores looking for something suitable, they wound up the search by purchasing an educated parrot. It was taken to Mr. Ballard's room while he was absent, and that same night after his work he retired immediately upon reaching his bed-room. As sleep wooed him he heard a voice:

"This is a fine time of night for you to be coming home."

Mr. Ballard is not accustomed to hear such talk. There is no occasion for it. The first thought that occurred to him was that he might have entered the wrong room. He soon satisfied himself that he had not, and again pillowed his head for sleep, when:

"What a head you'll have on you to-morrow!" broke in upon his ears. This was uncalled for. Mr. Ballard arose and looked in his mirror. He examined his ice-water cooler. Nothing there but water. He again went to bed.

"Next time you go out you'd better take me along," was muttered in his ears, and he got up again and did what few men ever do—looked under his bed and then in th

JOHN G. CARLISLE.

THE FORUM has won the highest place reached by any periodical; for it publishes articles by more authoritative writers and by more workers along instructive lines of activity than any other publication. It contains eleven studies of great subjects every month. It is impartial, giving hearings alike to each side. It is financially independent, and it belongs to no sect or party or "interest." It is never sensational, but it aims always to be instructive.

The Forum is of great value to that part of my college work which deals with practical politics and current questions. Two sets are hardly enough for daily use by students.—Prof. ALFRED BUSHNELL HART, of Harvard.

I consider The Forum as furnishing the most intelligent and sympathetic audience that a thoughtful writer can find to address in any land.—Prof. ALEXANDER WINCHELL, of the University of Michigan.

The Forum continues to hold its place as the foremost of our magazines, for the variety, the value, and the weight of its contributions.—THE NEW YORK TIMES.

There has come forward no problem of grave importance since The Forum was established that has not been discussed in its pages by masters of the subject. Announcements of forthcoming articles can seldom be made long in advance, for The Forum's discussions are always of problems of present concern. Every such problem that the year 1890 will bring forward will be discussed, whether in politics, or religion, or social science, or practical affairs. The January number will contain a reply by ex-Speaker J. G. Carlisle to Senator Cullom's recent article on "How the Tariff Affects the Farmer."

society every church should organize. The day is past when the pastor is expected to do all that is to be done connected with religion, or doing good, and the people have no part in it, but to attend the appointed services, and listen. There is work for all, and it is a hopeful indication, when churches are awakening to this fact.

The world-wide reputation of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the natural result of its surpassing value as a blood medicine. Nothing, in the whole pharmacopœia, effects more astonishing results, in scrofula, rheumatism, general debility, and all forms of blood disease, than this remedy.

We are informed by Wm. Smith who resides beyond the Junction, that Frank Hough, has been having a serious time, in spite of the reports that he was better. Friday the attending physician had to tap him, and removed a large quantity of pus from his chest. Still we hope he will eventually pull through.

Every democrat in the county should read our copy of the call under a primary election system, as in force in Ohio. It was suggested to us by W. H. McGiffin, an intelligent democrat of Fairfield, who sent the paper to enable us to get the exact form. Having seen how well the plan works, he thinks it should be adopted here, if not this year, at least in time for 1892.

Many have wondered why, in this enlightened century, when every science has advanced to almost perfection, some one actuated by a desire to promote the health and welfare of his fellow-being, has not given to the world a medicine which would prove efficacious in the cure of diseases. To such we would say, that at least a remedy has been found in Johnston's Compound Sarsaparilla. It only requires a trial, to prove its unlimited extent.

MERIT WINS. We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits.
Robbins & McCord, Druggists. 1

Several of the skilled workmen employed at the Church Furniture factory, were called to Ft. Wayne last week, to finish the Second Presbyterian church there. The work done by this institution is becoming very popular, from the fact, that their facilities are complete, both in machinery and mechanical skill, to turn out first-class goods in their line. We are plesed to know that our sister towns have learned that Auburn is a good place to get manufacturing done.

Laporte county, reports a saving of $861.80 for the first three months under the new school book law. And so it will be found everywhere under the new law, if school officers enforce it. But if they fail to enforce it, and do so only partially and then in a few weeks undo what they have done, the expense will be increased, even above that under the old law. What is needed, is good, conscientious officers, and a saving of several hundred thousands will be made in the state. And not only will there be this saving in cash, but we will have more uniformity in school work, and in many regards a better set of books. Better books at half the cost, ought to make the new law popular.

One of our grocerymen informs us that Henry Martin, of this place, was recently at Defiance, Ohio, looking up a location to start a Church Furniture factory. We always thought Martin was full of factory enterprise, but had no idea he would tackle anything heavier than horse raddish.

Clara Louise Kellogg will be at Butler Feb. 22, at Hirschler's Opera House. To secure this celebrated singer the managers have been obliged to give a guarantee of $350, and they expect to have enough people come to make it. The tickets will be $1 and arrangements will be made to have people come from all the surrounding towns. This will give many an opportunity to hear her, to whom the chance will never come again. We believe several will go over from Auburn.

Smith & Madden are not only proud of their new building, but they have a right to be proud of their work. And not only of the quality of their work but the amount of it. Their large room is about as nearly chock full, as the little old room used to be, and much of the work is very elaborate and artistic. From the smallest and daintiest to the largest and most imposing, one can see headstones and monuments and similar mementoes to departed friends, in every style and shape. It is worth a trip of several miles to see, and we advise our friends to take a look at their display. The proprietors are gentlemanly and pleasant. Truly we are glad to see them prospering.

There is a lot of young men and boys in Auburn, who, to all appearance, have formed a very erroneous idea as to gentlemanly principle and good manners, by congregating at the several churches in time of service and engaging in pastimes which are within themselves, a breach of good breeding in dark places, let alone within the sacred walls of the sanctuary. And are a direct interruption to the meetings. Now boys, take warning, and change this manner of proceeding, or you may have reason to regret your indiscretion. Give christian people a chance to respect you, by your first respecting yourselves, in coming together at the church and giving your attention to the service, and not to the frivolous conceptions of a sinful heart

Ligonier Banner: Last Friday Will B. Inks, the eldest son of C. V. Inks, left for Chicago, where he was signed as a member of the Chicago ball club by Capt. Anson. This was a great surprise to Will's large circle of friends here, as no one knew that he had any idea of going into the league as a player. He is to be congratulated upon the good situation he has secured, and we feel that he will demonstrate that he is as good an "all around" ball player as has been picked up among amateurs for many a day. He accompanied the Chicago club to St. Augustine, Florida, Monday, and will go into practice at once. I. O. Buchtel who, is now in Chicago, brought about the contract, having recommended Inks as a first-class player. With one son in the famous Chicago team and another in the Indianapolis club, Mr. Inks will take considerable interest in base ball.

South Bend Times: Bills have been introduced into congress to prevent the proposed redistricting of Ohio—"Democratic gerrymander," as the republicans call it. The bill provides that representatives to the next congress shall be chosen by all the states from the district as they now stand. This is a knavish partisan proposal. Why should not Ohio be fairly redistricted? At present the Republicans have sixteen representatives from that state while the Democrats are given but five. And yet the vote of the state is usually close and just now the Democrats have a small majority, as shown by the election of a Democratic governor and legislature. On this basis the Democrats are entitled to eleven members and the Republicans to ten. The pretense for this extraordinary intervention of federal authority is that no redistricting should be done until after the census has been taken. The real motive is to guard against the election of a Democratic house next November.

G. W. Stahl returned last week from a visit to Com. Urie and family at Burr Oak. They had all been having "la grip," but are now reported better.

How Uncle Sam makes his paper-money will be described and explained by Franklin P. Smith in an illustrated supplement on "The Bureau of Engraving and Printing" which will appear in the number of Harper's Weekly to be published February 12th.

Benjamin Constant's picture, "A Funeral in Morocco," has been reproduced in a double-page engraving for the number of Harper's Bazar to be published February 21st. Mary May Humphreys will contribute to the same number an article on "Plaster Casts, and How to use Them."

Charlie Madden and Miss Nettie Askew were married Saturday evening. Both are industrious and self sustaining and we have no doubt will make life a success. At least we hope so. The bride has for some time been the mainstay in the recorder's office, and we suppose there will be a vacancy for some one.

J. R. Lanning was in town a few days last week. He says business has been rather dull at Moores this winter, but they have had their share of the trade. He is also, still as well grounded in the faith as ever, for he not only believes in democratic principles, but feels sure the democracy is bound to triumph and that, too, in the near future.

William Hamilton Gibson's illustrated articles on natural history, which are appearing every week in Harper's Young People, treat subjects which are as nearly appropriate to the time of year as the unusual meteorological conditions this winter will permit. His article for the number to be published February 11th will tell of "Grouse on Snow-shoes."

The Steuben Republican evidently is not careful as to its news items, or it would inquire before it made wild statements. In its last issue it reports the amount of the new school books sold all over the county so far, as $182.35, and says "this is larger than in any of the neighboring counties except Noble." But DeKalb county sold in the same time $2. 398.85. How does that strike our neighbors?

John Krueger has bought the lot south of him, of John McMillan, together with the brick the latter had put on the ground. Mr. K. will begin at once, the erection of a first-class business room, the ground having already been broken. It will be two stories high and 80 feet long, and will be the first business put up as far south as that in Auburn. Mr. Krueger is one of our enterprising citizens and will put up a building that will be a credit to the town. That is the sort of men to build up a town and its interests.

We were shown some beautiful specimens of decorative art work this week, the work of Mr. R. A. York, now a resident of our city. They are made by a new device, which he is getting patented. They are of zepher and plush work, and of new and unique workmanship, which is a secret with Mr. York. It can be applied to a great variety of decoration for our homes, as one may see by inspecting his specimens. They show birds of various colors of plumage, flowers, leaves, ornamental borders, rugs and various fancy work. Mr. York will teach this art to our ladies, and will no doubt create quite an interest in it.

Meetings at the Baptist church continue, and are very successful. Rev. T. C. Smith, the pastor, seems to be an earnest and energetic worker. We hope our people will appreciate and sustain him.

Word comes to Dr. Ford from Ontario, Cal, that D. S. Cochran's family have the "grip." No place escapes. Lottie also sent Doc. some oranges, one a very fine one from a tree she claims as her own, and which is only two years old.

Milo Husselman has been for some time with the Church Furniture Co. where he does the typewriting for that extensive establishment. He is a steady and intelligent young man, and will be a valuable assistant in their large business correspondence.

Joe Williamson has gone into the coal oil trade, and will deliver oil in the city, any quantity at a time as cheap as can be bought elsewhere. This industry will be very convenient for our citizens as it will save them the trouble of carrying the greasy coal oil cans around on the streets, often with meetin' clothes on.

We stated last week that there were forty who guessed the weight of the horse, buggy and harness, of Berdan & Co., of Toledo, Ohio. It was decided to put 40 tickets into a box with the names of the forty guessers upon them, and the last one drawn out to win the prize. This was done Feb. 8, and the lucky man was Harry Fayram, of Deshler, Ohio.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give a literary and musical entertainment at the Opera House on the evening of March 4, at which they will present the popular "Queen of Fame." They are giving this a good deal of attention and hard labor, and we hope our people will bear it in mind, and give them a full attendance.

Uncle George Denison, who is interested in the ice business, still insists we shall have cold weather enough to get a little ice, at least. He says he has kept a weather record many years, and we have always had at least a partial crop of ice. Mr. D. is an unusually clear-headed and intelligent man, and we hope he may be right.

It is a shame and a disgrace to a civilized comunity, to allow boys to congregate in our churches and disturb the meetings. The names of three or four boys who acted in a shameful manner at one of our churches Sunday night were handed in, but we will be lenient this time and not publish them. Boys take warning, and do not mimic aloud in church, your best friends while they are offering up supplications to God, and invoking His richest blessings in your behalf.

S. J. Brandon is now on the road in the interest of the road scraper made by his company, the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works. He is thoroughly familiar with this valuable machine, as well as with the duties of the trustees who are the parties who buy them for use in their townships. Good judges say this machine has never been equaled as all the defects of the older patents have been avoided, and many valuable points added. We have no doubt it will have a great sale.

As Michael Kline was going to his work at Sam Buss' shop last Saturday morning, he was attacked by a canine owned by Henry Martin. The cur came out upon the walk from the house, and bit Mr. K. so severely that he found it necessary to bandage his limb just below the knee, and the wound causes him to walk lame and gives him considerable pain. Now, as this dog is of no earthly use to Mr. Martin, it would be doing a kindly act to kill the brute and save his friends pain and himself $2.00 dog tax.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will be entertained by Mrs. Barns, Friday afternoon from 2 to 5. All cordially invited.

The lot for the Kiblinger building has been cleaned up, and got in shape to lay the foundation. It don't take Kiblinger long to get any enterprise under way.

W. J. Wallace has moved his goods, tools and stock into his new business room on West Seventh street, and has everything in fine shape. He is getting ready for the spring work of tin roofing, spouting, etc.

In a late issue of the Cuthbert' Ga Liberal we read, that one of the farmers there has a field of oats just heading out, but they admit this has never happened as early before. They, too, have a mild winter.

The Monte Cristo Company that was here last week was an excellent one, and they gave new and sparkling plays. The first evening, they rendered Monte Cristo, one of the best specimens of the legitimate drama. Only a strong company can succeed with this, and they were abundantly successful. The acting was splendid, and the costumes superb. The other evenings, the style of play given was as complete. Mr. McCallum, the manager, can have the satisfaction of knowing that he has one of the very best companies on the road. We would be pleased to see them again.

We made a note last week of the fact that Congressman McClellan had been chosen to represent Indiana on the national congressional campaign committee which is in itself quite a high compliment. Now we see by the daily papers, that he has been selected as one of the executive committee of this body. As organized now, the Chairman is Hon. Roswell P. Flower, of the Twelfth New York district and the other members of the executive or finance committee, are McCreary, of Kentucky; Blanchford, of Louisiana; Hayes, of Iowa; Fowler, of New Jersey; Whiting, of Mich; Marsh, of Pa.; Andrews, of Mass.; and Loder, of Ohio. Our district is to be congratulated on this promotion, as no one could attain this position unless he had impressed his fellow members with a belief in his ability.

Hymeneal.

(Buchanan, Mich. Enterprise.)

At the residence of Mr. T. C. Elson, on the corner of Chicago and Detroit streets, occurred a very pleasant wedding on Thursday evening, Feb. 13, 1890. A number of invited guests were present to witness the marriage of their daughter, Lola, to Mr. R. S. Johnson, of Auburn, Ind., the native home of Mr. Elson's family. The bride was modestly and beautifully dressed, while the groom donned a neat suit of black. Mr. Johnson appears to be gentleman of refinement and culture; and as much as we all regret the departure of Miss Elson, we rejoice that she will be taken to a splendid home already prepared and furnished for her. Auburn being her native place, she goes among those who know her well.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. F. Bartmess, and after an elegant supper which had been prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Elson, the guests departed, leaving their best wishes for the future happiness of the newly wedded pair.

Among those present from abroad were noticed the groom's mother from Auburn, and his sister, Mrs. Morrison, of Chicago. The happy couple left Friday for their future home in Auburn.

North End Grocery.

The grocery at the north end of Main street, John Otto's, has been purchased by Ira Brandon, who will at once put in a new and fresh stock of all kinds of groceries and family supplies, and make it in every way a first-class grocery. He will also pay the highest market price for all farm produce. Give him a call. We hope to see Mr. Brandon build up a good trade, for we believe he will do a fair, square business.

Speer's Wine for Parties.

Physicians employ Speer's Port Grape Wine in their practice in all cases where a pure wine is called for, and do all in their power to foster and encourage its production. Also the same with Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice; both are coming into great favor among the most wealthy in New York City, Philadelphia and Washington as evening wine.

THE number of cloisters and monks in Spain has increased with astonishing rapidity of late years. Spain now has 29,220 monks and 25,000 nuns in 1,330 cloisters and 179 orders. In Barcelona alone there are 163 cloisters for women. In the last fourteen years the number of monks in Spain has been sextupled and the number of nuns doubled.

"WHEN I went to California in 1849," says Millionaire Huntington, "I was accompanied by a party of young fellows from my native State, Connecticut, and when we reached Sacramento the first thing they did was to go to the hotel and spend $4 apiece for dinner. My dinner cost me less than a sixteenth of that sum. It was always my rule to live within my income. Any young man who does that will get along."

EVERYBODY smokes in Japan. The pipes hold a little wad of fine-cut tobacco as big as a pea. It is fired, and the smoker takes one long whiff, blowing the smoke in a cloud from his mouth and nose. The ladies have pipes with longer stems than the men, and if one of them wishes to show a gentleman a special mark of favor she lights her pipe, takes half a whiff, hands it to him and lets him finish out the whiff.

THE Catholic population in this country is estimated at 8,301,367, and the number of priests is placed at 8,463—2,126 regulars and 6,337 seculars. They attend 7,420 churches, 2,718 stations and 1,539 chapels. There are 202 orphan asylums, caring for, it is estimated, 22,761 orphans. There are 30 theological seminaries, with 1,631 students, 125 colleges and 632 academies, and 3,209 parochial schools, with 654,838 pupils.

A QUEER ordinance was passed by the McConnellsville (Ohio) Council recently. The substance of the ordinance was to provide for building a high fence around a certain saloon in town known as the "Blue Goose," which appellation is suggested by the peculiarly bright color of its front. The fence will be placed there so as to prohibit entrance from any other than the front door, which faces the public square, the most prominent portion of the village.

WITHIN the past eighteen months over $200,000,000 of English capital has found investment in the United States. Breweries, flour mills, patent medicine factories, rolling mills, have found favor in the eyes of the British financier, and some of the best-paying property has come into their possession. It is safe to say that more than $200,000,000 will find its way into our country during 1890, and that the influx of foreign gold will increase year by year.

A DISPATCH from Berlin states that in the stomach of a shark, which was recently dissected in that city, were found a dolphin weighing 120 pounds, forty-three fish, a decomposed seal, a human arm, and four human legs. With what earnestness that shark must have been accustomed to put up the petition: May good digestion wait upon appetite. Reading between the lines of the dispatch, we seem to gather that it was dyspepsia that carried him off.

AN eminent statistician, who is familiar with all the 'ologies, has reckoned it up, and finds that there are now one hundred and fifty-nine thousand millions of people who are suffering the torments of the damned, as against eighteen thousand millions who have been saved. This, of course, is based on the theory that the accepted schemes of salvation and damnation since the world began have all been vindicated. Otherwise there will have to be a recount.

A HARTFORD, Van Buren County, Mich., man, who went West some years ago, got into trouble and the California penitentiary at the same time, and to save his family the disgrace caused somebody to write to Michigan that he had been shot and scalped by Indians. This would have made it all right if he had stayed dead, but a few days ago, while his widow was getting her trousseau ready to marry a decent man, the villain spoiled everything by getting out of prison and writing home to ask for his family.

A FEW days ago as a class at the Cincinnati College of Medicine was about to dissect the body of a man who had died of drink a young man rushed into the room and threw himself on the subject, crying: "My father, my poor father!" This recalls the fact that some years ago President Harrison found in the Ohio Medical College the body of his father, John Scott Harrison, of North Bend, Ind. These horrible incidents emphasize the fact that there is a vast deal of unpleasant romance in actual life.

AITCH is the name of a postoffice in Hunntington County, Pennsylvania. The origin of its name is somewhat curious. However, it arises from civilized sources. There were five prosperous farmers in that portion of the country where the postoffice is now, and their names were Anderson, Isenburg, Taylor, Crum, and Henderson. Each of them wished the office to be named after himself. But they could not come to an agreement, and finally, as a compromise, the first letter from each name was taken and placed together, and thereby originated—Aitch.

AN elderly lady, residing in Kenosha, Wis., suddenly dropped dead from some heart trouble. She was supposed to be very poor, having worked hard all her life. The undertaker was summoned to the residence to prepare the body for burial, and while removing the clothing it was noticed that the bustle was rather heavy; in fact, it was so weighty as to attract attention. It was ripped open, and the spectators were thunderstruck to find secreted therein over $1,800 in bank notes. The old lady, instead of putting on style and spending her money, had hoarded every cent and saved the above amount, which she preferred to carry around with her rather than intrust it to the banks.

THE late Judge Kelley never found fault with the sobriquet of "Pig Iron," which was popularly attached to his surname. On the contrary, he was rather proud of it, just as the late Sunset Cox was proud of his, and as Great Objector Holman is of his. His unwavering championship of the duty on pig iron was what earned for him the title, of course, and anything that identified his name with the protection of Pennsylvania's iron industries was exceedingly gratifying to him. It was applied to him in sarcasm by those who did not share his economic views, but he used to say that it was a kind of sarcasm that was worth a good many hundreds of votes to him in his district, and there isn't any reason to doubt that it was.

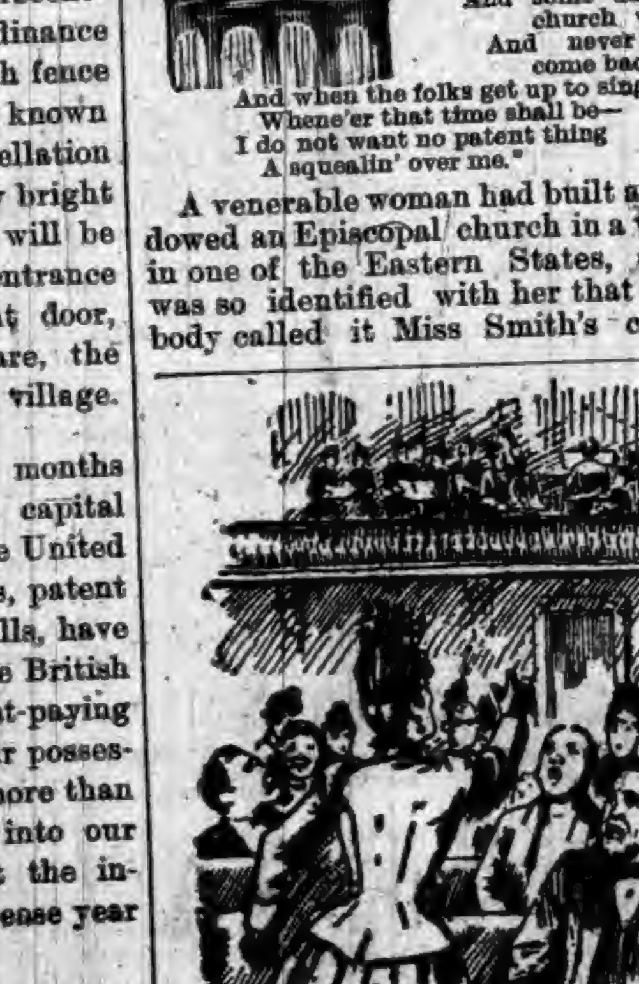
"A SISTER GOOD AND TRUE."

She Wanted No Patent Church Music.

ONE of Will Carleton's ballads embodies the lament of "a sister good and true" over the introduction of an organ into the old meeting-house:

"Death will stop my voice, I know,
For he is on my track;
And some day I to church will go,
And never more come back;
And when the folks get up to sing—
Whene'er that time shall be—
I do not want no patent thing
A squealin' over me."

A venerable woman had built and endowed an Episcopal church in a village in one of the Eastern States, and it was so identified with her that everybody called it Miss Smith's church.



I WON'T HAVE NO FIDDLE IN MY CHURCH!

There had been great trouble in keeping the singers up to the pitch, and, as the village shoemaker performed on the violoncello, permission was obtained from the pastor to introduce this instrument into the gallery to sustain the voices. On the first Sunday that it appeared, no sooner had the unlucky Crispin drawn his bow across the strings to give the singers the pitch for the Venite than Miss Smith, in the front pew below, turned swiftly around, the bows on her bonnet trembling with the agitation which shook her pious frame, and cried out, in loud tones: "Stop! stop! take that thing out! I won't have no fiddle in my church!"

WAS IT A CONSPIRACY?

HOT WORDS OF SENATOR M'PHERSON, OF NEW JERSEY.

He Tells Dirty Joe Foraker that the Hasty Publication of the Ballot-Box Forgery, Without Inquiry, Makes It Look Like a Dark Plot.

[Washington special.]

"It was a conspiracy!" shouted Senator McPherson to-day in denouncing the forgery of his name by ex-Gov. Foraker's friend Wood. "There was ample opportunity to ascertain the falsity of the signature, but haste was made to give this document to the world without any effort to ascertain the genuineness of the signature, and it must be regarded as a conspiracy." Gov. Foraker inquired if it would not depend on the circumstances under which the paper had been procured and the apparent proof to support its character. Senator McPherson replied that as the paper, if genuine, would degrade and ruin public men, and properly so, they should have been consulted when it was possible to do so by traveling four or five miles. When he heard that his name was attached to the ballot-box contract he had intended to have all parties connected with the matter arrested within forty-eight hours.

"It's not too late yet, Senator," said Gov. Foraker, with aggravating coolness; "the courts are still open."

"I don't know about that," retorted the Senator. "Halsted got down in the dirt and rolled over in his humiliation, and attempted to remedy the wrong, which changed the situation somewhat."

While everybody excepting Foraker and one or two of his faithful friends is laughing at the terrible rumpus kicked up by this phenomenal falsifier and inventor, Wood, bold and genial Ben Butterworth says it is no laughing matter. "Suppose," says Butterworth, "my name had been the only one on the forged document. Then suppose the steamer on which I was sailing from Europe had been wrecked and I had been drowned. Would my name have been cleared from the infamy which Wood and his co-conspirators attempted to put upon it? Would the members of my family have been able to establish my innocence? It is a pretty serious matter when a cunning liar and forger can concoct a document and a story like that and go about inducing Governors of States to give it credence and publicity, and the sanction of their authority."

CARLISLE NOT A CAT'S-PAW.

He Informs Republican Congressmen that They Must Correct Their Own Errors.

[Washington special.]

Mr. Carlisle's minority report on the new code of rules is not so voluminous as he expected to make it. The action of the Republican caucus on the rule governing legislation on appropriation bills and on some of the other rules relieved Mr. Carlisle of much of the work of preparing the report. He does not go into details. A large number of Republican members of the House regret their action in adopting a rule giving the Committee on Invalid Pensions the privilege to report and call up pension bills at any time. The rule was adopted without mature deliberation and before its possible evil effects had been pointed out. There has been for several years a strong feeling among a portion of the Republican leaders against wild and inconsiderate pension legislation, but they have been compelled to stifle their opinions for the supposed good of the party. The men now think that a mistake has been made in adopting a standing rule that will throw open the doors at all times to any scheme of pension giving that may be brought up by soldier statesmen, and they would like to revoke their action in adopting the rule. One of the most prominent Republican members of the House, who is also a member of the Committee on Rules, approached Mr. Carlisle on this subject, told him how unpopular the new rule had already grown, and intimated that if the Democrats would like to have it stricken from the code they could be accommodated by having one of their number make the necessary motion. Mr. Carlisle was not to be led into such an agreement as this, but suggested that, as the new rules had been adopted in the Republican caucus, it would be better for the motion to strike out the rule from the new code to come from the Republican side of the House. The members opposed to the new rule are now looking about to find one of their number to make the motion.

Danger of Indirect Taxation.

The danger which lurks in a policy of indirect taxation of the consumer by imposing duties on what he eats, drinks or wears, is that its evils are so indirect and insidious that they are often not easy of detection; and the average citizen, while groaning under the misery of hard times and ill-rewarded industry, is unable to detect the cause. The hand that strikes him down is hidden in the velvet glove of a grossly inflated tariff. Such appears to be the situation in America to-day. An average tariff of 8 or 10 per cent., which was deemed sufficient for the protection of the infant industries struggling into existence in the dawn of the century, has insidiously crept up under the revenue necessities which were the outgrowth of the civil war, stimulated and fostered by the rapacity of sundry interested monopolies, to an average rate of 40 or 45 per cent. The competition which is the only protection against the oppression of monopolies is shut out; the rate which would defend our industries against cheap foreign labor and secure to the producer a fair profit, has, in many instances, been long passed. Agriculture is prostrate, labor in a constant state of unrest. Railroads, flour manufactories, the greed of large cities—in short, the nearest and most easily discernible of the possible causes—is made the recipient of a blind public wrath, while the long, wiry fingers of monopoly silently strangle its victims.—Gordon E. Cole, in Kate Field's Washington.

Learned It in Ten Years.

There is a man in Philadelphia whose ideas on the tariff have been clarified by the repeal some years ago of the duties on quinine. His name is Jones. He is a member of the firm of Powers & Weightman. At a meeting of the Drug Exchange, of Philadelahia, on Tuesday, he said:

"There is no argument whatever that you can bring to bear on quinine that does not apply to other commodities. I tell you I am either a protectionist or a free-trader. It is going to be a duty on quinine and on everything else, or we are going to have the British system, if I can do anything toward it, that's sure."

Hurrah for Jones! He has been a long time learning this lesson—ten years, in fact—but he has learned it perfectly. The theory of protection is that, even if you don't get any advantage from it yourself directly, yet you get a great deal indirectly. The money that the protected classes get is kept in the country, and that raises your wages and gives you a home market. Why should not Jones profit by it in this way just like the rest of us? He has been studying ever since 1879, and now he pronounces it a humbug, and says that unless there is a tax on quinine he is going for free trade! And this observation of his, this result of ten years' study of political economy in a drug house, was received (the report says) with applause by the others present, who had not had Jones' advantages in the way of instruction. What is the world coming to?—New York Evening Post.

A FELLOW who swallowed a drachm
Of poison grew cold as a clachm;
And when somebody said,
"I don't believe he is daid,"
The corpse quickly shouted, "I achm!"

THE TRADE REVIEW.

A SUMMARY OF THE BUSINESS OF THE PAST WEEK.

The Outlook Reported Favorable, Especially at Western Points—A Gratifying Increase in Railway Earnings, with a Notable Decrease in Business Reverses.

New York dispatch: Bradstreet's "State of Trade" says: Special telegrams report a moderate improvement in the state of general trade at several points, notably at San Francisco, Kansas City, Omaha, Cincinnati, Chicago, Boston, and Philadelphia. This is noticeable in the movement of groceries, dry goods, drugs, boots and shoes and building materials, and in an improved inquiry in Eastern iron circles. Hog products at the East are quiet and prices barely steady.

The decline in the demand for silver from India resulted in a decrease of 3 cents per ounce in the bullion price of that metal during the week.

The January gross earnings of 140 railroad companies reported aggregate $32,190,482, with a total mileage of 81,003, against $28,193,516 and a mileage of 78,975 in January last year, a gain in earnings of nearly 13.7 per cent. and in mileage of 2.5 per cent.

Available stocks of wheat east of the Rocky mountains Feb. 8 as wired aggregated 47,513,000 bushels, a decrease of 3,177,000 bushels for the week. Indian corn stocks were about 1,000,000 bushels heavier than on Feb. 1. Exports of wheat (and flour as wheat), both coasts, this week as reported, equal 1,517,775 bushels, against 2,214,917 bushels last week and 1,270,783 bushels in the like week of 1889. The total quantity of Bessemer steel rails made in the United States by mills producing their own ingots in 1889 is officially reported at 1,644,234 net tons, 102,146 tons in excess of 1888.

Business failures reported are decreasing each week, amounting to 213 in the United States for the week, against 259 the previous week, and 311 the corresponding week last year. The total number of failures in the United States since Jan. 1 is 2,100, as against 2,182 in 1889.

THE KAISER ON LABOR'S NEEDS

Urging the Council of State to Protect Workingmen's Interests.

Berlin cable: The Emperor, in his opening address at the Council of State, said the council was to consider measures to submit to the legislative bodies, with whom must rest the final decision as to their wisdom. Referring to women, the Emperor said:

"It is especially necessary to consider their position in the households of workingmen, so important for domestic life, from the point of morality and thrift. The council should endeavor to frame a scheme for the protection of workingmen from the arbitrary systems and operations of employers by which gross advantage is taken of their needs and their inability to help themselves by any other means than the desperate remedy of strikes. It should also attempt to protect women and children against protracted hours of labor. I do not lose sight of the fact that all we desire cannot be attained by State measures alone. In these labors of love the church and the school have also a wide field for fruitful action in helping to support and aid what the laws shall ordain.

SHORT CROP.

Icemen Alarmed Over the Warm Weather at Lake Winnebago.

Oshkosh (Wis.) dispatch: The warm weather of the last few days has put a damper on the operations of the icemen in this city. There are nearly a score of firms from Milwaukee, Chicago, and other cities operating on Lake Winnebago at this point, and during the last few weeks over 200 carpenters have been kept busy in the erection of ice-houses. The ice is now less than a foot thick and is decidedly "rotten." Some of the operators have handled the ice in sacks or swaths instead of with the ice tongs, to prevent its breaking up on the way into the houses. The John T. Mix company of Chicago has 40,000 tons of ice in one of their houses, and another building of the same size nearly full, but no other company has as much housed. Unless extremely cold weather sets in very soon the loss to the icemen will be very large.

MR. EDISON'S PHONOGRAPH.

It Addresses the Electric Convention at Kansas City.

Kansas City (Mo.) dispatch: At one session of the electric light convention it was announced that a phonograph from Mr. Edison would address the convention on the subject of his fine-wire system of distribution. The phonograph was produced and when put in operation uttered Mr. Edison's apology for having been unable to prepare the addresses. The voice from the phonograph was loud, and every word was distinctly heard throughout the hall.

The following officers were elected and the convention then took a final adjournment: Warden J. Perry, of Providence, R. I., president; Edward W. Maher of Albany, N. Y., first vice-president; C. L. Edgar of Boston, second vice-president; C. R. Huntley of Buffalo, N. Y., chairman of the executive committee; Allan V. Garrett of New York, secretary.

EXPIRED BY LIMITATION.

We are Without a Modus Vivendi With Canada at Present.

Washington dispatch: The modus vivendi between Canada and the United States has expired by limitation.

Inquiry at the State department failed to elict any information as to whether it would be continued, and the officials claimed to be in utter ignorance on the subject. At the White House Secretary Halford said he had no official information, but he believed the modus vivendi would be continued as soon as Secreatry Blaine and the British Minister had agreed upon certain details. At the Navy department an emphatic denial was given by Acting Secretary Ramsey of the story that United States men-of-war had been ordered to Canadian waters.

Mr. Tracy to Sell His House.

Washington dispatch: Secretary Tracy will sell his house on I street, opposite Farragut square, just as it stands, blackened without and ruined within. The beautiful furnishings were nearly all destroyed by the fire. A few pictures and other family mementos which escaped the ruin will be taken away, and then the house will be offered for sale. It cost the Secretary more than $70,000. Secretary Tracy does not recover as rapidly as was hoped. It is probable that within a few days the Secretary will start on a Southern trip, as his friends are anxious that he shall have a change of scene and surroundings.

Statehood for Wyoming and Idaho.

Washington dispatch: The House committee on Territories has ordered a favorable report on the bill admitting Wyoming to Statehood, and has practically agreed to report the Idaho bill very shortly. Both reports are expected to be made as soon as possible now that the new rules are adopted.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted On.

IN the Senate on the 11th inst., Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to prescribe in part the manner and election of members of Congress. It prevents any reapportionment of Congressional districts after the new census till such reapportionment is made by Congress. Among other bills introduced and referred were the following: By Mr. Edmunds, establishing a public school system in Utah; also providing for an inspection of meats for exportation; prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink; and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases. By Mr. Pierce, to create an Agricultural Commission to investigate the present depressed condition of the agricultural interests of the country. The Senate bills appropriating $100,000 each for public builings at Burlington, Iowa, and Beatrice, Neb., were passed, as was also the Senate bill for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands. It provides for legalizing claims filed during a vacancy in land offices. The Senate then went into executive session and adjourned. In the House, Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, called up for consideration the proposed code of rules, and he offered a resolution providing that general debate should close within twenty-four hours, and providing for a vote on the code before adjournment on the 12th. Rejected—58 to 149. The debate on the proposed changes in the rules was resumed, Messrs. Holman, McAdoo, and O'Ferrall opposing the proposed changes and Messrs. Grosvenor and Payson favoring them.

IN the Senate, on the 13th inst., Senator Sherman offered a joint resolution congratulating the people of Brazil on their just and peaceful resumption of the responsibilities of self-government, which was unanimously agreed to. Senator Chamberlain introduced a bill to regulate immigration in the United States. The Senate passed a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River into Indian Territory. On motion of Senator Dawes, the Senate then went into executive session and, after an executive session of over five hours, adjourned. The House resumed consideration of the rules, Messrs. Dockery, Morse of Massachusetts, Allen of Michigan, McCreary, and Buckalew of Pennsylvania, speaking. The discussion continued throughout the afternoon, Messrs. Kerr, of Iowa; Cutcheon, of Michigan; Anderson of Kansas; Henderson, of Illinois; and Buchanan, of New Jersey, supporting, and Hooker, Cummings, Chipman, and Caruth opposing the proposed changes. At 5 o'clock a recess was taken until 8. About thirty members were present when the House reassembled, two-thirds of whom were Democrats. The members who spoke in favor of the change in rules were Moore, Connell, Houk, and Taylor of Ohio. Among those opposing were Mansur, Rogers, and Springer. The debate was quiet and the House adjourned at 10:30. There were only about ten members present at adjournment.

IN the House on the 13th, after the approval of the journal (the Speaker counting a quorum), the Senate joint resolution was passed unanimously congratulating the people of the United States of Brazil on the adoption of a republican form of government. The consideration of the code of rules was then proceeded with. Mr. Crisp moved to amend the proposed rule which authorizes the Speaker not to recognize dilatory motions by adding the words, "A demand for the yeas and nays shall not be considered dilatory." He argued that the Constitution gave the right to demand the yeas and nays. Mr. Struble won applause from the Democrats and caused surprise among the Republicans by advocating the measure. The amendment being lost, Mr. Crisp offered another, and that "the Speaker shall not refuse in any case to entertain an appeal from his decisions." This, after much debate, was also lost. The House then adjourned. In the Senate among the bills reported from committees and placed on the calendar were the following: Two for the establishment and maintenance of Indian industrial schools in Michigan and South Dakota. The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, the pending question being Mr. Plumb's amendment to comprise No Man's Land within the new Territory. At the close of the debate Senator Plumb's amendment was agreed to by a vote of 27 to 16. After a few further amendments were made the Oklahoma bill was passed, and the Senate then went into executive session. When the doors were reopened the Senate adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 14th, several petitions were introduced praying for legislation to prevent speculation in raw and manufactured farm products. The Chace copyright law was then taken up and passed, as were also the following: Providing for an Assistant Secretary of War at a salary of $4,500 per annum; appropriating $251,000 for the relief of the Sioux Indians at Devil Lake, N. Dak., who are in a starving condition; for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names while minors or otherwise in the army or navy during the war; to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another; to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and protect public works against trespass or injury. After an executive session the Senate adjourned. In the House consideration of the rules was proceeded with. Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, offered an amendment providing that when any bill for the increase of pension or for granting pensions not formerly provided for is pending it shall be in order to offer an amendment providing by taxation for the payment thereof. Rejected. Amendments to strike out the clause authorizing the Speaker to count sufficient members present and not voting to make a quorum; to strike out the proposed clause constituting 100 members a quorum of the committee of the whole, and providing that no dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker, were rejected. The time limited for debate having expired, the Speaker declared the question was on the adoption of a code of rules, on which the yeas and nays were demanded by the Democrats, resulting in the adoption of the new rules by a vote of 161 yeas to 149 nays—a strict party vote. The House then adjourned.

RAILROAD DISASTER.

Two Persons Killed and Several Others Fatally Injured.

Baltimore (Md.) dispatch: A wreck is reported to have occurred on the Norfolk & Western road which resulted in the death of two persons and the serious injury of a number of others. The accident occurred at Middle Stone's mill by the spreading of the rails beneath the engine, which was thrown from the track. The express car was hurled a distance of seventy-five yards, and, together with the mail car, was completely demolished. There were not many passengers on the train, and these, with one exception, escaped fatal injury. The Southern express messenger, George Kerr of Eastville, was killed, and the mail agent, A. B. Burton of Lynchburg, received fatal injuries. Conductor B. W. Beck of Bristol, Tenn., was seriously hurt, and Baggagemaster Robert Adams of Lynchburg was badly bruised. A lady passenger, whose name and residence could not be obtained, was also badly hurt, and a little girl who accompanied her was killed.

AN OPEN SWITCH.

A Brakeman's Mistake Causes a Bad Wreck.

Harrisburg (Pa.) dispatch: An open switch causes a serious wreck on the Northern Central railway at Marsh's Run, near this city. Two sections of a freight running ahead of the Pacific express, had orders to lie upon the siding until the express had passed. After the first section had run upon the siding, a brakeman supposing the second section would follow, left the switch open. This section however, ran in upon another switch. Before the mistake could be rectified the Pacific express rounded the curve and dashed into the locomotive of the second section. Both engines were demolished, and the track was blocked all day. Arthur Emerton, of Baltimore, fireman, of the express, was killed. Isaac Stermer, engineer of the passenger train, and Engineer Yagle, of the freight, were seriously injured, and Express Messengers McCahen and Pawnall were badly hurt. Several others were cut and bruised. The negligent brakeman disappeared after the accident.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stom- ☞ No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 119 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

OUR MURDERER;

—OR,—

The Sea Gives Up Its Dead.

BY BARBARA THORNE.

IT is often asserted by the opponents of spiritualism that the occult science has never been of any practical use in the detection of crime. One case that came under my own observation, however, controverts this statement. I have a morbid habit of imagining the crimes that certain persons of my acquaintance might commit, if given the temptation and opportunity. No doubt this mental peculiarity of mind is due to my occupation, that of a detective.

I had been sent to Paris upon business connected with a bank robbery, and having no charge upon my return voyage was at liberty to employ my leisure time in studying my fellow-passengers.

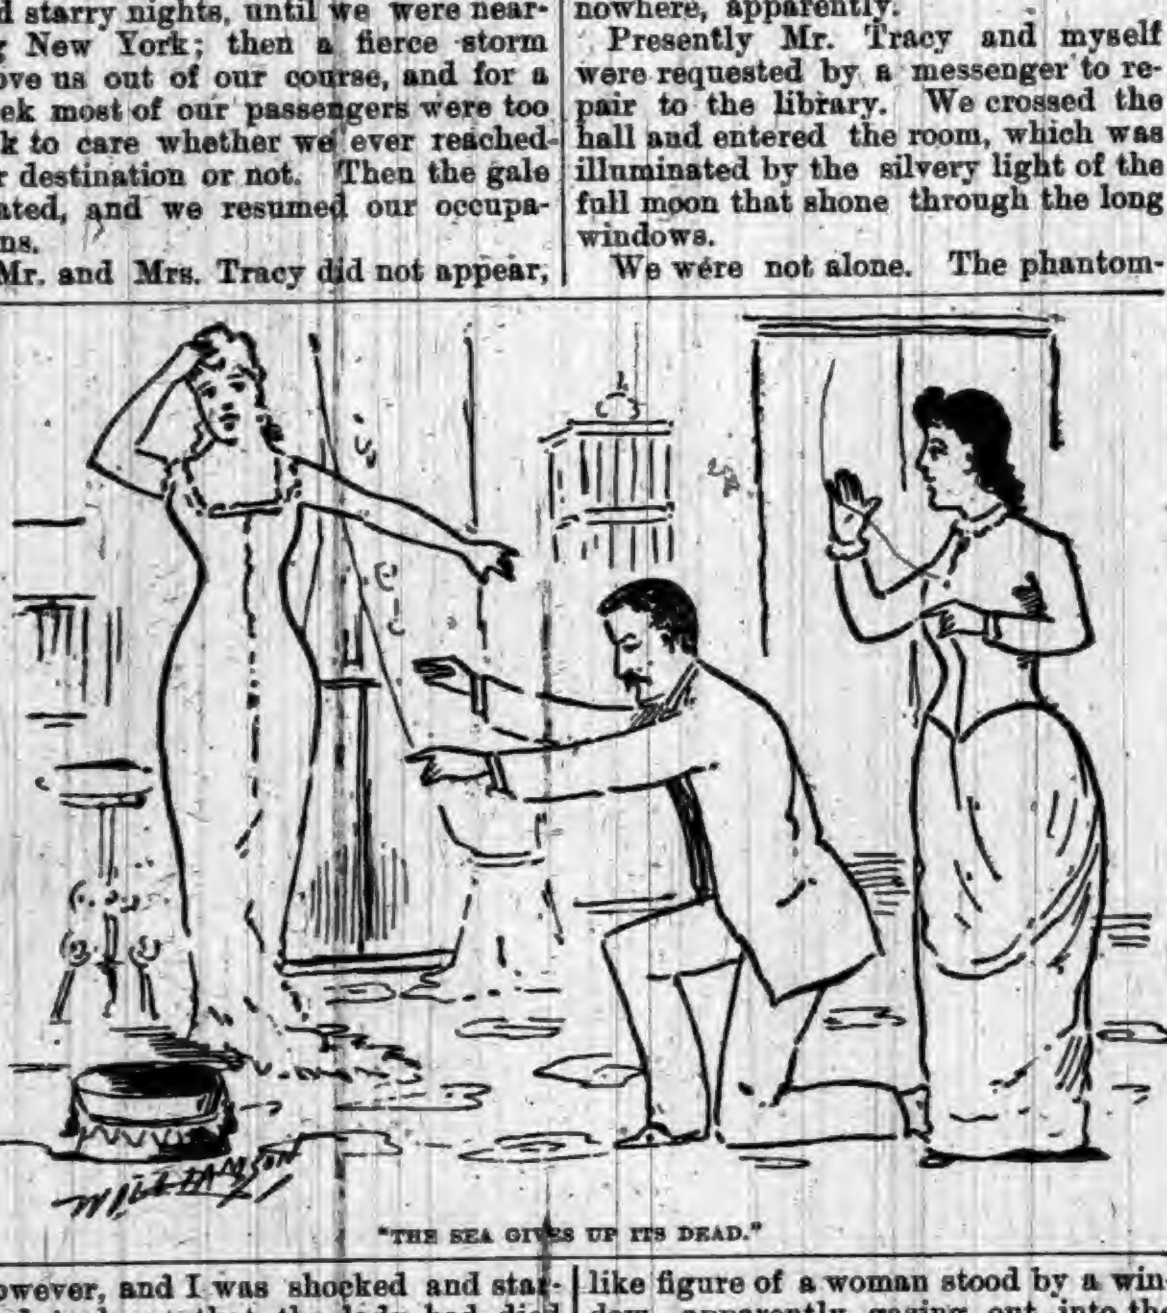
I was especially fascinated by a young husband and wife, of whom I could not learn much except that they were New-Yorkers and bore the name of Tracy.

Though I never exchanged a dozen words with the lady, yet she won my deepest sympathy, from a certain wistful expression of her beautiful eyes—a look which I imagine often characterizes a neglected wife.

The gentleman was always affable, and a general favorite; still, I could not rid myself of the conviction that he would help his gentle, delicate wife out of the world if he had any powerful incentive to the crime.

European voyages were rather longer in those days than they are now. Ours was at first a prosperous one. The good ship sped on, through bright days and starry nights, until we were nearing New York; then a fierce storm drove us out of our course, and for a week most of our passengers were too sick to care whether we ever reached our destination or not. Then the gale abated, and we resumed our occupations.

Mr. and Mrs. Tracy did not appear, however, and I was shocked and startled to learn that the lady had died during the storm, supposedly from heart disease, aggravated by sea sickness, and her body had been consigned to the watery deep. The funeral had been hurried, in compliance with the demands of superstitious sailors, who in some way learned of Mrs. Tracy's death, and insisted that a corpse on board would sink the ship.



"THE SEA GIVES UP ITS DEAD."

Of course the explanation of the lady's sudden death seemed reasonable enough to everybody except myself. Grave suspicions haunted me that the poor, sad-faced little wife had been foully murdered, without a hand having been raised either to help or avenge her.

But I kept my own counsel, for if a crime had been committed all evidences of it had been swallowed up by the sea, and bringing the guilt home would be a hopeless undertaking. So I tried to dismiss the affair from my mind; but at night, in my stateroom, a pair of soft, dark eyes seemed to haunt me, pleading for help. I had no opportunity to see the widower, for he remained constantly alone in his state-room, evidently in too deep affliction to come among us.

We arrived in New York two weeks behind time, and I found a great deal of business waiting for me at the Bureau. My attention was occupied by a hundred new cases, still I was often haunted by Mrs. Tracy's sad eyes, and the old suspicions would arise as to the causes that led to her mysterious death at sea.

This was a case in which I had mentally volunteered my services, yet so far could see "no thoroughfare" to the end desired. And now, strangely enough, I frequently encountered Mr. Tracy, the widower, in my wanderings, and I occasionally devoted some of my leisure time to shadowing him, so that I became pretty well acquainted with his mode of life, which was not at all that of a sorrow-stricken man; it was, in fact, a decidedly gay career in which he was indulging.

Time rolled on, until it was nearly a year since my return from Europe, and with all my experience not a ghost of a plan for bringing the gay widower to justice had one presented itself to my mind. In this emergency I one evening confided the story to my sister Rose, whose quick intuition had often thrown light upon some obscure point in cases I was studying.

She was interested at once, and after a little reflection said:

"If you will contrive some way to bring that man here a few times in a social way, I think I will find out some plan to force a full confession from him."

I smiled a little doubtfully at this, as I answered; "I hope you will, sister mine, yet remember, we have not a particle of evidence against him. Even the ship's surgeon was ill at the time of Mrs. Tracy's death and unable to attend her."

"Yes, I know all that," answered Rose, "but you bring him here and I think we will force a full confession from him before many weeks roll by."

The result of this conversation was that Mr. Tracy soon became quite a frequent guest at our little home, yet nothing of any interest occurred. He was genial, polite, and apparently very frank, without a care upon his mind.

I confess that I almost grew to like the man, and began to be ashamed of my suspicions. I remarked something like this to my sister one day, and then begged her to tell me what was her plan to extort a confession. She only shook her pretty head to all my pleadings, but refused to join me in my new feelings of regard for Mr. Tracy.

A few weeks later I was deputed to invite "Our Murderer," as Rose and I called him, to an evening entertainment at our house. There was to be music and tableaux. My part of the performance, Rose said, was merely to sit next to Mr. Tracy in the audience and prevent him from leaving the house in any event, for, as Rose significantly observed, "Something might happen that would frighten him."

Upon the evening of the entertainment the company assembled at about 9 o'clock, Mr. Tracy and myself being assigned seats in the rear of the others. The tableaux, interspersed with music, went on successfully for an hour, then the programme changed and the stage manager made this announcement:

"Ladies and gentlemen, we are favored to-night by having in our midst the great materializing medium, Dr. Slayton, recently from London, where he suffered considerable persecution for the sake of his supernatural powers. He has kindly consented to give us a slight exhibition of his remarkable ability to communicate with the unseen world. He promises, however, not to frighten anybody who has not a guilty conscience."

This speech was greeted with laughter and applause, and the introduction of Dr. Slayton was generally believed to be a capital joke, part of the amusement of the evening. But the veritable Doctor soon appeared upon the stage, to the surprise of my companion and myself, who were familiar with his appearance, he having been one of our fellow-voyagers upon the fateful journey from Europe.

Nothing very terrifying occurred. Some familiar airs were played by unseen agencies, and bouquets of natural flowers were bestowed upon some of the ladies—flowers that came from nowhere, apparently.

Presently Mr. Tracy and myself were requested by a messenger to repair to the library. We crossed the hall and entered the room, which was illuminated by the silvery light of the full moon that shone through the long windows.

We were not alone. The phantom-like figure of a woman stood by a window, apparently gazing out into the radiant night. She slowly turned at our approach, and we stood face to face with the ghost of the murdered wife. For a time I could never tell how long dead silence reigned. Then these words were pronounced in a chilling tone that seemed like an echo from the tomb:

"The sea gives up its dead!"

My companion sank upon his knees in pitiful, abject terror. "Oh, Genevieve, forgive, forgive me!" he cried. "My God, I have suffered—how I have suffered! Pity and forgive me!"

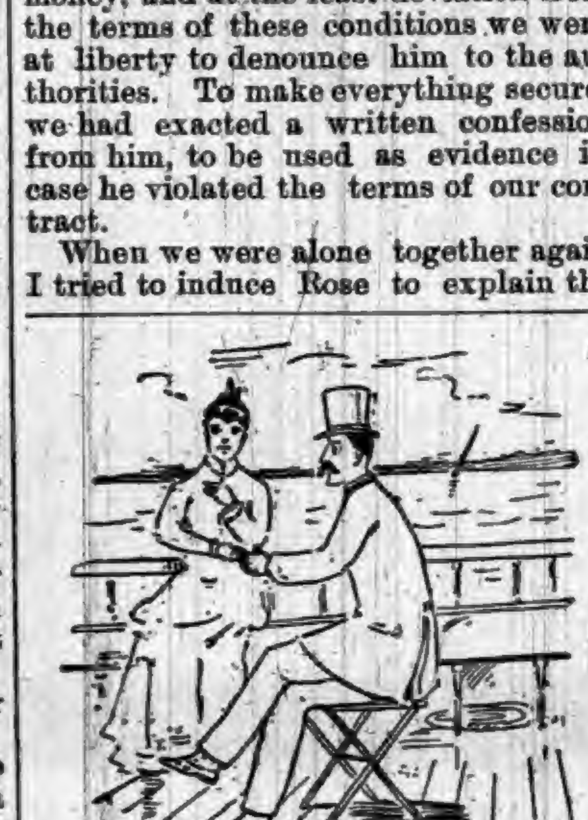
The attitude and the cry of unmistakable anguish were, to my mind, sufficient evidence of Tracy's guilt.

While we were both completely dazed, the apparition vanished. When the villain had somewhat recovered, and become aware of all that he had betrayed, he tried in a confused way to account for his exclamation, but I was not disposed to lose the advantage so gained, and so affected to possess absolute proof of his crime.

Finding denial useless, he confessed all and pleaded eloquently for his life. His evident remorse affected me. I called in Rose, and the result of our consultation was that we agreed to keep to ourselves all knowledge of Tracy's crime, upon these conditions: The criminal was to devote $18,000—out of his annual income of $20,000—to the sick and destitute of the poverty-stricken portions of New York, and he was to live an upright, regular life.

He was to personally superintend, each year, the distribution of this money, and at the least deviation from the terms of these conditions we were at liberty to denounce him to the authorities. To make everything secure, we had exacted a written confession from him, to be used as evidence in case he violated the terms of our contract.

When we were alone together again I tried to induce Rose to explain the mystery of the ghost, but she would give me no satisfactory reply. If she knew it she was resolved to keep her own secret, and in thinking the matter over I am forced to the conclusion that the famous doctor evolved the manifestation out of "thin air."



"I WAS ESPECIALLY FASCINATED BY A YOUNG HUSBAND AND WIFE."

Whatever it may have been, the apparition was precisely the shadowy counterpart of the murdered wife, even to the expression of the wistful, beautiful eyes.

Truly "there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in our philosophy."

Wife (with solicitude of tone)—It must be very lonesome sitting all by yourself at night, John, balancing your books?

Husband—It is, my darling.

W.—I have been thinking about it for some time now and I have got a pleasant surprise for you.

H.—A pleasant surprise?

W.—Yes, dearest. I sent for mother yesterday and I expect her this evening. I mean to have her stay with us quite awhile. She will take care of the house at night and look after the children and I can go down and sit in the office while you work.

—H.—The dev—that is to say, I couldn't think of you going down town.

W.—It's my duty, dearest. I ought to have thought of it before, but it never came to my mind till yesterday. Oh! John, forgive me for not thinking of it sooner. But I will go and sit with you to-night.

H.—To-night! Why, I—I—the fact is I got through with my books last night.

W.—You did? How delightful! And you can stay at home every evening! I'm so glad!

And the delighted wife ran off to make preparations for the reception of her mother, while the husband, with somber brow, sat looking at the picture of a poker party with one member absent in the glowing grate.

And He Fled.

He came in with a breezy air, an ingratiating smirk, and a card in his outstretched hand. Before he could get his breath after climbing the stairs, Fogg reached out his hand and embraced the outstretched ditto effusively.

"I see," said Fogg, "you are an agent of the Suckemin Life Insurance Company. You'd like to ensure me for $10,000. Your scheme is superior to any other in the market, and the premiums are so low that I'll never notice the outlay. I like your scheme; your face is prepossessing; why shouldn't I take out a policy for $10,000 or $20,000? My life is less hazardous than that of the men who work in the powder magazine; I go over the Ricketty and Rattlebang Railroad half a dozen times a day—seldom have less than ten smash-ups daily you know—I sleep next door to a dynamite mill, and eat at a boarding-house. All my ancestors, as far back as the landing of the Pilgrim, have died of heart disease or consumption; my cough has been on me ten years thus far, and the doctors tell me that I haven't half a lung left, and that my heart is endowed with a full line of cardiac diseases. Oh, yes, I'll—by George, he's gone!"

And so he had. It was the first time on record that an insurance agent ever lost his voice, and it is suspected that this unfortunate went out and hanged himself out of sheer chagrin.—Boston Transcript.

Uses of Anger.

An old maxim, "Anger manages everything badly," is illustrated by the conduct of the lion when irritated. He then flogs his sides with his tail and shakes his mane. He then deprives himself of an opportunity of stealing a march upon his prey, which, alarmed by the beast's violent manifestations, seeks safety in flight.

A writer on natural history shows by reference to the bee that anger has its uses, though it may be a bad manager when uncontrolled.

A hundred lazy animals are fond of honey and dislike labor. They would intrude upon the hive and carry off its sweets, if bees did not have stings and were not readily irritated by interference with their stores.

If anger were not a part of our constitution, says the naturalist, applying the bees' sting and irritation, the land would be overrun with rogues and dastards; the weak would be bullied and the defenceless robbed. But the fact that anger is ready to start forth and sting the wrong-doer has a salutary influence in restraining the rogues and dastards.

Take Care! There Is Danger

In allowing inactivity of the kidneys to grow through neglect. The deadly shoals of Bright's disease and diabetes will wreck the goodly bark of health if it is allowed to drift rudderless upon them. The bladder, too, if inactive, and judicious medication does not speedily direct the helm toward the port of safety, will be whelmed by the quicksands of disease. In selecting a diuretic, let your choice fall upon Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which stimulates the renal organs without irritating and exciting them, two effects to be apprehended from the unmedicated stimuli largely resorted to. These have a tendency to react prejudicially. The Bitters invigorate the kidneys and bladder, in common with the nerves and the digestive organs, and so afford lasting aid. It also affords dual assistance in preventing and curing intermittent and remittent fever. Biliousness, constipation and rheumatism it also subjugates.

"Boss, you got a match?" an innocent country-looking darky inquired of a young man who was hurrying home late a few nights ago. The young man stopped and handed over a lucifer. "Wait a minute, boss, till I see what kind of a ring dis is which I just picked up heah." Striking the match, the darky held out what appeared to be a gold ring with a diamond set. "Boss, dis 'pears to be a dimund ring, and if anybody ketch me with him I'll git in trouble. How much you gib me for him?" After some chaffering the young man bought the "purest gem serene" for $2.75, and the innocent darky disappeared in the gloaming, as it were. The next morning the young man examined his diamond ring and found it was a thinly washed gold thing with a beautiful glass setting in pure lead, worth at auction about 25 cents a dozen.—Savannah News.

must be true, and the universal verdict of those who have used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Strengthening Plasters is that there is no doubt of their curative qualities. E. Larzelere, agent M. C. Tremendous Seas at Tillamook Rock.

At the office of Major Handbury, United States Engineer, is to be seen a "dornick" of basalt weighing sixty-two pounds, which was brought up from Tillamook light by Mr. McClure, lampist of this district.

He reports that a most fearful storm was experienced at the rock recently, and that the dornick was thrown up by the force of the waves and fell on the roof of the light-keeper's house, 110 feet above the sea level, breaking a hole in the roof. The waves were so high that the water came down the chimney of the boiler house of the fog siren in torrents and poured out through the tubes of the boiler. The chimney is about 130 feet above sea level. The spray entered the cowl of the chimney over the lamp, which is 150 feet above sea level, and ran in streams to the bottom.

Prepare for Spring

Now is the time to attend to your personal condition in preparation for the change to spring season. If you have not "wintered well," if you are tired out from overwork, if your blood has become impure from close confinement in badly ventilated offices or shops, you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla at once. It will purify and vitalize your blood, create a good appetite, and give your whole system tone and strength.

"For a first-class spring medicine my wife and I think very highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla. We both took it last spring. It did us a great deal of good and we felt better through the hot weather than ever before. It cured my wife of sick headache, from which she has suffered a great deal, and relieved me of a dizzy, tired feeling. I think every one ought to take something to purify the blood before the hot weather comes on, and we shall certainly take Hood's Sarsaparilla this spring." J. H. PEARCE, Supt. Granite Railway Co., Concord, N. H.

FASHIONABLE SOCIETY.

The trying ordeals which fashionable society imposes on its devotees are enough to severely test the physical strength and endurance of the most robust. Irregular and late hours, over-rich and indigestible food, late suppers, the fatigue of the ball-room, the bad air of the illy-ventilated, overcrowded theatre, are each, in themselves, sufficient to upset the system and ruin the health of the delicate and sensitive. Combined, they can hardly fail, if persisted in, to seriously impair the health of the hardiest. Ladies generally possess less powers of endurance than their male consorts, and so the sooner succumb to these deleterious influences. They become pale, haggard and debilitated, and constantly experience a sense of lassitude—that "tired feeling," as so many express it. The least exertion fatigues them. Various neuralgic and other pains harrass and distress the sufferer. Headache, backache, "bearing-down" sensations, and "female weaknesses" follow and sorely afflict the sufferer.

As an invigorating, restorative tonic, soothing cordial and bracing nervine, for debilitated and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has no equal. In fact, it is the only medicine for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments incident to females, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from its manufacturers, that it will, in every case, give satisfaction or its price ($1.00) will be promptly refunded. It improves digestion, invigorates the system, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, produces refreshing sleep, dispels melancholy and nervousness, and builds up both the flesh and strength of those reduced below a healthy standard. It is a legitimate medicine—not a beverage. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to sour or ferment in the stomach and cause distress. It is as peculiar in its composition as it is marvelous in its remedial results. Therefore, don't be put off with some worthless compound easily, but dishonestly, recommended to be "just as good," that the dealer may make more profit. "Favorite Prescription" is incomparable. The manufacturers' unprecedented offer to guarantee satisfaction in every case, or money refunded, ought to convince every invalid of this fact. A Book, on Woman's Ailments, and their Self-cure (160 pages), sent under seal, in plain envelope, for ten cents in stamps. The Albion R. R. Meeting.

Eighteen of our business men went up to Albion last Thursday to attend the railroad meeting, and found representatives present from all along the proposed line, even from as far as Laporte county. The meeting was by far, the largest we have had. So they secured the Opera House, and gathered there about two o'clock. On motion of Col. W. C. Williams, W. H. Dills, of Auburn, was made chairman, this being the third time he has presided over these meetings. Lon. D. Fleming, of Ligonier, was made secretary. A general talk and consultation was then had, men from all points along the line responding to calls for remarks. Finally a committee was appointed to perfect an organization. This was made up chiefly of the lawyers present. The meeting then adjourned for half an hour, to give the committee time to consult. Their report was then presented by P. V. Hoffman, of Ligonier. This report was adopted, but on suggestion of Mr. Dills, was reconsidered and somewhat changed. As finally adopted the stock was put at $50,000, and the directors divided to the different points along the line. The directors were also designated being for Auburn, J. L. Davis, C. C. Shaffer, W. H. Dills and J. A. Barns; the last named afterwards declined, and J. E. Ensley was put on in his place. Avilla chose Thomas Hudson; Albion, M. Kimmel, R. L. Stone, W. F. Clapp; Ligonier, John Weir, Sol. Mier, E. B. Gerber; North Liberty, L. S. Pierce; Lakeville, C. W. Moon. During the meeting a letter to Dr. Lemon, of Albion, from James McPherson, of Bowling Green, Ohio, was read. He had seen accounts in the Chicago papers of the proposed Wabash extension, and wrote to ask about it. He said they are now starting a road from Cleveland via Fremont to Bowling Green and so on to Napoleon, on the line of the old Wabash, and thought it would be a good plan to work in connection with the proposed Wabash extension through Auburn and thus secure a line into Chicago. A great deal of interest was awakened by this letter, as such a road would connect with Chicago both lines of the Wabash system. Correspondence with Mr. McPherson has been had since then. The meeting adjourned to convene in Ligonier, Feb. 19, at 2 p. m.

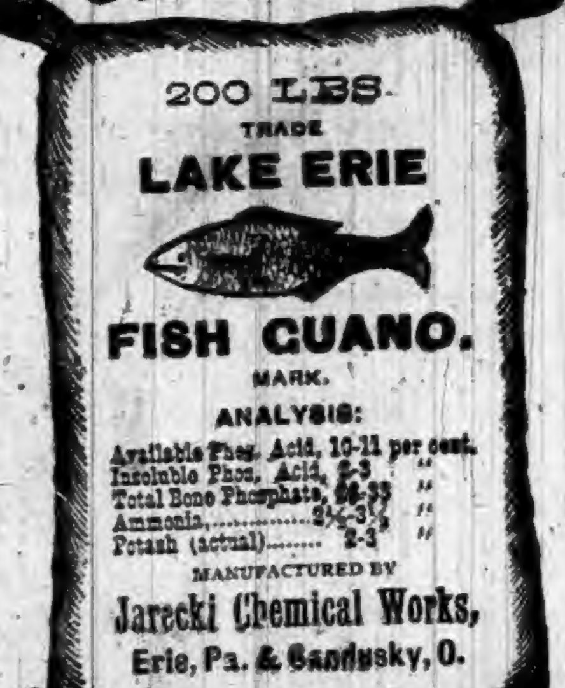
—THE BEST—

FERTILIZER ON EARTH.



Surprisingly Narrow Minded.

Even for a republican paper, the Kendallville Standard of last week, shows a degree of predjudice and narrow minded bigotry that is surprising. The article started out to chastise the New Albany Ledger and the South Bend Times for claiming that Thomas Jefferson was not the man who first practiced the "spoils system," and that he was not such a very bad man in other respects. The editor then bounces Jefferson in this surprising style:

> It was Jefferson the long and loudly-professed enemy of slavery, who corrupted his high official position to party and for party's sake, by admitting to the Union that vast slave-cursed, God-forsaken, territory of the Mississippi Valley, slavery and all. Yes, he knew it was unconstitutional, but what did he care for the constitution, when party called.

This would be past comprehension, did we believe it to be a fragment of some of those patent "original" editorials that republican papers have been printing lately, and that it got into the paper by mistake. The territory acquired by Jefferson and known as "The Louisiana Purchase," included the most productive part of the Union, though the Standard may not have heard of it. The only blight that we know of having fallen on it, is that a majority of the states made out of it give republican majorities. Can the Standard refer us to any other objectionable feature of the several that it hints darkly at?

How the Tariff Works.

The Chicago Herald has an article on this subject so much to the point that we cannot refrain from quoting a part of it. The writer, apparently a farmer, says:

Another valuable object lesson to farmers and wage workers is the undoubted fact that the few unprotected industries pay as high wages as any of the most favored, and also divide large dividends. As a proof of this fact, perhaps no fairer example could be cited than the match industry. After many years of effort and experiment in starting fires the lucifer match was invented about 1830. It was first made by hand and sold in London at 60 cents per box of fifty. Following closely, Germany, France, Sweden and England invented machinery, by which means matches became plentiful and cheap, and, being a domestic necessity, they soon became a very profitable article of export. And we were glad to get them until about 1850, when the United States began to manufacture matches for itself. Soon after this a tariff of 35 per cent. ad valorem was enacted to protect the "infant" from "foreign pauper labor." Then during the war the internal revenue stamp duty was added, and being charged up to the consumer, with high interest, the price of matches mounted so high that the "foreign product" was again imported and sold below the home product. Seeing this, several large factories in the East, which had grown rich under protection at the consumers' expense, joined together to ask Congress for some relief upon which Congress proposed to repeal the stamp tax on matches. But the wily match men said, "No, don't do that; just regulate the stamp law so that those who buy in large quantities can get a rebate in proportion to the amount of the stamp purchase." This was done, and the few large concerns who engineered the scheme to get the full benefit of large purchases, at once combined to form the Diamond Match Company. By means of these large rebates the "combine" was enabled to freeze out most or all of the smaller home manufacturers and to successfully compete with and drive out the "foreign pauper product," while the stockholders of the combine amassed large fortunes. A few years later, to relieve the surplus in the Treasury, Congress proposed to repeal the entire stamp tax. The match combine came to the front with funds in the lobby to resist the repeal, so far as matches were concerned, and they produced selected statistics, with facts and figures to show that a repeal would ruin their great industry and make us dependent upon Europe for matches, which in case of war would plunge us into utter darkness. They made the repeal look suicidal; but, being desperate, Congress did repeal the stamp tax, and soon after repealed the 35 per cent. tariff also, by which means the match business in the United States became open to the competition of the world. The match combine fought these repeals at every step, with "ruin" and "pauper labor" as a bugbear, and when they were beaten in the fight a directors' meeting was called to see what could be done. They then concluded by improving their machinery and business methods they could compete with the world "anyhow," and Congress could "go to grass." The result can be seen by any one who will inquire. With the tariff and stamp tax matches were sold at 10 cents per box; now, under free trade in matches, the same is retailed at 1 cent per box; and at this low price the Diamond Match Company is paying a regular 10 per cent. dividend on highly watered stock, besides adding yearly to its surplus capital. The "pauper" matches of Sweden which flooded this country after the tariff was removed have been driven out by our low prices, and to-day we are exporting matches to supply "paupers" in other parts of the world. And the match industry pays as high a rate of wages as any of the protected industries besides princely salaries to its managers. The Diamond Match Company still holds a monopoly of the world, simply because it can produce matches better and cheaper than the "paupers" of Europe. That is a kind of monopoly to be proud of, and one which we never need blush to own. Who will say that free trade in matches has not benefited the farmer and wage earner and the nation as a whole as well as the match industry itself? What has happened in the match industry will repeat itself in all industries which are worth fostering when they are once weaned. The princely generosity of the monopolists lobbying Congress to keep up a protective tariff to benefit the nation and the farmers in particular is so thin that any farmer ought to see the villainous hypocrisy at a glance. It is quite marvelous that farmers and laborers will continue to be dupes of the protected monopolists after having been fooled so often.

How Farners are Taxed.

It is not uncommon to hear our farmers complain of the taxes they have to pay. Sometimes they are too high and the payment of them could be largely lessened by increasing the productive power of an acre of ground. For instance: a farmer who sows poor seed, raises scrub stock, or buys antiquated or imperfect implements, must certainly pay proportionately high taxes. Not to mention the improvement he might make by getting the best seed and live stock, he could buy a Deering Binder or Mower, and save money in the harvesting of his grain and grass crops. 2

Those Flags.

The weak minded critic, who writes in the Butler Record about those flags we mentioned, is as ignorant as he is bigoted which is certainly giving him a very pointed sendoff. He takes exceptions, of course to our expose of this latest trick of monopoly. We said this effort to have every school house in the land put up a flag, was in the interest of one of the worst monopolies, of the many bad ones we have. This we can show, and anyone less ignorant than this self-consituted critic, knows it. There are but two or three firms in the United States that make flags. There are hundreds and thousands of school houses that would be expected to take at least one of these flags each year. All this immense business would go into the hands of these two or three firms, and their profits, which of course they easily control, would be enormous. And this is the sole animus of the whole move. No one with the brains of a gnat or the information of a dunce, doubts the above statement. Then why should the people of this county be called on in the name of patriotism, to add to the already enormous gains of a specious swindle? Can this would-be critic tell? We think he can't. Why should a sensible man be the friend of monopoly? Is it because this monopoly steals from him his hard earnings by forcing him to pay more for a thing than it is worth, or by using as in this case, a good motive to induce him to buy a thing he does not want, because he does not need it? Can he give a good reason why monopoly should be petted and assisted? If he can, let him do it, or acknowledge himself a fool for the pains he has taken. We repeat, that there never has been a lack of patriotism in this country. In the hour of the greatest danger, at the time when a spontaneous outburst of patriotism was the most needed—more than at any other period in our national history— there was no lack. Warm hearts, strong arms and clear heads were as plenty as the sands on the seashore, all coming up in one grand phalanx of patriotism. There had been no flag on every school house to lure them on, or to raise in their hearts a pampered, and therefore short-lived hot-house sort of patriotism. Something more than school house flags was needed, and vigorously supplied. We shall never, we trust, have another such a crisis. But if we do, Columbia's patriotic sons will not lose their heads and look about wildly, and ask with blanched faces, if there have been the proper number of flags put up on country school houses, or what is the matter; but sustained and cheered by a patriotism that is real, because born in the heart and not on the top of a school house. They will do, as was done before, ask no questions, make no hesitation, but spring into the breach of danger, making a new wall if need be, with their bodies. It is patriotism such as this, that this critic should cultivate. It is such as this he should teach to the rising generation, if he is capable of appreciating or even of understanding it, which we greatly doubt.

* * *

Then this nameless one goes off into a string of items connected with the rebels. We suppose he intends from this to carry the idea that if the southern states had put enough thousands into the hand of the one only flagmaker of those days they would all have been so hilariously patriotic they would have remained true to the union. What else are we to infer from his disjointed talk? Then he asks if it would not be a good thing to put a flag on every school house in the land so as "to instil into the minds of the young and rising generation what true and unadulterated patriotism is." We probably have as many patriotic instincts as the writer has. We certainly have a higher view of this noble principle. Next to the love of home, the love of country is the noblest of our social instincts; and it will be a sad day for our country when its existence and its influence must depend on the hanging out of flags and banners.

* * *

It comes with a poor grace from a republican, as this unknown assailant probably is, to rise up at this late day and make a frantic whine for "more flags! more flags!" when his party has been instrumental in driving from the ocean nearly every American flag. Nor is that statesmanship likely to commend itself to the patriotic and the intelligent, that withdraws our national emblem from the world at large, where it once so grandly floated, and hides it within our own boundaries, inconspicuously displayed on country school houses in the interior. For our own part, we are not ashamed of the stars and stripes. Our people are familiar with the grand old flag, at every location in the country. Now let it be seen abroad. Let it flaunt its bright hues in the face of the nations of the earth. On every sea, and in every harbor, let the loved banner float proudly to the breeze. Then when an American goes abroad, he need not be ashamed to point to our country's emblem and say "There is my flag. I come to your shores under its protecting folds, and when I return it goes with me to the land of my birth—the land that I love." But how is it now? Republican statesmen, who so dearly love the old flag, that they have called it in from every clime, and as if it were a thing to be ashamed of, or that could not be trusted abroad, they and their abject followers, now humbly ask, that at least it may be permitted to float over a few country school houses, in the remote interior of our country where few will see it, and where no foreign foe can get to it to do it harm. Bah. Out on such patriotism! When republicans stop such nonsense, correct these weak blunders in their so called statesmanship and above all, when their abject followers, stop distributing British flags to the people as they did in 1888, it will be time for them to lay some small claim to patriotism. Till they do something as sensible as this, they will expose their weakness less, by leaving the discussion of public questions to those who have at least some understanding of them, or who have the courage to write over their own signature.

Slandering Auburn.

The two perennial liars and blackmailers who run the Garrett Clipper have for some months filled their disreputable and shameless sheet with all sorts of lies about Auburn, its citizens, its enterprises and finally about its town government. The community is to be pitied for this state of things, though not to blame for it. To the eternal disgrace of the town, however, be it said, one of these men lives here, gets drunk here, and while drunk concocts a portion of these slanders. Tired of hearing the town board slandered, and tired of being himself abused by the dirty sheet, Joe. Pfefferl very properly took the occasion of Hank, Little's late drunk, to have him arrested and fined. Since then every copy of their stinking paper has teemed with abuse of Mr. Pfefferl. They have accused him and the town board of all sorts of corruption. For the good name of our town and its very efficient board, we wish to say that all the charges made, are base lies, lies for which the filthy couple should be brought into court and punished. No jury in DeKalb county could be found that would hesitate a moment to convict both of them as slanderers and blackmailers. Now as to their statements. They say the town authorities have been extravagant. Let us see. They say Mr. Pfefferl gets $400 a year for his services. We are informed by Marshal C. A. Picker that the books will show, Pfefferl gets $306—his bid being $3 a month below any other. Of the $416 allowed Mr. Pfefferl last year, $110 was for the use of his team. This is for service in hauling the hose cart and hook and ladder trucks and for similar work and is cheap enough. Now, as to the city team. The Clipper blacksmiths say the town board paid $45 in three months for hay alone, and in a line or two farther along, speak of the time as four months; the inability to remember the number, being probably owing to a strange brand of whisky. As to this: From May 1, last year, to Feb. 1, just passed, the board paid $91 for both hay and grain, for the city team. Mr Pfefferl of course, pays for his own. The books show this. The feed is bought for the two teams, the city's and Pfefferl's, and each bill is divided into halves, Pfefferl paying his half. This the books show. Now, as to Shaffer & Berg's bill of $26.50. This was for putting a tongue into the hose cart so it could be drawn by horses; putting steps around the hook and ladder trucks so six men can stand and ride on each side, and for shoeing the city's horses. The bill was reasonable, as anyone less a fool than the Clipper idiots can see. Now for the whole charge of extravagance. The town board is made up of our best business men, men whose honesty has never been questioned. They have managed the city's finances well. They have within the past three or four years, bought a new steam fire engine, and have just paid the last dollar on it. They have put in 25 fire wells, at an expense of $50 to $75 each; they have bought a team to do their work and help run the fire engine. This has saved several hundred dollars. The year before they got the team, they paid out $316 for draying, teaming, etc., which has all been saved since. Last year, they got lumber 50 cents a thousand cheaper, because they could do their own delivering. They hauled their own cement for crossings, have had their team do a vast amount of road tax work, and other work. They have put down a vast amount of cement and plank crossing, have 600 feet of new hose, have provided for electric lights, and in every way have proved acceptable servants to the people. Nobody has complained of them but the two pimps of the Clipper. And it is none of their business. One of them lives in Garrett, and the other stays a part of the time here, but seldom dares to show his drunken head up town. We have replied to more of their foul mouthed stuff than we would have done had the matter been a mere personal one. But their foul rag is read in a few of our neighboring towns, where an editor can be found who is sufficiently unacquainted with them to suffer an exchange. In this way, a few strangers get an idea that Auburn is a hot bed of corruption. Auburn it simply unfortunate, in having such slums of editors near her borders. The only thing we blame Auburn for, is her long suffering. Why do our citizens take the filthy, obscene thing published at Garrett, that does nothing but malign and slander our city and our citizens? It got its hold here first among a few who were sufficiently thoughtless and mistaken as to go about town and help to get up a list for what has since proved a burning disgrace. There is no such other disgraceful sheet in the United states. Any other community, not so thoroughly law-abiding as ours, would have tarred and feathered its managers long ago. Let our people wake up to the fact that we are being slandered at home and abroad. Send the rotten thing back to the foul den from whence it came. Stop it. Every citizen of Auburn should stop it. Some one with back bone should take the matter in hand. Go over the town and have the subscribers drop it at once, as many are doing. Then let the members of the board, and others who have been slandered, take the matter into court. If decent and honest men can be accused of stealing and dishonesty without recourse, then what are our courts for? But one item, and we drop this nasty subject, gladly. Our citizens as we said, are not overburdened with taxes. Our taxes are high, but some towns have still higher—some like Garrett, have still higher rates. But we do not complain, for we have something to show for it, and our people themselves asked the town to incur many of these expenses, and we do not see how these expenses are to be met, unless by taxation.

IOWA DEMOCRATS

Once More in Power After Waiting Thirty-four Years.

The Chicago Daily Herald has this letter from Des Moines, dated February 19, and describing the scenes in the legislature when the deadlock was broken by the republicans giving the democrats the speaker of the House. They had been all this time in session, but the House being equally divided, nothing of importance could be done. Tired out, at last, both parties had to yield some points:

The deadlock is broken and a democrat will be speaker—the first democratic speaker in Iowa since 1856. There has not been a democratic governor in Iowa during all the long years that have intervened since the date mentioned, and it seems to be a kind of poetic justice that the party that has been struggling for recognition in this state all that time should at last carry off both prizes in the same basket. To say that the democrats are jubilant to-night is understating the case. They are simply uproarous. For thirty-four years they have been the under dog in the fight. They have strug[illegible] and bitten viciously, but were always b[illegible]. Politics had gotten into such a shape in Io[illegible] a man who owned up to being a democr[illegible] possibly be tolerated in good societ[illegible], providing he had exceptional mo[illegible] a good bank account back of him—b[illegible] then his most intimate republican fr[illegible] seriously doubted his chances of ever get[illegible] heaven. To day the conditions were al[illegible]. The democrats had not only elected [illegible]nor, but, after a desperate struggle on [illegible]akership, had scored another victory and [illegible]on, a Jeffersonian from Linn county, se[illegible] all important place. As a result ther[illegible] great deal of jubilation and self-glorifica[illegible] all around, and when Governor Boies is i[illegible]rated next week, Tuesday or Thursday, the [illegible]narily quiet town of Des Moines will not kn[illegible] itself.

At yesterday's session of the [illegible]use Richman, a bright young democrat from [illegible]scatine, put in a proposition to settle the m[illegible]tter by lot, and this was only defeated by a strict party vote. Then the republicans, being put in a very deep hole, said they would yield the speaker if the democrats would give them some other things. They put their proposition in the following shape:

1. The democrats to have the speaker and two assistant clerks.
2. The republicans to have the speaker pro tem., chief clerk, engrossing clerk, enrolling clerk, file clerk, bill clerk, assistant postmistress, sergeant-at-arms, doorkeeper, two janitors.
3. Each side to have one paper-folder and four pages.
4. The republicans to have first choice of standing committees and to choose five committees, the democrats to have second choice and choose one committee, and the remaining committees to be chosen alternately, the party choosing said committees to have a majority of one, including chairmain, on such committees so chosen, either party to have the right to name the chairman and their share of membership on committees chosen by them.
5. All investigating and special committees to be equally divided unless otherwise agreed upon.
6. The same committees to have clerks as had in the twenty-second general assembly.
7. The division of committees to be made by a committee of three on each side, chosen by their respective caucuses.

When the house met this morning an adjournment was moved at once so that each party could go into caucus. The republicans twirled their thumbs while the democrats debated the proposition. Some of the newer members who wanted committeeships or were afraid that the ulterior purpose in their proposal wanted to cut down the number of committees given the republicans, on the ground that having the choice of five they could control all legislation. Holbrook, however, shewed them that a minority report was just as good as a majority one; that on all party measures the party having a speaker and a majority could control legislation. So the caucus determined to accept the republican proposition. This was agreed to late in the afternoon and was a sad surprise to a large number of the republican obstructionists. They had thought the democrats would not accept the terms, figuring that personal ambitions would intervene to stop them, but when the announcement was made that the propositition was agreeable all around there was nothing to do but adjourn the house over until 7:30 p. m., when the final arrangements could be made.

So, the democrats got the speaker, and nearly half of the committees but the republicans, got the most of the officers pertaining to the House, such as door-keepers, clerks and other paid employes. The next-day these matters were all settled, and it is now believed some work will be done. But really it seems a little odd, to think of a democratic governor, and speaker of the House in Iowa.

Tony Carpets.

Furniture and carpet go naturally together. The Foster Furniture and Carpet Co., at Fort Wayne, give to the carpet business, constant study and attention, which it does not receive when run as a side issue to some other kind of business, to which it bears no natural relation. No firm in the state can show so clean, so stylish, so well assorted and so cheap a line of carpets as they are now offering to the spring trade. They have not an old piece of carpet in their entire stock, and there are none of the celebrated makes of these goods but of which they carry a full line. Inferior makes never find their way into their carpet room, merely because they cost a little less and therefore pay a bigger profit. Quality is always the first consideration with them and should be with their customers.

BAUER BRO'S, Prop's.

Ligonier R. R. Meeting.

A number of our people went to Ligonier last Wednesday to attend the the adjourned meeting in the interest of the new railroad. The people there turned out well and showed great interest in the new railroad project. There were quite a number from Albion, and two from North Liberty. The meeting was held in a large room, a sort of hall in the building across from the hotel. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Dills, of Auburn, who was continued as chairman, and Mr. Lon. D. Fleming, of Ligonier, was continued as secretary. After the president had described what had been done, and outlined the probable course for the future, the secretary read the articles of association for the benefit of those who had not before heard them. Then the necessary stock, $50,000 was subscribed and directors selected. Then the directors held a meeting to organize and elect officers. J. L. Davis, of Auburn, and W. H. Dills, of the same place were made respectively president and secretary, with R. L. Stone, of Albion, vice-president and Jacob Straus, of Ligonier, treasurer. There was a decidedly favorable opinion expressed by all present, in regard to this line as against any other that has been proposed. They expect to proceed with a survey soon, and other necessary steps will be taken to advance the interest of the new line. It begins to look now as if it would be a success. But our people must not expect it will fall into their hands like a ripe apple. It will still take a plenty of hard work and some sacrifices. But we believe our people are in a frame of mind to meet both these conditions. Let the good work go on.

At Ligonier.

While at Ligonier last week, we were forcibly struck with the solid improvements shown in the town since our last visit there a few years ago. No town in northern Indiana has made such a complete change—has so completely metamorphosed the old things into the new. Even in what had always been the center of business, the old were gone, and new and beautiful brick blocks had taken the place of the old business rooms. On every hand were the marks of progress. The line of business houses along Main, or Cavin street has been extended both north and south, and the streets widened and beautified. New business firms have sprung up and succeeded, while the old ones, have settled down into a condition of solid and satisfied affluence. The old faces are there a little older, it is true, but as friendly as ever, and the writer passed several pleasant hours with those he had time to meet. There were Taylor Shobe, Jacob Graham, C. V. Inks, D. S. Scott, and his son James, J. C. Zimmerman, E B. Gerber, and his son Frank, Jacob Baum, Jacob Straus, J. B. Foltz, Mr. Goldsmith, J. E. McDonald of the Banner, Mr. Eldred, J. H. Hoffman, H. C. Winebrenner, J. C. Zimmerman, P. V. Hoffman, Mr. Sisterhen, and many more whose names we cannot now recall, but with whom we had pleasant little chats. A few of these like Goldsmith, Shobe, James Scott, and Graham had been our pupils in the days of long ago, and it was a great pleasure indeed to find nearly all prospering, and with prospects. There were many others we would have been pleased to see, but the limited time at our disposal would not allow it. Ligonier has spread her borders and solidified her interests, till she is to-day, one of the most solid and substantial of northern Indiana's prosperous towns. Long may she continue in her prosperity.

CHEERS FOR CHICAGO.

The Hustling Metropolis of the West Wins the World's Fair After a Great Struggle—The Vote in Detail.

Monday last Congress voted to hold the World's Fair at Chicago. The following is the proceedings in detail:

The clerk read the special order of the House prescribing the method of voting upon the site for the fair; requiring some one place to have a majority of the votes cast. Mr. Blount (Ga.) wished to know if there would be an opportunity afforded to pass upon the question as to whether there shall be a fair before selecting a site. The Speaker replied that under the special order this opportunity could not be had, and immediately directed the clerk to call the roll.

The vote resulted:

Chicago	115
New York	72
St. Louis	61
Washington	56
Scattering	1

SECOND BALLOT.

Chicago	121
New York	83
St. Louis	59
Washington	46

Whole number of votes cast, 309; necessary for choice, 155.

THIRD BALLOT.

Chicago	127
New York	92
St. Louis	53
Washington	46

Whole number of votes cast, 306; necessary for choice, 154.

FOURTH BALLOT.

Chicago	134
New York	95
St. Louis	48
Washington	29

Whole number of votes cast, 306; necessary for choice, 154.

FIFTH BALLOT.

Chicago	140
New York	110
St. Louis	38
Washington	24

Whole number of votes cast, 312; necessary for choice, 157.

SIXTH BALLOT.

Chicago	148
New York	110
Washington	24
St. Louis	38

Total, 312; necessary to a choice, 157.

On the sixth ballot total vote was 312, and Mr. Wilson moved a recess till 11 o'clock Tuesday. The western members rallied together and the House refused to take a recess by a vote of—yeas 138, nays 174. Mr. Mason rushed forward to the clerk exclaiming, "call the roll," "call the roll." The clerk again began the seventh ballot—"Mr. Abbott," and so on down. The result was 311 votes, divided as follows: Chicago, 154; New York, 112; St. Louis, 27; Washington, 17. A majority would be 156 and Chicago had 154, just two votes short. There was an agony of expectation when Mason dragged Reyburn, a new member, forward. He said he wished to change his vote from New York to Chicago, and did so. He was greeted with applause and evidently expected to lead a stampede for Chicago, but he was disappointed, nobody followed and Chicago's total stood at 155, one less than a majority. The New York forces were retiring in good order, contesting every inch of ground. So another roll call was necessary. It was the eighth and last, for Chicago achieved her victory and out of a total of 307 votes, received 157, three more than a majority. New York had 107; St. Louis, 25; Washington, 18. The Indiana members voted for Chicago on the eigth ballot.

AGAINST THE TRIANGLE.

The Clan-na-Gael in Convention at Philadelphia Denounces the Old Leaders.

At the recent Clan-na-Gael Convention in Philadelphia a new departure in Irish revolutionary affairs was inaugurated. The convention sat down heavily upon what it designates as the "thieving, treacherous and murderous element which has of late years crept into the ranks of the order." Every camp in the country was invited to send a representative, but thirteen which did not respond have since approved of what was done in Philadelphia. The name of Camp No. 20, of Chicago, is known everywhere since the murder of Dr. Cronin. To emphasize its abhorrence of the act the Philadelphia Convention unanimously passed this resolution:

> "That the number 20 be stricken from the rolls of camps and its place forever remain blank to mark our horror of the action of that camp and the crime of some of its members."

The convention went further than this, for on the recommendation of the judiciary committee it expelled and debarred forever from membership in the order the members of the "triangle." The newly-elected executive was instructed to see that no club having these men or any of those who have "tried to screen the murderers and have the responsibility of this foul deed fastened upon the organization ever obtain affiliation with the order."

Relief for the Indians.

A Jamestown, N. D., special says: Rev. Father Stephan, the well-known Catholic missionary arrived here from Washington en route to the Turtle Mountain Indian Reservation. He is commissioned by Miss Drexel, of Philadelphia, to investigate the reports of destitution among the Indians on the reservation, and to supply them, if necessary, with food and clothing.

Chatelup, the largest brass founder in Canada, who died last week, left most of his fortune, amounting to $500,000, to his employes. His 500 workmen receive $400 apiece, while three foremen are appointed to carry on the business.

FORTY LIVES LOST.

An Immense Volume of Water Released from an Artificial Lake, Carrying Disaster in Its Path.

A special from Prescott, Arizona, dated the 23, says: The fine large storage dam built across the Hassayampa River by the Walnut Grove Water Storage Company two years ago at a cost of $300,000, gave way this morning under the pressure of the heavy flood, and swept every thing before it. Forty persons are known to have lost their lives. As the town of Wickenburg, thirty miles below the dam, was on the same stream great fears are entertained for the safety of that town, but as there is no telegraphic communication no news will be obtainable of its fate until to-morrow at least. The service dam of the company is located fifteen miles below the reservoir, and fifteen miles of flume just approaching completion was also swept away, although the company has spent over $800,000 on the enterprise of storing the water. The hydraulic mining machine had arrived, and they expected to commence operations next week. The dam which held the water back was 110 feet long at the base and 400 feet at the top. It was 110 feet thick at the base and ten feet at the top, forming a lake three miles in length by three-fourths of a mile wide and 110 feet deep. Lieut. Brodie, in charge of the work, was absent at Phoenix, superintending the shipment of the machinery to the works, and was saved. Of those known to have been drowned were J. Haines, wife and four children; H. Boone and daughters, John Silby, Joseph Reynolds, Mrs. McCarthy and S. McMiller.

WEDDED BY WIRE.

The Telephone Operator at Michigan City Weds the Exchange Charmer of South Bend for Fun and the Bonds Are Pronounced Legal.

Minnie Worley is the pretty night operator at the South Bend telephone exchange. She is 22 years old, and was born and raised in the wagon city. Frank Middleton occupies a similar position in Michigan City. He is 25 and good looking. To keep awake o' nights the young people worked up an acquaintance over the wire and finally became somewhat attached to each other. One night last week Middleton, in a spirit of fun, proposed to Minnie that they get married by telephone. She consented, and he thereupon called in a Michigan justice of the peace, named Dibble, who in order to carry out the supposed joke, placed himself in connection with the pair [illegible] repeated the legal ceremony. Anyhow nothing was thought of the affair several days, but finally some one suggested that they had better investigate and see if they were not really married. Accordingly the unintentional bride consulted legal counsel, who informed her that her name was Mrs. Middleton, and that she was firmly fastened in the bonds of matrimony. The groom was likewise surprised, and at once hastened to South Bend to see his bride, whom he had never before seen. The lawyers assert that, although the couple took out no license, they are, nevertheless, married, and that the justice is criminally liable for performing the ceremony without securing the license. It is now reported that the couple have since secured a license, and will make the best of it and live together. The only way out of the scrape is to begin divorce proceedings. Both parties are from respectable families, and the escapade has created a great social sensation in their respective cities. It has just leaked out that Middleton was to have been married in two months to a young lady in Elkhart.

HE SHOT TO KILL.

An Enraged Husband Puts Two Bullets Into His Brother-in-Law's Head.

Columbus (O.) special: Richard C. White, a private policeman, found his brother-in-law, Achilles Kell, talking to his former wife near the Davidson Hotel, and shot twice in succession at Kell, one or both shots striking Kell in the left side of the head near the ear, inflicting fatal wounds. Kell, accompanied by Mrs. White, was taken to the hospital. White, at the prison, said: "I have repeatedly warned that man (meaning the victim) whose name is Achilles Kell, to keep away from my wife. I saw them together on East Naughten street. I went up to them and I think I asked him: "What are you doing with my wife?" "I then shot twice at him. I don't know whether both bullets took effect or not." White and his brother-in-law, Kell, figured quite prominently in a shooting affair sometime since. White, who is a private watchman in the east end, went home one evening and found Kell in his wife's bed-room with his boots off. He became enraged and fired his revolver several times. White was arrested, but nothing ever came of the case. About a month ago White appeared at the city prison and reported that his wife had disappeared from home, and that he was afraid she had committed suicide, as she took no clothing with her. When asked at the patrol house, White said that his wife had returned to their home the next day after her disappearance. He charged Kell with being too intimate with Mrs. White, and that was the cause of the shooting.

An Effort to Squeeze Indianapolis Out of the League.

An Indianapolis special says: President Day, of the New York League Ball Club, said: "I am here after the Indianapolis team, if it is possible to get it. We want the whole outfit. It is well recognized that an eight-club circuit would enable the League to make a more successful and determined fight against the Brotherhood. Of course, if Indianapolis goes out, it would force out one other club. By the reduction it would more evenly balance the teams and all would be good cities and good teams. If we could get the Indianapolis players we would stand on an equal footing with the Brotherhood." When asked if he was prepared to use considerable persuasion on President Brush to convert him, Mr. Day said: "I don't care to say as to that." Mr. Day joined President Brush at his rooms, where a consultation was had that lasted a long time. Mr. Day stated after the consultation that no offer whatever had been made for the Indianapolis players, but that he only presented to Brush the advisability of a reduction to an eight club league. He said: "I don't know what action will be taken, that lies with the League, and the question will be discussed at the meeting of March 4. Mr. Brush made me substantially the same statement."

Buck Ewing Will Stay with the Brotherhood.

The New York Star publishes an interview had with Buck Ewing at Shamokin, Pa., where the famous catcher is now visiting his wife's parents. Ewing positively denies that he gave any consideration whatever to J. B. Day's offer of $8,500 a year for three years, if he would desert the Brotherhood and join the New York League Club. Ewing says he intends to remain with the Players League and he is positive that none of the New York Brotherhood men will desert. Ewing is very bitter in his denunciation of Clarkson and the other Brotherhood players who have permitted themselves to be bought off by the League men. Ewing will be in New York soon and will at once assume charge of the New York Players' League in the work of preparing for the coming season.

President Harrison at Pittsburgh.

A Pittsburgh special, dated the 20th, says: President Harrison arose early this morning and after breakfasting at the Duquesne Club, visited the Homestead steel rail mills and other points of interest, under the guidance of Andrew Carnegie. At 3 a public reception was held at the Court House, for which elaborate arrangements had been made. The building had been beautifully decorated and a large crowd was in attendance. At 7:30 o'clock the Carnegie free library was dedicated by the President. An address was also made by Mr. Carnegie. Immediately after the ceremonies the President and party took the train home.

A Scourge of Typhoid Fever.

John Carnes, a prominent farmer, four miles west of Montpelier, Ind., has been badly afflicted in his family for the past few weeks. First his youngest son was taken with typhoid fever and died. Next his daughter, aged 12, died of the same disease, and the other day his oldest son was buried. They have all died within thirty days. There have been nine funerals within the past two weeks in the same neighborhood.

Pleasant Time at Columbus.

Columbus special: There were exciting and disgraceful scenes in the Ohio House of Representatives when the Democrats attempted to pass some of the "Ripper" bills, as they are called. The Republicans attempted dilatory tactics and Speaker Hysell at length refused to recognize Republican members. They became furious and both Democrats and Republicans were soon on their feet and many were about the Speaker's desk shaking their fists at him. When the Speaker ordered them to their seats and threatened to call the Sergeant-at-Arms to compell them to do so, several Republicans dared him to do it. Representative Troyer shouted out that he could "lick any two Republicans" and for a time it seemed as if the session would break up in disorder. The bill was passed.

Shake-Up of the Priests.

Toledo special: This Catholic Diocese has not been in a state of harmony for many months. Bishop Gilmore removed Father Quigley and he was reinstated by an edict from Rome. At the same time Father Primeau was deposed from his charge in East Toledo, but the Bishop was beaten in the civil courts. Father O'Brine was transferred from the Immaculate Conception parish to St. Francis de Sales and again to Cleveland, against the protests of his parishioners. And now other transfers are ordered. Father Morgan, who succeeded Father O'Brien, has been removed and placed at Clyde, with charge of the mission at Green Springs. Father McCarthy, of Fremont, comes to Toledo in Farther Morgan's stead, and Father Manning goes to Fremont.

The Players League.

Brunell, of the Players' National Base Ball League, announces the eight umpires who are to serve the Players' League under the double umpire system during the season of 1890. Their names are: J. H. Gaffney, Worcester, Mass.; Robert Ferguson, Brooklyn; Alonzo Knight, Boston; Robert Mathews, the once famous pitcher, Philadelphia; T. F. Gunning, ex-catcher of the Boston and Athletic clubs, Fall River; Charles Jones, ex-outfielder of the Boston and Cincinnati clubs, New York; W. H. Holbert, ex-catcher, New York, and Ross Barnes, of Chicago. The latter once led the second basemen, and was well known through his connection with the Bostons, Chicagos and the Tecumseh's of London, Ont.

Indiana Prohibitionists.

The Prohibitionists held their State Convention at Indianapolis, and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, B. M. Blount, of Marion County; Auditor, Abraham Huntsinger, of St. Joseph County; Treasurer, John E. Branson, of Hendricks County; Attorney General, Sumner Haines, of Jay County; Superintendent of Public Instruction, L. M. Crist, of Boone County; Clerk of the Supreme Court, C. L. Jessup, of Hendricks County; Supreme Court Judge, Fifth District, J. J. North, of Kosciusko County. The platform declares against local option and favors exemption from taxation of clothes and the necessities of life. A reduction of the salaries of county officers is favored.

On a Strike.

A dispatch from Springfield, Ill., says: Over 100 miners employed in the mines of the Central Coal Company, at this place, went out on a strike. The regular pay-day of the company occurs the 15th of every month. When pay-day arrived last Saturday, the company informed the men that payment would have to be postponed to the 20th, and notices to the effect were posted at the mines. The wages of the miners were not forthcoming, however, and the men went out. The officers of the company say that they had been disappointed in making collections on certain notes due them and had thus become temporarily embarrassed, but will likely be able to settle with the men in a day or two.

A Good Scheme.

The Knights of Pythias of Indianapolis propose to erect a castle hall, to cost not less than $25,000, through a building association. The association, which has been formed, is called the Knights of Pythias Castle Hall Association. There are about 2,000 knights in the city, one-half of whom, it is estimated, can take one share of stock, one-fourth at least two, and one-fourth at least four shares. The shares are $25 each, to be paid in monthly installments of 50 cents. Every knight in the city will be solicited to take stock in the association and $12,000 has already been subscribed.

Three Little Maids from Oshkosh.

A great sensation has been caused among the teachers and pupils of the State Normal School, at Oshkosh, Wis., by the mysterious disappearance of three young lady students of that institution. The three young ladies set out ostensibly for church. Just before the church was reached they informed a companion who had joined them, that they had decided not to attend services. The three ladies then walked away, and have not been seen or heard of since. They all bear an excellent reputation. Many are of the opinion that they have been abducted.

A State Without a Dollar.

The life of the Legislature of Montana has expired by constitutional limit and both houses adjourned sine die. The treasury is empty, not a single appropriation or other bill having been passed, and, although the State does not owe a dollar, some tall financiering will have to be done to provide for the maintenance of the State institutions, particularly the penitentiary at Deer Lodge, until the next session. Both the Democratic and Republican members of the Legislature issued an address to the people of the State attempting to justify their course.

A Sad Scene.

Roswell Thompson and wife, an aged couple, lived alone in Gaysport, a small town seven miles from Altoona, Pa. Mrs. Thompson has been an invalid for some time, unable to be out of bed. When a neighbor entered their house the other night, the dead body of Mr. Thompson was found lying across that of his wife, who was unconscious. Physicians say he had been dead probably twenty-four hours, and that death was caused by a stroke of paralysis. Mrs. Thompson is alive, but still unconscious.

A Boom for Ohio Towns.

Findlay (Ohio) special: A movement of an independent syndicate of very wealthy capitalists has just come to light in this city, assuring the formation of a company with at least fifty millions of dollars behind it for the establishment of pipe lines and erection of immense oil refineries in Findlay, Cygnet, Delphos, Upper Sandusky, and Lima. This company is composed of capitalists of Milwaukee, Chicago, and several from Pittsburgh.

Ben Butler's Bad Eye.

Gen. Butler's drooping eyelid will no longer furnish a subject for the cartoonists. Dr. O. G. Cilley, of Boston, performed a surgical operation upon it, removing an elliptical section of the eyelid and restoring it to almost normal size. It had been causing irritation of the eyeball and rendering the left eye almost useless. Gen. Butler will be confined to the house for a few days until the incision heals.

Into a Baby's Brain.

Bertha Meyers, an 8-year old orphan girl, living in the family of William Reed, in Green Top, Sussex County, N. J., is under arrest, charged with manslaughter in causing the death of the 4-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Reed by persistently pressing upon the soft spot on the child's head, thus causing inflammation of the brain, from which death resulted in a few hours. The prosecution will make an effort to have the child released from jail and placed in a home.

Bringing in the Thieves.

Sheriff Ruff, of Pulaski County, has delivered Jerry Schofield over to the authorities of Peru, Ind, Some time ago Schofield, with James Dickey, a companion, victimized A. Pence and Swasee out of $1,300, including a $500 stallion, which he gave in exchange for territory for a patent gate which they falsely represented. Schofield was bound over. Dickey, who is now in jail at Winamac on another charge, will be taken to Peru as soon as his sentence has expired.

Murder and Suicide.

Thomas Lee assaulted and fatally injured his wife at Bladenburg, Md., and then committed suicide. The couple had been living apart for the past two months. Lee went to where his wife was employed and besought her to return to him. She refused, whereupon Lee picked up a pot of boiling water and scalded her badly. Then he gashed her throat with a knife, inflicting what will probably prove fatal injuries. Immediately afterward Lee cut his own throat from ear to ear.

The Dead Lock Broken.

Des Moines (Ia.) special: The Iowa House of Representatives succeeded in breaking the dead lock with which they have been wrestling for the past four weeks. John T. Hamilton, Democrat, from Linn County, was elected Speaker. By the terms of the compromise which have been accepted, the Democrats have the Speaker and the Republicans the important chairmanships of committees, while the minor offices are divided as equally as possible among the parties.

Wife Caught the Thief-Trap.

A shocking tragedy occurred at Springhill, Mo. George Dowell set a shotgun trap for a thief in his barn. The trap was so set that the gun would be discharged when the barn-door was opened. Mrs. Dowell did not know that the trap had been set, and when she went to the barn and opened the door the trap was sprung and she received the whole charge full in the breast. She died instantly. Mr. and Mrs. Dowell had been married only two months.

No Harm to the Wheat.

Indianapolis special: In this section of the country the temperature is not yet sufficiently low to endanger greatly the wheat crop. Wheat is "jointed" only in a very few places, and in these, also, where the ground is covered with water is the greatest damage. The grain men have received no discouraging reports. The general opinion out here is that no harm has been done.

Another Hoosier Railroad.

A railroad meeting was held at Ligonier, Ind., and organized the Auburn, Ligonier and Chicago Railroad. J. S. Davis was chosen President; R. L. Stone, Vice President; W. H. Dills, Secretary, and Jacob Straus, Treasurer. A preliminary survey was ordered. The length of the road is 125 miles, and it is intended as an extention and outlet of the Wabash Railroad from Detroit to Chicago.

Huston Will Not Resign.

United States Treasurer Houston gave an emphatic and extended denial to about the one thousandth repetition of the rumor that he was going to resign. He says he has not resigned, and has no intention of doing so. The report that Mr. Huston would resign has been such a favorite piece of stock information that it will be sadly missed in news circles.

He Held Office Too, and Stole $250,000.

A Jackson (Miss.) special says that a great sensation was created in that city by the rumor that the retiring State Treasurer, Col. W. S. Hemingway, was short $250,000 in his accounts. Attention was called to the matter in the Senate and a committee of inquiry appointed. Col. Hemmingway has been Treasurer for fourteen years.

Minor State Items.

—A business men's association has been organized at Waveland.

—Mollie Corwin has been licensed to wed George Cusick, her ninth husband, at Shelbyville.

—The Attorney General is of the opinion that the eight-hour law in the State is constitutional.

—Mrs. Nancy Martin, who has resided in Montgomery County for seventy years, died at her home, near Linden.

—Ike Young was severely injured while at work tearing away a bridge across Walnut Fork, near Crawfordsville.

—William Heffer, of Anderson, was thrown from a delivery wagon, breaking his thigh and suffering internal injuries.

—Casper Todrank, a well-to-do farmer near Huntingburg, was kicked by a mule and was afterwards found dead by one of his family.

—Stephen Julian, a farmer, close to Logansport, was found dead in a neighbor's yard. Heart disease is supposed to have been the cause.

—Noah Campbell, of Jackson Township, Shelby County, accidentally shot himself while handling a revolver. He was about 16 years of age.

—Charlie Wells, a boy aged 12, a son of Horace Wells, of Dana, was seriously injured about the face and eyes by the premature explosion of a toy cannon.

—An epidemic disease resembling the well-remembered epizootic of 1873 is prevalent among the horses along the line of Hendricks and Boone counties.

—Daniel Glass, a miner at the Jumbo mine near Knightsville, was seriously injured by falling slate. His injuries are not fatal. Glass is a widower with children.

—During the course of a recent revival meeting at Needham Station, Albert McConnell became frenzied with religious excitement and tried to kill the preacher.

—A charge of dynamite was exploded, with but slight damage, under a saloon in Bridgeport. A widow and four children were sleeping in the room above, but escaped without injury.

—Dr. Herman Wilde, of Evansville, has been notified that his mother has been declared one of two legal heirs to a German estate worth 35,000,000 marks, making her worth about $8,750,000.

—Joseph Hays, residing near Kyana, was seriously hurt by the bursting of a gun while out hunting, caused by the muzzle of the gun being clogged up with mud. He will probably die.

—Thomas Jones, a day laborer of Fort Wayne, has received notice that he has fallen heir to $375,000 by the death of an uncle in England. The whole estate amounts to $3,000,000 and there are eight heirs to share the fortune.

—A large barn, belonging to Frank Cross, in Jackson Township, Rush County, was destroyed by fire of incendiary origin. Four horses perished, and considerable grain and hay was burned. Loss, $3,000; partially insured in Indiana Farmers'.

—John R. Lett, the oldest citizen in Bartholomew County, died at his farm residence in Ohio Township, of old age. He was born in Virginia, near Parkersburg, in the year 1800, and came to this State in 1820 and has resided here ever since.

—William Belcher, of Menton, met with a terrible accident. He was working at a stave bucker, when a circular burst and one of the pieces struck him on the back of the head cutting a fearful gash, from which a portion of his brain was oozing. He cannot possibly recover.

—The ladies of Spiceland have organized a non-partisan W. C. T. U., with a good membership to start on. The following officers have been elected: President, Mrs. H. P. Gordon; Vice President, Mrs. Hattie Edwards; Secretary, Miss Mary Scovill; Treasurer, Miss Ada Fussell.

—Samuel L. Bayless, of Fort Wayne, who has been suffering from consumption of the throat for three weeks, during which time he was unable to partake of any food whatever, died of starvation. He has been kept alive so long by hypodermic injections of stimulants. Bayless was a prominent Odd Fellow.

—In the Circuit Court at Columbus, Charles Shultz filed suit against George Noltie for $15,000 damages for personal injuries. The parties to this transaction are two young and wealthy farmers, and reside near that city. On New Years's night these two young men, with others, were out late with shotguns "shooting in" the new year. While attempting to cross a fence, the gun in the hands of Noltie was discharged, the load entering Shultz's left knee joint, making amputation necessary. It is for the injury that the suit is brought.

—The Miami County Driving Park and Agricultural Society has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Jesse Zern, President; Lewis Baker, Vice President; Fred Conradt, Secretary; Moses Rosenthal, Treasurer.

—White Caps in Orange County recently took William Strothers, near Paoli, from his bed and gave him an unmerciful whipping with hickory switches. Strothers claims to have recognized four of the gang, and swore out warrants against James and George Wolfe, A. J. Beatty, and John Marshall.

—William Milliman, aged seventy-three, a prosperous farmer of Milan Township, Allen County, whose home was ten miles from Fort Wayne, was missed by his family, and his dead body was afterward found in the well. He probably committed suicide while temporarily deranged.

—Fred Stoner, a Harrison County farmer, states that a few nights ago he observed a ball of fire strike the ground only a few hundred feet from his residence in Washington Township, in that county. The ball of fire was apparently about six inches in diameter, and struck the ground with great force, burning for some minutes after it struck.

—Thomas Hutsel was killed in the old McCoy grist mill near Warren recently. In putting the belt on the wheel which turns the bolter his coat was caught by the shaft and wound up until he was choked to death. He was dead when found a few minutes afterward. He formerly lived at Rochester, and was an old miller by trade. A wife and eight children are left.

—Quite an excitement was occasioned, at Crawfordsville, by the continued ringing of the bell of Wabash College, which was taken as an alarm of fire. The fire-bell sounded, and the firemen rushed to the college, only to find that their services were not needed, and that all the commotion was caused by the members of the freshmen and sophomore classes having a fight in the belfry.

—Charley Harner, son of Henry Harner, of Wabash, and a Messenger for the Western Union Telegraph Company, was run over and frightfully mangled by a Wabash train in the Andrews yards. Young Harner, with several companions, went to Peru on a freight train, and, on returning, he fell asleep and was carried by to Andrews, twelve miles east, where, it is believed, he fell off the car while asleep.

—Wm. Miner, a shoemaker, of Carthage, Rush County, went to Greenfield and got drunk. When he started home he missed the right street, and, driving over the commons, east of town, got into an old gravel pit, where he hauled, pulled, and jerked the lines until he succeeded in drowning the two horses which were attached to the buggy. When found he was sitting alone, in his glory, yelling for help.

—Warren Bloom and Warren Adkins, 20-year-old school boys, at Hope, played truant, and went to the woods near by to practice target shooting with revolvers. After several rounds had been fired, the revolver in the hands of Bloom was accidentally discharged, the ball, a 32-caliber, hitting young Adkins just below the right eye. It ranged downward, and could not be reached by the attending physicians. Young Adkins will die.

—Charles Behl, a cooper employed in Berghoff's brewery, Fort Wayne, met with an awful death. He was engaged in putting in place a huge cask, which is used to store beer in process of fermentation, when the wooden supporter of another large cask was accidentally knocked away, and the heavy tun toppled over and pinioned Behl against another cask, crushing him out of shape. He leaves a widow and five children in needy circumstances.

—A fearful hail and lightning storm prevailed for several hours at Brazil, recently. John Decker's frame house near the town, was struck by lightning. The current first passed down the stove-pipe, completely shattering the stove, then crossing the floor on which Mrs. Decker and Miss Florence Ball were standing, it tore the shoes from their feet, paralyzing their legs. Their feet have since blackened and burst and are badly lacerated. The girl is seriously injured. The house is badly wrecked.

—A mutiny occurred in the Prison South and one man, John N. Schran, a foreman in the saddle-tree shop, was perhaps fatally cut by Charles Dowden, a ten-year convict from Vigo County. Jonah Howard, a guard, undertook to reprimand David Hill, serving a six-year term for burglary, and was attacked by the convict. Schran went to Howard's assistance, and was attacked by Dowden, who stabbed him four times with a saddler's knife. One thrust of the knife penetrated Schran's left lung and will probably cause death. Both prisoners have been placed in solitary confinement.

—Edward and Daniel Seek, aged 16 and 15 years, arrived the other day at the house of their grandfather, at Jeffersonville, having run away from their step-mother, in Seattle, Wash., Oct. 19 last. They had walked most of the way, stolen some rides, and subsisted for the most part on corn taken from the fields. They had gone clear on to Washington, D. C., and, returning via Cincinnati, had been arrested for burglary, but acquitted.

—The attorneys of Marshall Lafferty, Terre Haute, has received word that service was secured on W. B. Shattuc, general passenger agent of the Ohio and Mississippi road, at Vincennes, in a suit for $100,000 damages. Lafferty was arrested and indicted for embezzlement in 1888, while a conductor on the road. The conductors of the United States came to his defense, and employed Senator Voorhees, and ex-Congressman Lamb, of Terre Haute, and Jordan & Jordan, of Cincinnati, to defend him, which they did successfully at the latter city a few months ago. The suit has been expected by railroad men everywhere, and will be closely followed as it is the first test case of the kind in this country.

—Patents have been issued to Indianians as follows: Wm. A. Ford, Indianapolis, sash balancer; Wm. N. Garside, Richmond, moulder's flask; Wm. L. Heiskell, Indianapolis, explosive stuff; David F. Cain, Albion, two-wheeled vehicle; John A. Lemmon, Porterville, tongue support; John J. McErlain, South Bend, bicycle fork; W. Columbus Mills, Oxford, adding machine; Peter Semonin, Evansville, railway track and ties; Geo. H. Shoemaker, South Bend, assignor to J. C. Decker, spark-arrester.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

IMPORTANT MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capitol—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

AMONG the bills reported to the Senate on the 18th from committees and placed on the calendar were the following: Appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Grand Forks, N. D. To provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union. Senator Blair continued his speech in favor of his educational bill. On motion of Senator Cullom, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and after a session of five minutes adjourned. The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the extradition treaty with Great Britain. In the House there was no objection from the minority side to the approval of the journal of the previous day's proceedings. Upon motion of Mr. O'Neill of Pennsylvania, Saturday afternoon, March 15, was set apart for the delivery of eulogies upon the late Representative Kelley, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Morrow, of California, from the Appropriations Committee, reported the pension appropriation bill. Referred to the committee of the whole. A conference committee was ordered upon the bill to direct the superintending of the census to collect the statistics of farm mortgages and indebtedness. The House spent the entire afternoon on the bill to organize the territory of Oklahoma and establish courts in Indian Territory.

THE Senate passed the following bills on the 19th: Appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Fort Dodge, Iowa, and $100,000 for one at Lansing, Mich. Favorable reports have been authorized on bills introduced in the House making appropriations for the erection of public buildings as follows: Baton Rouge, $100,000; Fremont, Neb., $60,000; New London, Conn., $75,000; Allegheny City, Pa., $250,000; Hudson, N. Y., $75,000; Lafayette, Ind., $80,000; Burlington, Ia., and Mankato, Minn., $50,000 each. The bill increasing the appropriation for the building at Milwaukee by $200,000 and that for the building at Scranton by $175,000 were also favorably reported. The Secretary of the Treasury sent to the Senate a detailed report of the negotiations for a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y., saying the appropriation of $250,000 is not adequate, and suggesting that the site be purchased by condemnation to avoid difficulty over the question of value. The bill appropriating $95,000 for a building at Fargo, N. D., will be reported favorably to the Senate. Bills were passed by the House as follows: Dividing the judicial district of North Dakota into four divisions, the sessions of the courts to be held at Bismarck, Grand Forks, Fargo, and Devil's Lake, with amendments providing for the division of South Dakota into three divisions, sessions of the courts to be held at Sioux Falls, Pierre, and Deadwood; authorizing the President to confer brevet rank upon army officers for gallant services in Indian campaigns since 1867.

AFTER some routine business had been disposed of on the 20th inst., the Senate took up Mr. Chandler's resolution calling on the Attorney General for information as to the assassination at Quincy, Fla., of United States Deputy Marshal Saunders. Mr. Pasco concluded his remarks and Mr. Hale replied to him, after which the resolution was adopted. Mr. Blair then took the floor and closed his remarks on the educational bill. In concluding his argument he said the measure had been part of the National Republican platform since 1884. It had been incorporated in the platforms of several States. It had been approved by the action of State Legislatures in quite a number of the Northern States, and in some of the Southern States. It had been approved by President Harrison, who had voted twice for it (almost exactly as it now stood) in 1884 and 1886. In fact, the President's hand had been conspicuous in fashioning many of its details when the bill first passed. In spite of all opposition he believed that the sense of self-preservation would cause the bill to be enacted into law. The House on the 20th inst. devoted the day to the discussion of the World's Fair bills. Chicago's claims were presented by Messrs. Hitt, Adams, Taylor, and Lawler, of Illinois; Messrs. Cutcheon and Chapman, of Michigan; Mr. Perkins, of Kansas, and Mr. McCreary, of Kentucky. Messrs. Frank, Niedringhaus, and Dockery of Missouri; Mr. Breckenridge, of Arkansas, and Mr. Caruth, of Kentucky, spoke for St. Louis. McComas of Indiana, Lee of Virginia, Coleman of Louisiana, Compton of Maryland, and Stockbridge of New Jersey represented Washington's interests. Messrs. Flower, Covert, Cummings, Tracy, and Quinn, of New York, and Mr. Moore, of New Hampshire, advocated New York's claims, after which the House adjourned.

THE House, on the 21st, again discussed the World's Fair bill. Each city having had an hour since the beginning of the debate for the presentment of its claims, the Speaker allowed the anti-World's Fair men an hour for giving their reasons why a government subsidy should not be given for a fair in any city. Mr. Mills of Texas was the principal exponent of this view. Mr. Mills yielded ten minutes to Elijah J. Morse, the "rising sun" statesman of Boston, who was opposed to a fair anywhere on constitutional grounds. Mr. Peters, of Kansas, said we were a patriotic people, but that a World's Fair was a luxury, and before we bought it we should examine into our finances and see whether we could afford it. The estimates of revenue for the coming fiscal year were $450,000,000. He presented an itemized statement of the needs of the Government, amounting to $407,000,000, which, with the miscellaneous appropriations of $10,000,000 and the deficiency bill of $25,000,000, made in all a grand aggregate of $442,000,000. In the Senate Mr. Cullom introduced the Cowdon bill to make the Lake Borgne outlet and improve the low water channel of the lower Mississippi River. This bill has been pending in Congress for many years. It provides that when Cowdon shall have opened the Lake Borgne outlet and established a low water channel of eight feet between Cairo and New Orleans he shall be paid $4,000,000, and that he shall receive $2,500,000 for each additional foot which the river is deepened within five years from the time of the completion of the outlet. The following bills were passed: Increasing limits for cost of public building at San Francisco (site) to $800,000; Sacramento to $300,000; El Paso, Texas, to $200,000; Omaha, Neb., $2,000,000. For public buildings at Annapolis, Md., $75,000; Kansas City, $2,500,000; Los Angeles, Cal. (additional), $350,000; Allegheny, Pa., $250,000; Beaver Falls, Pa., $50,000; Atchison, Kan., $100,000; Martinsburg, W. Va., $125,000; Selma, Kan., $150,000; Zanesville, O., Emporia, Kan., Danbury, Conn., and Waterbury, Conn., $100,000 each; New London, Conn., $100,000; Youngstown, O., $100,000.

A DASTARDLY DEED.

A Villain's Cowardly Revenge on a Young Woman.

Erie, (Pa.) dispatch: The eastern section of the city is excited over an attack made upon Miss Emma Fischer, a young lady of prominence. She went to the door in response to a summons, and as she opened it a man with masked face threw a quantity of vitriol in her face and then ran away.

Dennis McCarty, the young lady's lover, hearing of the outrage, set out to find the wretch. About midnight he heard a suppressed conversation in an old building and, being satisfied that he was on the right track, attempted to enter. The men on the inside fired and wounded him, but the brave fellow pressed on and ordered the would-be assassins to surrender. Their reply was a bullet, which passed through McCarthy's body. He bravely stood by the door, cutting off escape by that channel, hoping that his calls and the shots would secure help, but the vitriol-thrower escaped, leaving the evidences of the foul deed behind him.

McCarthy is painfully but not fatally wounded. Miss Fischer's eyes escaped the fiery liquid, but she will be sadly disfigured.

IMPATIENCE.

BY OZIAS MIDSUMMER.

NO. I.

"I've left the bright, bright valley where flowers are blooming,
No flowers are here but the thistle and thorn,
My days are as darkness and cyclones and tempests,
I wish I was dead or had never been born."
While thus sang a lady when nearing the shadows
Which fall after twilight in life's rugged way,
A voice at her elbow reminded her gently,
"'Tis true, as a prophet: Each dog has its day."

For there by her side on a rustic seat sitting
Her lover of youth had returned bronzed and old,
His form yet erect, his mustache yet a beauty,
His pockets well filled with bright silver and gold.
They sat in the garden that bright balmy morning,
Beneath the buds, blossoms, and leaves of a tree;
With sweet gentle zephyrs of spring for their breathing,
Much happier far than young lovers could be

"Come," said the old truant, "let us gather thistles,
And make a grand bouquet of briars and thorns,
Come out in the darkness, the cyclones and tempests,
Come into the wilds of the winds and the storms."
They went from the shadow, but found only sunshine:
Death's nearest approach then seemed farthest away.
He searched for the thistles; she found only flowers;
He gave up his task and received her bouquet.

NO. II.

I'm sitting in doubt, 'mid the trembling of passion,
And quenching my fears 'mid the flames of love's fire,
For Robin insists we must be in the fashion
And wait yet a year, notwithstanding desire.
Oh! could I but quicken his flame to my notion,
And stir up the embers that smolder and pine,
I'd bask in the heat that would give my hope motion,
And fill his soul full of that burning in mine.

I know Robin loves me with his understanding,
And seems to appreciate fervor and fear;
But that is not what my love's life is demanding,
It wants a love unafraid to approach near.
It wants a love that will draw me to its folding
And cover my soul with its comforting bliss;
It wants a love that, as me in its arms holding,
Will welcome my love with a lover's warm kiss.

To-day, as we sat on the sofa conversing,
My soul was enraptured with hopings the more,
But not a thing happened, he went on rehearsing
The same old, old story he'd told me before,
Oh! how my heart ached for a drink at its leisure!
Oh! how my lips parched! how my bosom did swell!
How trembled my limbs! how I longed without measure!
And how, spite of all these, disappointment as well.

Oh! Robin, come love me. The doe on the mountain
Is never so free as thou mayest be here,
Come stay 'mid the billows, come taste at the fountain,
'Twill give thee sweet pleasure if thou wilt draw near.
And ah! Robin dearest! let me thee entwining
Burn into thy soul the sweet passion of love,
Or revel me in its sweet comfort subliming,
And joy in its glory which comes from above.

CHICAGO, Ill.

CAPT. M'CULLOCH'S LEAP

An Incident of Border Life at Wheeling, West Virginia.

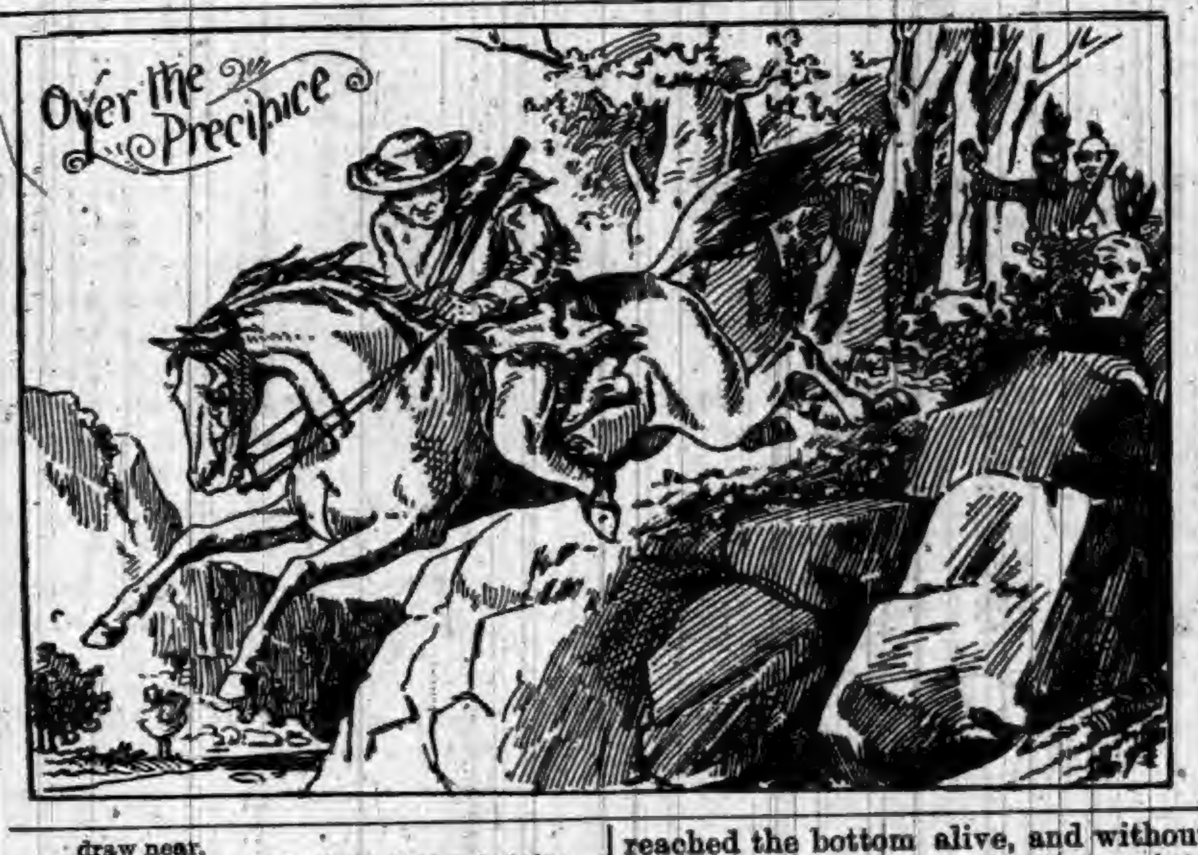
TWENTY-FIVE rough log cabins comprised the hamlet of Wheeling, W. Va., in the year 1775. It was on the far western border of colonial civilization, and, occupying an extremely isolated position, suffered severely from the attacks of the savages. To protect themselves the settlers had built Fort Henry, which was erected on the right bank of the Ohio, a short distance above Wheeling Creek. The entire fighting force of the village, including the garrison of the fort, consisted of but forty-two men. Among that number, however, were many whose deeds of powess and skill with the rifle had made them terrors to the Indians. In the latter part of September the settlement was attacked by four hundred warriors and the villagers were compelled to flee to the fort for protection. Driven to desperation by the sight of their homes being destroyed by the savages, they made an ill-advised sortie, in which they were all but overcome, and only sixteen men lived to return to the fort and defend it and the helpless women and children within its walls against more than four hundred savage redskins.

The history of those days within the fort is a record of deeds of daring and personal heroism, one of which is unparalleled in ancient or modern times; a feat beside which General Putnam's performance at "Horse's Neck" sinks into insignificance, and which, had it occurred at a later day and been performed by a man of more prominent position in life, would have furnished a theme for many a pen and pencil.

In their distress the garrison sent messengers to the nearest settlements. The response was immediate, and fourteen men from Cross Creek succeeded in fighting their way through the surrounding savages and triumphantly entering the fort. Forty mounted men, under Captain Samuel McCulloch, followed this first detachment to the relief of the fort. Every preparation was made by their friends inside to assist them in their attempt to enter. The gates were opened, and a sortie was organized to cover their advance. After a desperate hand-to-hand conflict, in which many of the redskins were killed, they succeeded in forcing their way through without losing a single man. McCulloch, however, was less fortunate than the rest of his company. Toward him the savages cherished a bitter hatred. A fearless and daring woodsman, a dead shot, and a cunning scout, his name was known throughout the entire frontier, both to whites and Indians, and he had been one of the most prominent figures in the numerous bloody fights in which the two races had contended. Among the savages surrounding the fort there were few who had not lost either a friend or a relative by his unerring rifle. As he dashed forward in the rear of his troops, encouraging them by voice and example, his shouts of defiance were answered by yells of rage from his dusky foes, who strained every nerve to capture him in order that they might wipe out the bloody score by horrible tortures at the stake. A body of redskins blocking his way, he wheeled his horse and rode at the utmost speed toward Wheeling Hill. Again his course was stopped by a crowd of his enemies, who sprang up in front and began to close in upon him. As quick as light he turned again, only to find escape cut off by a third band of warriors. The only way now remaining open to him was toward the brow of a steep cliff, 150 feet in height, at the bottom of which flowed Wheeling Creek. No attempt had been made to shoot him, although he was in easy range of the fire of his pursuers, and his quick mind appreciated what this meant. They had devoted him to a lingering death by all the refinements of savage cruelty of which their hellish ingenuity was capable. His chance was a most desperate one, and as he momentarily reined in his horse and gazed upon the rapidly narrowing circle of his foes their yells rang in his ears as they saw him at bay, and, as they thought, completely within their power. They stood gazing at him in wonder as he struck his heels against the sides of his horse and dashed toward the precipice, which they had thought would prevent his escape in that direction. It was a chance of life against a certainty of death in its most awful form at the hands of his enemies, and his decision was quickly made. Turning in the saddle he was encouraged by a cheer from his friends in the fort, and then shaking his rifle toward his rapidly advancing foe, he grasped the trusty weapon in his right hand, gathered his reins in his left, and urged his horse toward the brink of the chasm that seemed likely to be his grave.

As he approached the edge the savages stopped spell-bound at the contemplation of his action. Bracing himself in his saddle and again dashing his heels against the sides of his noble beast, which seemed animated by his master's spirit, they made the fearful leap outward. Down, down they plunged, without obstacle or impediment, fully fifty feet; then the horse's feet struck the smooth shelving rock, and the remaining distance was slid and scrambled over until they reached the bottom alive, and without serious hurt. Pushing his horse into the stream he was soon half-way across, and by the time the savages had reached the edge of the cliff and were peering over, expecting to see the mangled remains of horse and rider at its base, he had reached the opposite shore, and, with a shout of defiance, had plunged into the woods and was out of their range.

The numerous additions to the garrison of the fort and the hopelessness of overcoming the defenders while inspired by such an action as they had just witnessed, disheartened the Indians, and, after first putting the torch to the remaining property of the settlers, they beat a hasty retreat the morning after the event just narrated.



Politics and Justice.

Politically the great Wordsworth was a Conservative. He loved the English Church and State. "I would lay down my life for the Church," said he to Coleridge. He disliked change, and had a horror of reform. But, though a Tory in party politics, he was a Liberal in heart.

"I have no respect whatever for the Whigs," he once said to Crabbe Robinson, "but I have a great deal of the Chartist in me." The Chartists were the political radicals of his time.

An anecdote, told by Lord Coleridge, shows the poet's sympathy with the people.

Sir John Coleridge, the father of the present Lord Chief Justice of England, once accompanied Wordsworth on a visit to Lord Lonsdale. At a certain point in the road the poet proposed to Sir John that they should leave the carriage and walk the rest of the way through the woods. While crossing a field by a disused track, Sir John observed a blank wall at the opposite side, with no gate nor stile, and asked if they were in the right path.

"Yes," replied the poet. "you will soon see." Upon reaching the loosely built wall, he put his foot against it, and made a breach sufficient to let the two men pass through.

"There used to be a right-of-way for the people here, time out of mind," said Wordsworth, "but the land has been recently bought by Lord ——, and he has closed this ancient footpath against the people. I am determined, however, to have it kept open, so far as I am able, and will walk no other way to the castle. I wouldn't be surprised if we met Lord —— to-night at the castle, and, if so, I shall let him know what I think of his action."

Lord —— was there, and after dinner referred to the Radicals who broke down his wall, and entered his grounds without permission.

"I am the person, my lord," said Wordsworth, "who broke down your wall, and I shall do it again; for there is an ancient right of way through that field, a right of the people, and I am determined to maintain it. You bought the property with that right attached to it, and Conservative as I am, scratch me thus, and you will find the Radical beneath."—Youth's Companion.

THERE's nothing like fame, and even the children recognize it, as is illustrated in this dialogue: Bob—My dad's a 'squire and gets his name in the paper every day. Tom (contemptuously)—That's nothin'. My dad took Jink's liver pills and got his picter in the papers.

MRS. VANDERBILT'S IDEA.

An Entertainment of Uppertendom.

MRS. CORNELIUS Vanderbilt is ahead, thus far this winter, in giving a unique entertainment. It was a musical afternoon reception. The guests were limited to three hundred. One man in all New York has the business of supplying extra chairs for Fifth avenue houses onsuch occasions. They are light arm-chairs with easy backs. This was the style of seats at Mrs. Vanderbilt's for her guests. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt greeted them cordially, without any stiff formality, in the beautiful hallway of the house. The usual laying aside of wraps and hats followed, after which the people assembled in the great parlors, which were arranged like a concert hall, with a piano and a violin stand at one end and rows of chairs extending crosswise to the other end. The performance began at three o'clock and lasted for something more than an hour and a half. Only four musicians took part, but that is no criterion by which to judge of the quality or expense of the entertainment. That quartette cost $1,200 for they included the stars of the musical season—Eugene d'Albert and Pablo de Sarasate, besides Bertha Marx and Otto Goldschmidt in minor capacities. The programme was literally brilliant, but hardly such as these artists would have cared to present had the critics of the newspapers been present. D'Albert and Sarasate realized that no single social set in New York could number three hundred genuine music-lovers in its list. They knew that a large proportion of the listeners would be not only ignorant of musical literature but lacking in cultivated taste. To a great extent, therefore, they catered to the audience, and no severe intellectual composition of Bach, Brahms, or Beethoven was used. The composers chosen were Schubert, Chopin, Rubenstein, Strauss, Sarasate, Grieg, Liszt, Wieniawski and Zarzychi. Most of these are ranked as classical, but the selections from their works were of the lighter character, and such as had been made tolerable to uncultivated ears by great repetition. Even at this, and though the pieces were performed superlatively well, there were not a few who found it a struggle to keep a bored expression from their faces. Yet everything was heartily applauded, and everybody said how much he had enjoyed it. A good many, like Miss Sallie Hewitt, the organizer of the ladies' orchestra, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Stanton, and the Misses Stokes, were undoubtedly in earnest; but there is no question that the social aspect of the affair entertained many others more than the very costly music.

At the close of the concert the guests were served with what was called a luncheon, but which might have been termed a banquet, although the company was in afternoon dress and some of the features of a formal dinner were lacking. But there was plenty to eat in the way of delicate pates, confections, ices, cold meats, salads, and bottled goods. The musicians got some of it, too, being treated precisely like other guests, and it was interesting to note that D'Albert, who has been dubbed "Cowboy Pianist" by some of the local musicians, on account of his uncouth appearance, dress and manner, behaved quite in conformity with the usages of the society in which he found himself for a time. While luncheon was being eaten there was more music, this time by Lander's Orchestra, a small local band whose chief business is to play waltzes and dreamy reveries at the houses of the mighty while the mighty feed. People like Lander's music because there is no necessity of suspending conversation while it is going on. The entertainment was over early in the evening, and the guests separated while yet there was time to get into evening dress and go to dinner somewhere.—New York letter to Chicago Ledger.

WHICH do girls prefer, the sun-kissed shade of hair or the son-kissed lips?

AFTER all, why not let the stage elevate itself? Who is to condemn it if it uses its wings and flies?

MAMMA—What are you taking your doll's bedstead apart for, pet? Little Dot—I's lookin' for bugs.

VERY encouraging: Bore—But perhaps I am disturbing you with my chat? Biggy—Oh, no. Go on. I'm not paying any attention.

GROCER—What noise is that in the cellar, John? Boy (after an inspection)—It's only the vinegar singing, "No One Cares for Mother Now."

IT has been discovered that kisses—love kisses, we mean—are full of electricity. Now we know why old maids have always called kissing shocking.

SERVANT—Boy wants to see you, mum. Mistress—Has he got a bill in his hand? "No, mum." "Well then he's got one in his pocket. Send him away."

RELATIVES of the Fifth avenue, New York, girl who recently married a bartender are making a great ado over it. And yet the girl might have married a bar "tough" instead of a bartender.

ONE of the new reading clerks of the House of Representatives read, "a bill to provide an artesian holiday," instead of an "artisan's holiday." "That would be a bore," remarked Speaker Reed.

FOREMAN—The last column lacks about a stickful. Shall I run in a dead ad. to fill up? Editor of country paper—No, indeed. Put in a notice that our circulation is the largest in the country.

"FROM your description of the symptoms," said the doctor, "I guess your wife is suffering from the dumb ague." "From the dumb ague?" "Yes, sir." "I don't think so; it may be the ague, but it isn't the dumb variety."

HUSBAND (finding a package of cheap tobacco in his Christmas budget)—Where's the corn beef, dear? Wife—Corn beef? What do you mean? Husband (in an injured tone)—Why, you know I always want corn beef with my cabbage.

THEY are billed that way: Mrs. Beaumonde—Phew! what a charge. Why, Mrs. Jaw, the famous human canary, charges me $50 for whistling at my reception. Mr. Beaumonde—Oh, well, you can't expect to have a canary without a bill.

NEWSBOY—Please, mister, will you give me two cents to get a night's lodging? Minister—But two cents won't pay for that, my little friend. Newsboy—No, sir. But if I had two cents I could pitch with the other boys, and perhaps win a pile.

"I WILL ask you to state," said the lawyer, "whether you have any other children than this young man now on trial for stealing?" "Your Honor," exclaimed the witness, appealing to the Judge, "do I have to answer that question?" "I see no reason why you should not," answered the Judge. "You may answer it." "I have one other child, but I had hoped it would not be necessary to speak of her. She turned out badly," faltered the witness. "She married a lawyer."

PROBABLY AGREED WITH HIM.

Said the heathen Chinee to the shark, "You'll agree
With your friend, Mr. Charley Ah Sin,
There's nothing so good in the way of rich food,
If it's rightly prepared, as shark fin."
"There's a dish raised in China that's really much finer,
And I think you'll agree with me, too,"
Said the wily old fish, as he sampled the dish,
And cheerfully spat out the queue.

New York Gambling Dens.

It has been a commonly accepted belief for some time that New York was free from gambling dens. But as a matter of fact there are gambling resorts in full blast all over the city. They are not classified as "dens," however, but merely as "establishments," and that was the mental distinction probably made when Superintendent Murray, of the police force, announced that all the gambling dens in the city had been suppressed. Just why these establishments are allowed to run unchecked is not otherwise apparent unless on the supposition that the proprietors stand "solid" with the custodians of the law.

These establishments are neat places. They meet the requirements of the $9 clerk, the professional gambler and the business man. The faro chips vary in price from 50 cents to $25 each. Here college students get rid of their surplus cash around the roulette table and business men fill an occasional check that they would not wish to have made public. The cost of maintaining one of these places is enormous. Liquors are always "on tap" and are free to patrons. In nearly all such places a fine supper is served every night and expensive cigars handed round. Jim Daly's place is perhaps one of the best equipped New York "establishments." It is a brown stone residence, semingly private, and is alongside the Thirtieth street police station. Jim is worth some $300,000, and the cost of running his establishment for a year is about $55,000. Beside this those interested in this establishment count their yearly profits at from $25,000 to $150,000.

About Necklaces.

Necklaces in the reign of Charles I. were made of amber set in gold.

Pharaoh put a gold chain about Joseph's neck as a mark of his authority in Egypt.

Among the Tartars of the time of Genghis Khan the necklace was often made of human teeth.

The Southern negroes constantly wear bead necklaces, looking upon them as genuine charms.

In the reign of Henry VIII. anyone who had not £200 per year income could not wear a necklace.

One of the most valuable and coveted possessions of the Western Indian is the necklace of grizzly bear's claws.

The Puritans abolished necklaces, as they abolished everything they laid their hands on which savored of ornament.

Thousands of people place necklaces of coral beads around the necks of babies, with the belief that they will assist the children in teething.

When the Saxon dynasty was overthrown by the Normans all persons below a certain rank were forbidden to wear necklaces under heavy penalty.

In South America the natives wear necklaces of a peculiarly marked seed, which belongs to a plant growing only on the mountains along the snow line.—Minneapolis Tribune.

THE AUBURN COURIER,

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....FEBRUARY 27, 1890.

NEBRASKA proposes to make sugar out of beets.

NEAR Prescott, Arizona, a big dam burst Feb. 22, and about 150 lives were lost.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR, the millionaire died Saturday. He was a grandson of the first John Jacob Astor, and leaves about 150 millions.

THE new rules of the House, make 100 members a quorum to do business. We presume they also intend that a majority of this quorum, or 51, will be enough affirmative votes to pass a law. This is a pretty small number out of a total of 330.

ROCK salt has been found near Cleveland, and a strong company has been formed to mine it and make it into pure salt. We suppose republican papers will now urge that without a protective tariff, no salt would have formed near Cleveland.

YOUNG MRS. BLAINE, the deserted wife of James G. Blaine, jr. has been sick for some time. She is an actress, and last week some of the best known actors in New York gave a performance for her benefit. Over $4,000 was raised by that and similar means.

CHICAGO is always full of new ideas and methods. On a recent Sunday evening instead of the regular sermon at St Paul's Universalist church, two business men lectured on "How to reach Success." They were C. C. Bonney and C. L. Hutchinson and had a large audience.

THE Ohio legislature last week unseated a republican and put a democrat in his place. As this is precisely what the republican majority in congress is doing it is laughable to see what a howl goes up from republican newspapers, over the "Ohio steal." It is a case of the other ox being gored.

STARVED ROCK on the Illinois river, near Peoria, has been purchased for a site for a summer hotel. It is a huge stone, on which tradition says a tribe of Indians perished by starvation, being shut in by enemies with whom they were at war. This is supposed to have happened before the whites came.

CONGRESS has been wrestling with the location of the world's fair. They took a vote on Monday. The 8th ballot decided for Chicago, the vote standing: Chicago, 157; New York, 107; Washington, 18; St Louis, 25. This will likely settle the matter as the senate will probably vote the same way.

THE committee of congress that is investigating the ballot box forgery of Wood, Foraker, and others, got out some interesting facts. It is a part of the testimony, that the republican campaign committee paid Wood various sums of money to keep him straight and to prevent his telling on them. Wood's testimony goes far to indicate that Foraker knew of the forgery.

OHIO is trying to re-district the state for Congressmen. The republicans had it fixed up so that democrats could get only five, while they had sixteen. Now the democrats want to fix it so the republicans will get but six and democrats fifteen. And the laugh comes in when republican papers begin to grumble about the "iniquitous democratic gerrymander." Verily, somebody else's toes are being tramped on. Funny world, this of ours.

PROTECTIONISTS having failed to answer our other questions, will they try this? If the protected men like Carnegie can, after being in business but ten or fifteen years, buy a great manor in Scotland and build a castle there, then put a million or two into a public library in Pittsburg, and give it to the city, then is it not likely that their business pays such big profits that it never needed protecting? How many of the unprotected farmers of DeKalb county have accumulated several millions in the past fifteen years? All who have, hold up hands.

JUDGE E. VANLONG, late of Warsaw, has been superseded as chief justice of New Mexico, a man from Minnesota getting the place. In this connection Gen. Reub. Williams, of the Warsaw Indianian, calls President Harrison to account like this:

"This time the president has disobeyed the resolution in the Republican national platform, and taken a man for the place from outside the territory--Mr. James O'Brien of Minnesota. Hon. Hiram S. Biggs was a candidate for the place, but he did not live either in Fort Wayne or Indianapolis, and in all probability was before he was nominated for the president. Add to this the fact that he was somewhat known outside his county, these three things have operated against him, and the appointment has gone elsewhere."

SENATOR BLAIR, the long-winded man from New Hampshire has been using up the time of the senate on his 77-million Educational bill. His speech lasted several days, and made altogether 150 columns of closely printed matter. It is said he don't care for the bill, but likes to talk, although no one remains in the room to hear him. Should his bill pass, it will be a clean steal of that vast sum. Each state should take care of its own schools, and not look to the general government. Indiana has taken care of hers, and as we have but few illiterates, we would get very little of the money. The bulk of it would go to the southern, and even the eastern states, because they have more illiterates. Such a bill is an encouragement to idleness and ignorance.

BINDER twine may be taken to illustrate how the tariff "makes an article cheaper" as republicans keep telling us. Let us make an estimate on the "cheapness" it brings on DeKalb county. There are in this county, about 220,000 acres of land in round numbers. Of this, it is safe to say one fifth is each year in grain of some sort, wheat, oats, rye and barley, making 44,000 acres. It takes about 1¾ lbs. of twine to each acre. This would require about 77,000 lbs. of twine. The duty on twine is 2½ cents a pound. This would therefore, amount to $1,925, which is what the importer pays over to the government. When the importer sells this lot of goods to the general dealer, he charges a profit, of say 10 per cent. of the money, for he can't do business without a profit. Ten per cent. on $1,925 is $192.50. So the goods cost the general dealer that much more, making $1,925 plus $192.50, or $2,117.50. The general dealer now sells them over to the local dealer, getting again, a profit, of say 10 per cent., for he too, can't live without some profit. Ten per cent. on $2,117.50 is $211.75, making the cost to the local dealer, $2,329.25. Now, the local dealer sells them to the farmer, and the local dealer must have a profit, or he can't live. Say, he too gets 10 per cent. profit. Ten per cent. on $2,329.25 is $232 92. So the farmer must pay the sum of these, or $2,562.17. So it will be seen the tax has added $2,562.17 to the original cost, And all this, the farmers of DeKalb, who are the consumers, have to pay, being so much more than they would have to pay, were there no duty. They not only, as shown, pay the original duty which the importer paid to the government, but they pay all the added profits of the various dealers, through whose hands it has come. Does this tax benefit the farmers as the republicans keep telling them? Does it "protect" them? Are they more prosperous on account of it? Republican papers say they are. Do they get the twine cheaper because it pays a duty of 2½ cents a pound? Republican papers say it makes it cheaper. What do DeKalb county farmers think of republican papers and the republican tariff doctrine, anyhow?

GOVERNOR BOIES, of Iowa, will be inaugurated to-day Feb. 27. This would have been done some time ago, but the legislature could not count up the vote of the state till the House of Representatives should be organized, and that was in a deadlock till last Wednesday The vote on govenor, as counted now officially shows:

For governor—Horace Boies, democrat, 180,120; J. G. Hutchinson, republican, 173,556; S. B. Downing, union labor, 5,773; Malcolm Smith, prohibition, 1,362; Elias Doty, greenback, 54—Boies' plurality, 6,564.

For lieutenant governor—S. L. Bestow, democrat, 176,131; A. L. Poyneer, republican, 177.813; E. L. Bromwell, union labor, 5,718; J. W. Murphy, prohibition, 1,419; J. M McDonald, greenback, 69—Poyneer's plurality, 1,682.

Henry VanWagner, from near Fremont, is moving near to our town.

Mr. Brumbeck, of Corunna, was in town last week on his way home from Auburn.

Last Thursday Frank Blattner and George Chapman, both of Auburn, were in town.

The receipts from the High School entertainment were over $17.00, after paying expenses.

Rev. and Mrs. Mygrantz are made happy by the advent of a daughter, born Feb. 22nd.

Mrs. Hattie Nolton with her three little children is visiting at her father's, S. J. Locke.

Friday evening, Feb. 28, the Choral Union will give a concert at the Presbyterian church.

Mr. George Roberts, of Norfolk, Conn. was here over Sunday, on his way home from California.

Jas. Robertson will soon build a livery stable, and also a dwelling, on the lots west of S. Moody

R. M. Lockhart has moved the lime house near the railroad away, and will have it fitted up for a dwelling house.

The Nashville Students gave a musical entertainment at the Opera House on Wednesday evening, Feb. 22.

At Smith & McCague's mill they have been idle for eleven weeks, as there could be no logs hauled with such roads as there have been all winter.

A carpenter who knows what he is talking about, says there will not be houses for half the people who will want them. Already every place is occupied.

Wm. Bigler's sister, Mrs. Cary, who is now visiting friends here, will visit friends in Auburn before leaving for her home. Twenty-six years ago this place was her home for two years.

We have read of weak-minded persons being drunk or insane with pride, and the Book of Books, speaks of those who are puffed up with pride and vanity. Prosperity is the ruin of some people.

Miss Etta Goodwin, daughter of L. S. Goodwin was married at the home residence here yesterday, Feb. 26th. to Mr. James Brashart of Troy township. The COURIER gives the young couple its best wishes.

Some of the farmers owning sugar camps, have commenced work in them. The sap was flowing freely, when the cold snap came, and checked it, yet we hear of some who are making both sugar and syrup.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam C. Jackman, of Grand Rapids, Mich are visiting with B. B. Long and wife, and other friends in this vicinity. This was formerly the home of Mr. and Mrs. J., and they were prominent members in the M. E. church.

Evidently Jas. Robertson struck the right place when he fixed upon this place for his home. A daughter has been given to them within the week, being the second baby blessing in a little over a year. Surely congratulations are in order.

To the Auburn correspondent of the Fort WayneGazette who drew so largely on his imagination in regard to an Auburn Syndicate buying up Waterloo, we would commend the reading of Proverbs 16th 18 v. for meditation and profit.

There are to be two gangs of men on the railroad this summer. This makes a difference of nearly sixty families in the town. Every one that can should at once commence building small houses, or fitting up any building or rooms that can be spared.

The great question is settled, and the World's fair will be held in Chicago in 1892. This is what we expected. Chicago is the only suitable place. Central, plenty of room, and plenty of money, which will be spent freely to insure a splendid success. Then with the lake and fresh air no danger of breeding a pestilence.

Barney Zimmerman has been much afflicted in his family from sickness, la grippe, etc. His little child five years old, who had it so hard, and was not expected to live, has recovered. but has lost the use of one side. Mr. Z. himself, has done but three days work this year, yet his expenses largely increased on account of sickness.

The business and ice men are not the only ones to whom the open winter has been a disappointment. Charles Sherwood has one hundred cords of wood on the other side of the creek that he expected to have hauled into town and sold long before this, but it was first necessary to haul in one or two logs to the mill in order to have lumber to build a bridge across the creek. This the state of the roads rendered impossible, and now he fears he may not be able to sell his wood this season.

A. M. Brandt, of Flint, Mich., has been holding a revival in the old M. E. church for the past week with good success, reporting seventy-seven converts up till Sunday evening. The old church proved too small to accommodate the crowd that were augmented each evening, until last Sunday when the new church that is about completed, was hastily improvised with new and old seats, and a surging crowd filled every nook and corner of the church. Fifty-two souls were baptised and received into the church, many leading citizens and business men being among the number. The meeting will continue this week.

He has been a sufferer for several years but is now freed from the sorrows and cares of a sinful world. He sleeps with the everlasting arms of his heavenly father about him, until the trumpet shall awake him in the likeness of Him that redeemed him, with His own precious blood. The bereaved parents have our earnest sympathy in their sorrowful home. May He, who tempers the winds to the shorn lamb, so let the comfort of divine grace strengthen and sustain them.

Suicide of a Prominent Farmer.

Moses Milliman, a prominent farmer of Milan township, Allen county, committed suicide by jumping into the well, last Friday. He had been missed, and on looking for him, they saw his clothes hanging on the well curb, and on looking into it saw him in the water below. The well is an open one, forty feet deep, and it is supposed he jumped in, in a fit of temporary insanity. He had been brooding over the great amount of sickness there had been in his family. His son had been sick over a year, and lately other members of the family had been sick. It is supposed, these things troubled him, although he was abundantly able to pay the expenses, being well off. He was one of the oldest residents, having lived there about fifty years. He was about 70 years old, and an excellent citizen. The funeral was held Sunday, the interment being at Bowers' Chapel. His home was on the Maysville pike, about ten miles east of Ft. Wayne.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

THE patent ballot box over which there has been so much trouble in Ohio, and with which a republican forger named Wood, tried to connect Gov. Campbell's name in a way that would injure him, turns out to be a fraud itself. It was adopted by the state of New Jersey and used at the late elections. A quarrel over certain precincts made a recount necessary, when several of the boxes were found that had not kept correct record. They are self registering and as a ballot is put in, a wheel turns up a number, and the box shows all the time just how many votes have been cast. But to give an idea how little dependence is to be put in them, the register of one was found to stand at 639, while the number of ballots actually found in the box was 498. Several others were found to be wrong, and one box stopped working on election day, and the voters had to wait till an expert could be brought, to put it in working order again. Wood must invent a better box or a better forgery, or he will soon lose caste, with even his Ohio political friends.

Let quality, not quantity, be the test of medicine. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the concentrated extract of the best and purest ingredients. Medical men everywhere recommend it as the surest and most economical blood medicine in the market.

The great majority of so-called cough cures do little more than impair the digestive functions and create bile. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the contrary, while it cures the cough, does not interfere with the functions of either stomach or liver.

I have used Ayer's Pills for the past 30 years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed."—T. P. Bonner, Chester, Pa. Ayer's Pills are sold by all druggists.

The Dispatch seems to think it compliments Blaine by comparing him to Bismarck. But Bismarck, as a statesman, is the embodiment of every un-American. The less Blaine resembles the old chancellor, the more fit will he be for the place he occupies.

Brown & Culbertson have a car-load of binder twine now stored in their room, and will likely have more. They sold seventeen tons last year, and will likely do much better this year. They get their stock in early so as to give farmers the twine at prices as low as possible.

The firemen's hop was fairly well patronized Friday evening, although the cold snap and the rather poor health of the community kept some at home. Still they had a pleasant meeting, and kept up the festivities to about midnight. The music was excellent, being furnished by Freygang's band from Angola. They know how to fiddle, etc.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give a literary and musical entertainment at the Opera House on the evening of March 4, at which they will present the popular "Queen of Fame." They are giving this a good deal of attention and hard labor, and we hope our people will bear it in mind, and give them a full attendance.

MARRIED: At the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. H. A. Sawyers, of the Presbyterian church, on Thursday, Feb. 20, 1890. Mr. Frank Grambling to Miss Della M. Speer, both of Auburn. We presume the young couple will settle down in Auburn and make this their home, as we believe Mr. Grambling is employed in some of the factories here.

Are you all out of sorts, "this Spring" do you need a tonic; take Loose's Extract of Red Clover, it has no equal. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Frank Lahnum has quit the dray business and is now clerking for Ed. Bishop. Frank has had some experience in this line, and will, no doubt, prove himself a valuable man for Mr. Bishop.

Geo. Grund and Ed. Bishop traded rooms in the Farmers' Bank building last Thursday. Grund's room was too large for a barber shop and Bishop's too small for his tobacco store, so the change made it convenient for both. The way the boys handled goods one would think the building was on fire.

O. P. Learned, now a resident of Hamilton, was down here on business last week. He is now engaged in business there, being in the implement trade with Mr. Hammond. But he still retains his farms in Franklin township, and with 350 acres of splendid land, all in good shape, our impression is that O. P. will winter through all right.

The old-time DeKalb freinds of Albert Draggoo will regret to hear of his continued poor health at his present home at Allen Creek, Mich. He has some sort of fever sore, that is sapping his life. We regret all the more, to hear of his misfortunes, as he is honorable in keeping up his subscription. We have had subscribers who could die and not be missed in that regard.

Last week the prohibitionists had a state meeting at Indianapolis. Mr. Eckhart and J. W. Baxter went from here, and I. N. Fisher Morris Widney, Mr. Warrick and George Quince went along to do the singing. They opened the eyes of the convention when they "warbled" so the daily papers state. J. W. Baxter was made committeeman from this, the Twelfth district, on the permanent organization.

The Hicksville News has this: The frame house in which Hon. A. P. Edgerton resides at Hicksville was built just fifty years ago. It is the oldest house in the village, 40x100 feet, and is well preserved, being still one of the best and most commodius residences in the city. All of Mr. Edgerton's as well as John Ainsworth's children can point to that house as their birth place.

We repeat to the Waterloo Press, that the new school books are as good as the old ones, and if he wants to he can show wherein they fail. Our belief is they fail only in a lack of that per cent. which so sticks in his crop. Of course no book is perfect. We can find flaws in the old and the new. But the new cost very much less, only a little more than a half. A full set of the books in use would cost at the old rates $6.05, and at the new $3.35, or but a little more than half. As to per cent of profit: A dealer who gets a small geography of the old kind for 35 cents and sells it for 50 makes 43 per cent. If he gets a large geography for 80 cents and sell it for $1.10 he makes 37½ per cent. Some dealers have sold higher. But 35 cents and 80 cents were the prices stipulated in the contract of May 1885, above which the houses could not go, though they might sell to us cheaper. Then the booksellers were to sell at 50 cents for the small one and $1.10 for the large one. But, to use a scriptural idea, our opinion is that Bro. Willis don't care so much for "the law as for the profits."

Last Saturday Ira Brandon, of the north end grocery, had occasion to go to Sam. Buss' carpenter shop on Van Buren street, and thought he would ride his bycicle. But when about half way he found the road too rough for easy going, so he dismounted and pulled his machine along by hand the rest of the distance. When he neared the shop, the men at work there saw the approach, and began to hoot, and jest him about leading his colt. Mr. B., replied that it was necessary to break a colt before riding it. He set the cycle up against the shop and went in on his errand. While Mr. Buss was busily talking to him, Jim. Pearce stepped out at the back door and Ora Brandon went up stairs over the shop and opened the upper door, and lowered a rope which was fastened to the "machine" by Jim., and in less time than it takes to tell it, Mr. Brandon's "colt" was quietly feeding on shavings in the loft. The men were all at work again in a few minutes, not causing the least suspicion of perpetrating a joke. Mr. Brandon started to get his steed to go home, but, alas! it had tired of post hay, and gone for higher pastures. The men went out to look for it, but it could not be found, so Mr. Brandon concluded that some one had stolen it, and started home on foot, and was about to issue warrants for the arrest of the guilty party, when two of the shop men came up, one on each side of the "colt," and delivered the property over to Mr. Brandon, at the same time explaining the joke in full. The boys each smoked a cigar and went away smiling.

Mrs. W. H. Keeran is getting over her severe attack of the grip. But she was not able to attend the funeral of her grandmother recently deceased at Hicksville. Her sister at that place, is reported quite low.

Marshal Picker and Joe Pfeffel got out the road scraper Saturday and tried it on the streets. It was pretty hard work, but the big team had hold of it and it had to go. It will help the streets for awhile, at least.

Rev. H. A. Sawyers is at Ft. Wayne this week assisting Rev. J. M. Boggs of the Third Presbyterian church at that place. It may be that he will be detained there all the week. In that case Mr. Boggs will fill the appointment here and to Waterloo.

The Busy Bee Society will meet next Saturday afternoon at the lecture room at half past two o'clock. As that will be the time for their annual mite-box opening, all holding mite-boxes are requested to bring them to said meeting. Birthday box will also be opened.

As one of the evidences that business is starting into life again, we notice that last Saturday afternoon Albert Robbins, cashier of the Farmers Bank paid out over $300 in silver dollars, the most of which went to pay off the hands in the various factories. And the silver dollar is pretty convenient in spite of all the objections urged against it a few years ago. They are always good as subscription to the COURIER.

The Lutherans of Sedan church held a donation for their pastor, Rev. Pattee, at the residence of H. S. Hine last Friday. There were thirty-three present who did justice to a very fine dinner brought in by the guests. Singing, prayer and a short address by the pastor followed the dinner, after which all enjoyed a social chat. The donation consisted of $5.00 in money, and a variety of groceries, produce, etc., all amounting to $25.00.

Our readers will be interested to hear that Wm. H. Jackman, a well known resident of Smithfield, has moved with his family to Oklahoma, where he purchased a farm last summer. His claim lies eight miles south of Oklahoma City, But the nearest railway town is Moore, only a mile from their residence. This will give the benefits of civilization even in that new and suddenly settled territory. We hope to hear of their prosperity.

Frank Scholes, our feeble friend from St. Joe, was in town Monday. He has been at Huntington for a number of years, as he was one of the chief engineers in the work of constructing the famous Little River ditch. He has since been engaged in railroad contracting work, and is still following that. He was recently offered the position of bridge inspector for the Wabash road, at a good salary. He has lately built a good house at St. Joe and will again make that his home.

One of our business men took his four-year-old son up into the temperance billiard hall, to keep him quiet while he rolled the ivory awhile. At a point where the game was the most interesting he was suddenly kissed off by the little boy sticking his head out of the window, and exclaiming, "mamma, papa is up here playing marbles." Nobody knows how the game ended, but the little boy will often wonder after this why his pap don't take him along when he goes to "play marbles."

There is a very good article on "The American Flag" in the Butler Record. The writer is evidently well posted, and seems besides, to agree with the COURIER that "it is better to understand our own flag than that of some other country." That is, we take it, a sly dig at those non American politicians who last year peddled the British flag over this country in the interest of Ben. Harrison. But we dissent when it comes to the rattlesnake part of the article. We don't believe that "the rattlesnake makes her abode only in the impenetrable rocks." How could "she" penetrate these "impenetrable" rocks?

"Bring your lantern with you," were the parting words of an irate father to an Auburn man who yet wears a youthful bloom. This young man attended a country literary recently, and became infatuated with the bright smiles of one of the fair maidens, and asked to see her safely home, and as he is a young man of good standing, combined with noble traits of character and of a good family, she accepted his company and he her papa's lantern. The old ruralist and his better half were left to hunt their way home through the mud and pitch darkness. The farmer came to town the next day, sought out the y. m. and had a secret interview with him, and by the expression of their countenances, serious matters must have been talked of, and as the old man walked away, his mental ejaculations must have been something like this:

When you come to court Mariar,
Bring your lantern and your fire,
Or you'll get booted higher,
Than the highest of my ire.

As the Dispatch is pleased with speaker Reed's gag rule plan, it ought to publish what Reed said in 1875. Also what Garfield, Blaine, Hawley, Conger and other republicans then said. The boot was then on the other foot. But it don't take a republican long to flop.

The groundhog is surely a trump this year and is keeping his word. The next sign, says the weather prophets, is this: If March comes in like a lamb, it goes out like a lion, and if it comes in like a lion it goes out like a lamb. Saturday is the day, so make a note of it.

Our people should remember the charity ball at Garrett, this, Thursday evening by the order of the Conductors. A free train to all holding tickets to the, ball will carry passengers from the Lake Shore depot at Auburn, leaving here at 7:30 p m. and returning, leave Garrett, at 12:30 a. m. Tickets are $1, and the cause a good one.

S. R. Heberling, of the Foundry & Machine Works here, drew the second prize at J. E. Beugnot's sample room, it being a valuable cigar set. No. 9 was the lucky ticket. Now as Mr. H. enjoys a good smoke about as well as anyone, he should smoke the "Golden Rule," made by our own enterprising young men, the Kessler Brothers.

The social at the M. E. church Friday evening was well attended. In fact all these socials are becoming popular. Even if we did not care for the good cause they represent, yet taking a business view of it, very few fail to see where or how, they can get a good meal for less than fifteen cents. Then there are the pleasant social features, that are always attractive.

There will be no better or more worthy entertainment at Auburn this year, than the "Queen of Fame" given by some of our most talented ladies, at the Opera House next Tuesday evening. The proceeds will go to pay for the Presbyterian parsonage. But all will get the worth of their money. Reserved seats at Robbins & McCord's, 25 cents. Admission 20c. Children 15 cents.

The Lagrange Democrat says that Co. Supt. Machan, of that county, who has been opposing the new school books, turns out to be the paid agent of Van Antwerp, Bragg & Co., A. S. Barnes & Co., and Donnahue & Hennebery, from all of whom he gets a percentage for all sales he makes of books and furniture. A trustee has made this charge before the county commissioners who meet next week, and asks the board to turn the superintendent out of office if the charges are proved. He claims he can prove every word in the complaint. As the law plainly forbids a county superintendent from acting as agent for any school books or school furniture, Machan is in a close corner. How many other school officers and dealers, are there, whose opposition to cheap school books can be traced to a love for the profits?

Mrs. Frank Rose was over from Garrett this week.

Meetings are still in progress at the Baptist church and Church of God.

The L. L. C. will meet Saturday with Mrs. Davenport. Subject of lesson, Theban and Spartan Supremacy, Mabel Hartman, leader; Sketch of Leonidas, by Miss McTigh, Synopsis of "Looking Backward," by Alza Ralston.

The Angola Herald is engaging in the exciting business of trotting out democratic candidates for DeKalb county. If democrats in Steuben have any spare energy, they might use it up on their own great minority. We have a candidate boomer of our own, one that has been in business constantly since November 1888.

F. J. Yesbera met a traveling man the other day who had not heard of the "grippe." When Mr. Yesbera mentioned the disease, the man thought it was something to sell, and said he had none of it. This must be the man who writes the patent original editorials for our own republican papers, to show how taxing a thing makes it cheaper.

Since moving into their new room the Bauer Bro's are doing better than in their old stand, and are always offering some new attractions to their business. They are going to try the auction sale for awhile, their first sale will be Saturday afternoon and evening of this week, and will sell hardware, tinware, glassware, household goods, notions, etc.

P. T. BARNUM has refused an offer of $20,000 for a book on Europe.

LAST year Germany granted only 3,921 patents, against England's 9,779, and 20,420 in the United States.

A PENNSYLVANIA newspaper reports that a young girl at West Chester, that State, has utilized one of her finger-nails as a pen.

THERE are only five workingmen justices of the peace in Great Britain. Three of them are in England and two in Scotland.

A GREAT flight of locusts, calculated to have covered about 2,000 square miles, lately passed across the Red Sea from the African to the Arabian shore.

A MICHIGAN farmer claims to have saved his large flock of sheep from the dogs by putting bells on each one. When the sheep get frightened and run, the bells play a grand march and the dogs scamper off.

THE Armours, in Chicago, did a business of $60,000,000 last year, $5,000,000 in excess of 1888. Six thousand men were employed, and paid $3,000,000. The firm killed 1,200,000 hogs, 600,000 cattle, and 250,000 sheep.

"IF every human being in the American continent were to be taken out of existence," said the late Prof. Asa Gray, "and the whole work of his hands were cleared away, so that no trace remained, subsequent historians could prove that the Caucasian race existed by the flowers that would be found growing here."

A FARMER living in the southern part of Douglas County, Kansas, has discovered a vein of marble and granite about thirty feet in thickness and about twenty-five feet below the surface. Successive strata developed different colors, beginning with a mottled gray and running through a bluish, pink, blue, red, and clear white.

THE Pope is sharp. When one of the Boulangist agents asked him to cast the influence of the Vatican in favor of the brave general and his cause, the old Pontiff answered gently: "The Papacy has often been involved in tragedy, now and then in comedy, but never compromised in an entr'act." The Boulangist took his hat and departed.

PAUL WHITE, a prosperous Colorado ranchman, about a month ago advertised for a wife, giving an accurate description of himself and his surroundings, etc. His mail has been so heavy ever since that it has been necessary to put it in barrels at the postoffice, and Mr. White was compelled to bring his farm wagon to town to haul it home. He has not yet made a selection.

A DANIEL has come to judgment in Montreal, where a man has been condemned to pay the sum of $1 as damages for having called upon a person in a factory with a view of collecting a debt. The court held that the domicile of the debtor is the proper place at which to demand money that is owing. It further declared that to ask on the street for money that is due constitutes an assault.

WE observe that somebody has been writing to the Philadelphia Press to inquire the names of the six most famous diamonds in the world. It is always wise when one is in search of knowledge to apply to headquarters. Why, then, did not this curious person, instead of sending a letter to a newspaper, address his query to some representative hotel clerk of the period?

PROMINENT English citizens of Montreal claim that the English-speaking population of that city is not diminishing, but, on the contrary, is increasing and holding its own with the French. It is remarked that "men who are about to 'pull up stakes' don't purchase the most valuable lots or build the most costly up-town residences, as the English people of Montreal are doing."

THE sort of stuff that gets into the British aristocracy with remarkable ease and frequency is indicated by the career of the Marquis of Ailesbury, whose ancestral estates in England are now up for sale in order to pay the debts which he has contracted during a life of drunkenness and dissipation. And yet this precious youth is the patron of twenty-one church livings, though he is debarred from the English turf for dishonesty.

ROME newspapers describe a duel between two peasants near Ventimiglia. They were neighbors and had quarreled concerning the boundary line between their little farms. One challenged the other to fight with weapons of his own choosing. Muskets were selected. Early in the morning the men went to the village wood, took their places at a distance of fifty feet, and, at a signal from the challenger, fired simultaneously. Each was mortally wounded and died on the field within a few minutes.

THE human family to-day consists of about 1,450,000,000 individuals. In Asia, where man was first planted, there are now about 800,000,000, or an average of 120 to the square mile. In Europe there are 320,000,000, averaging 100 to the square mile. In Africa there are 210,000,000. In America, North and South, there are 110,000,000, relatively, thinly scattered, and recent. In the islands, large and small, probably 10,000,000. The extremes of the white and black are as 5 to 3, the remaining 700,000,000 being intermediate brown and tawny.

IT is always best to avoid danger if possible, therefore there is one rule which ought to be taught in every school in the United States, and that is—never lift a wire off the ground. As long as it is on the ground it is harmless, no matter what pressure may be on it. The moment it leaves the ground it may be dangerous. If it is in the way of traffic you can safely pull it across the street with your foot, then put your foot on it and hold it on the ground and it cannot hurt you, but do not lift it. Never touch a wire tied on a pole. It may not be dangerous, but it is like the unloaded gun, it may kill you.

INTERESTING statistics gathered by a prominent English physician indicate that consumption is very greatly promoted by a damp soil, and its presence has been abated, even to the extent of 40 per cent., where suitable drainage has been introduced. Researches of other physicians, including the well-known Dr. Bowditch, of Massachusetts, confirm this conclusion and determine that the amount of moisture in the soil is a fair criterion of the proportion of consumption among the residents. Local causes are becoming more and more disregarded, and the infectious nature of consumption is receiving increased attention from physicians.

SOME of the natives of India speak a very bizarre English. One man during an examination was told to write an essay upon the horse, which he did in the following brief item: "The horse is a very noble animal, but when irritated he ceases to do so." Another had to write upon the difference between riches and poverty, and he ended by saying: "In short, the rich man welters on crimson and velvet, while the poor man snorts on flint." From Judge Cunningham, a well-known Anglo-Indian, came the following story in illustration of Indian politeness: "A Judge, who was a very bad shot, had been out for a day's sport and on his return the man who went with him was asked: 'Well, how did the Judge shoot to-day?' 'Oh,' he replied, 'the Judge shoot beautifully, but heaven was very merciful to the birds!'"

A WESTERN pastor relates the following suggestive incident: When the late Dr. Hodge was drawing near the close of his life he spent two or three days at my house. He discovered in my study a piece of furniture he greatly admired and asked me to buy for him, if I could, a duplicate. Upon receiving it from my hand he pulled out of his pocket a purse in order to reimburse me, but there was nothing in it. I playfully remarked that his treasures were all laid up in heaven. He bade me pause to see if he did not still have all he needed for earth. He soon found the change he was in search of and handed it to me to pay for the furniture, saying: "I have from boyhood taken the precaution to have some treasure at both ends of the journey." This simple expression contains the sum and substance of his masterly ctomes on didatic theology.

A Senatorial Episode.

If the police will please look the other way a moment we will slyly slip in the following communication sent to us by a youmorist, who appears to have been marvelously inspired by the majestic scene that lay before him as he sat in the Senate gallery the other day. He entitles his prose epic "A Senatorial Episode." It canters along thus:

Sitting in the press gallery of the Senate recently I saw a Moody Senator Beck to the Gray Butler, who seemed to understand the signal, for he promptly proceeded to Call the Stewart, who hastily procured for the aforesaid Senator a Berry and a Plumb. Very soon thereafter he was seen to clasp both hands over his Vest, from which it was evident he was suffering great Payne. Thereupon a Sawyer suggested that the best remedy was a little Bate taken out of a black bottle, which was promptly administered, and in a short time the patient was as Hale as a country Squire dozing in his Pugh during the Sunday morning service.

"By George," said he, "that little Bate was worth a king's Ransom. Now, when I get the Barbour to give me a nice shave, and take a stroll on the grass Platt and down through the Paddock to the Quay, I will feel as happy as the bank Teller who has escaped to Canada with his pockets full of boodle. Then when I get to my quarters and Frye any fish caught in the Quay over a good Coke fire, I will be ready to go to bed and bid Farwell to earthly cares."

Now, he who cannot see the point of this story should procure a tallow-dip from the Chandler, by the light of which he may be able to Pierce the darkness that envelops his understanding.—Washington Post.

Fred Had Weakened.

Sweet Girl (anxiously)—Did Fre—I mean Mr. Nicefellow—call to see you to-day, papa?

Papa—Yes, and to oblige him I consented. I suppose time hangs heavy on his hands.

Sweet girl (mystified)—Why—why what did he say?

Papa—He requested the pleasure of a series of games of chess with me. The first ones we will play this evening, and after that every third evening during the winter. I hope, my dear, you will keep out of the library, as chess is a very absorbing occupation.—New York Weekly.

TOO MANY VOTES SOLD.

MR. CLEVELAND IN FAVOR OF BALLOT REFORM.

The Ex-President Says the Two Dollar Bill Is Cutting a Great Figure in Elections and He Favors the Australian System of Preventing Bribery.

Ex-President Cleveland, in conversation with a Baltimore Sun correspondent in New York, discussed at considerable length the question of ballot reform. He said that when he went to Boston with the late Henry Grady he had prepared with the utmost care the speech which he delivered. In it he had endeavored to give his views frankly and fully upon the matters which he regarded as of public interest, and he thought that would relieve him from the necessity of any further expressions for a long time to come. But he was disappointed in this. It being suggested to him that some of the Southern Democratic leaders at Washington were fearful the adoption of the Australian system would imperil Democratic supremacy he seemed surprised, as he did not see why there should be any fear on that score.

"I have never looked upon this question, said Mr. Cleveland, "from that point of view. I have never debated in my own mind whether the removal of trickery from the voter would injure or benefit the Democratic party. Ballot reform is right, and that is why I think it should be adopted." He said Gov. Abbett, of New Jersey, and Gov. Campbell, of Ohio, were two of the most astute politicians in the country, and no one could be more pronounced in favor of the principle than each of them. Referring to the late municipal election in Boston, which had frequently been held up as a warning to Democratic advocates of the Australian system, he said it was folly to ascribe the Republican victory to the effects of the new voting law. The law had nothing whatever to do with it, and no better proof could be asked of the value and justice of the measure than the fact that all the leading Massachusetts Democrats were entirely satisfied with its operations.

As to the argument that the uneducated voter would be embarrassed and in many instances deprived of his privilege, Mr. Cleveland could not see that there was anything in it. Nothing could be easier than the adoption of some sign or device apparent for the most ignorant, indicating the political complexion of the candidates to be voted for. He thought the best plan would be to have lists of all candidates printed on one ticket, the signs to be adopted starting at the top of each list and indicating to which party the candicates belonged. The voter could then by one mark indicate his intention to vote for all the candidates of his party. He did not approve of the proposition requiring the voter to make a mark opposite each candidate of his party. This was cumbersome and laborious, and would result disadvantageously so far as both the educated and the uneducated voter was concerned. Many business and professional men would not take the trouble to make a cross or mark opposite every name. This provision would also give the voter who was not able to read his ticket all the protection and consideration to which he was entitled. It would not prevent the independent voter from scratching any individual candidate objectionable to him.

The vital principle of ballot reform Mr. Cleveland regarded as lodged in the "official" ballot. To permit an unofficial ballot would leave the door as wide open as ever to bribery and corruption. An "official" ballot only would sweep away to a great extent, if not entirely, all excuse for campaign funds, that fruitful source of bribery and corruption, for if the State paid all the expenses of the elections there would be little plea to levy assessments upon candidates and contributions from interested outsiders.

The necessity for ballot reform, Mr. Cleveland said, was most urgent, and Indiana, a State most capable of judging and appreciating the evils of the present situation, was ripe for the movement in that direction. In the last Presidential campaign this virus of corruption of the voter had passed largely into the rural districts of New York, and thousands of voters who never had before cast any but an honest ballot had yielded to temptation, and for two-dollar bills voted against their own convictions. If not arrested by legislation it would be much worse at the next general election. The area of bribery and corruption would increase, the taking of bribes would double in numbers and in price, and the corruption funds would inevitably work to greater and greater proportions. Reducing the opportunities for bribery as far as possible to a minimum would result in drawing party lines closer than ever before, for the general voter, with no temptation to swerve him, would naturally cast his ballot for the party to which he was allied, however loosely. He expressed his perfect confidence that public sentiment was running strongly in favor of ballot reform, and he believed it would ere long be sufficiently powerful to compel respect and obedience from reluctant legislators.

Republican "Tariff Reform."

The invincible hypocrisy, the inbred dishonesty, and the monumental effrontery of the Republican party are receiving a conspicuous illustration at the present time in the proceedings of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. Although the party professed in 1888 to favor tariff revision and tariff reduction, and in that way attracted the votes of a great number of sensible but misguided people, this committee is now engaged in the work of shoving up the tariff schedule as much above the present rates as it can without precipitating a revolution. Sugar, of course, is to be free, as that will serve to impoverish the South. The impost on steel rails will be reduced, to please the great railroad interests. But on every other article in which the farmer and the poor are interested the tariff is to be raised, that the national revenues may be increased.

This result of another Republican administration was long ago foreseen. The appropriation for pensions, which has already been increased from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000, is likely to be doubled during the next three years. The appropriations for public buildings, rivers and harbors, and the navy, so far as foreshadowed, are of unusual magnitude; and a regime of reckless extravagance is evidently about to be inaugurated. The solicitude that was felt during Cleveland's administration, lest the abstraction of so much money from the channels of trade, by the rapidly accumulating surplus, might produce monetary stringency and a panic, has long since disappeared; and before two years more of Republican rule have passed there will be just as much solicitude lest the Government may not be able to meet its financial obligations.

The political mischief-makers who are bringing this state of things about affect to believe that, as the money is all spent among the people, the process is a healthy and beneficial one. Such a theory is, of course, simply a piece of criminal folly. But, if it is true that taxation enriches the people, then the party who believe in such an absurdity are greatly to blame for not, at once, doubling taxation, and for not continuing to double it daily, until every man in the country becomes wealthy.—Chicago Herald.

MONTANA WAS STOLEN.

THE SILVER BOW ELECTION OUTRAGE LAID BARE.

It Was a Villainous Theft, Without the Shadow of Justification—Republicans Fail Miserably in Their Efforts to Show that Votes Were Illegally Excluded.

[Helena (Mont.) special.]

Both parties have at last had an opportunity to prove or disprove in court the charges of fraud in the celebrated Precinct 34 case. Silver Bow County, and after four weeks' preparation the outcome has been what the Democrats predicted. The case grows out of the contest for the office of Sheriff. Lloyd, the Republican, claims his election by the throwing out of the precinct, while Sullivan claims the office through the disputed vote. Lloyd is a hold-over and refused to deliver the keys of the jail to Sullivan, and the latter entered suit four weeks ago for possession. Each side had collected all the witnesses it could, and the contest, which began Wednesday, has been interesting. The Republicans have all along claimed that over 100 Republican votes cast at the tunnel precinct were counted for the Democrats by the judges. Yesterday the Republican case was closed, and, despite strenuous efforts, they were unable to establish any trace of fraud at the precinct. Their principal witness was John Anderson, who swore he voted the straight Republican ticket, and that for two other Swedes, who could neither read nor write, he marked tickets in the same way. These are the three Republican votes the judges returned, and with all their efforts the Republicans have not been able to produce another witness who could swear that he had voted the Republican ticket. The Republican attorney stated that he could not find the men who, he alleged, voted the Republican ticket, but the Democrats had a cloud of witnesses on hand. Their evidence summed up was to the effect that the Republican deputy sheriff electioneered for Lloyd, distributed whisky about the polling place, got drunk and had to be put to bed. In the evening the judges went into the wooden building adjoining the polling place on account of the cold. By this time the whisky distributed by the sheriff had had its effect, and there was a drunken crowd about, which made so much noise that the judges were forced to close the door and lock it. Brown paper had been pasted on the lower sash three weeks before, but by stepping upon the embankment which ran around the building one could see into the house. There was a curtain over the other window, as there always had been. Many witnesses were in the room while the judges were counting the vote. The result of the testimony, so far, has created a great sensation in the territory. It was supposed the Republicans would make a better showing. The Republican papers publish no part of the proceedings.

Boast of the Furniture Makers.

In a petition forwarded to Congress by the National Furniture Manufacturers' Association, asking for subsidies for steamship lines, occurs the following paragraph:

"The furniture manufacturers of the United States possess advantages in manufacturing superior to those of any other country. Our business has been reduced to an almost perfect system; we have an unlimited supply of cheap hardwood timber; we have the most intelligent and skillful mechanics in the world; and we utilize extensively all known labor-saving machinery, thus enabling us to produce better goods at less cost than it is possible for manufacturers of furniture in any other county to do."

What is true of the furniture interest is also true of nearly every other manufacturing interest in America. American manufacturing methods are the best known to mankind. American labor is the most efficient and it is the cheapest labor in the world. There is a tariff on furniture of 30 per cent.

The people who buy furniture should read the above official boast of the protected manufacturers in that line and ask themselves if it is necessary to continue the bounty much longer.—Exchange.

The Tariff and the Farmer.

If the farmer will trace his corn to its final destination he will find that it goes to Liverpool, a free trade market, and there the price is fixed. That which is consumed on this side of the ocean, which is of course a very large part, is sold at the Liverpool price, freights off. If he will figure a little further, he will find that he buys his clothing, machinery, and other supplies in the protected market of his own country, which has the advantage of an arbitrary duty. The removal of this tariff may not advance the price of corn, but it will certainly increase the purchasing power of the 10 or 20 cents the farmer gets for his corn. A dollar, after all, is only what it will buy. And if 63 cents under free trade will buy as much as a dollar under protection, the farmer is certainty the gainer by the change.—Atchison Globe.

Gerrymandering.

If there is any party in the history of the United States which is expert in the use of the "gerrymander," it is the Republican. It has painted upon the political maps of States within its control pictures of all known animals, living and extinct, in its mad fight for Congressional power. Now that the Democrats have a chance to restore a more equitable condition of things in Ohio, the cry goes up for Federal intervention, the new panacea for all Republican ills. Back of this there is a sinister suggestion of "getting even on the census," in manipulating which, by the way, this same party has singular facility.—Detroit Free Press.

NERVOUS DISEASES.
As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.
CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic
Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

PRETENTIOUS DRESS.

GORGEOUS COSTUMES WORN BY GOTHAM'S FASHION LEADERS.

Long Waists to Be Abolished—Some Curious Fashion Fads—A Modiste's Novel Utilization of a Bustle—The Prettiest Costume of the Season Sketched.

[NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.]

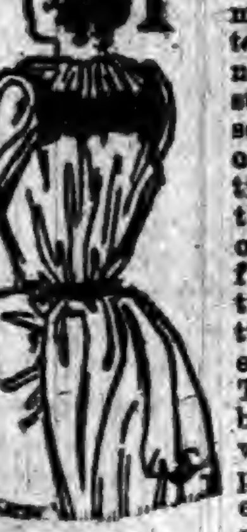

FIGURE I.

THE feminine reader must kindly turn her back upon the more utilitarian interests of dress, and permit me to depict, as matters of curiosity if not of value, the styles of costuming seen at New York's occasions of pretentious dress. It is the close and climax of the season of fashionable festivities, and the costumes are veritable exhibits of finery. The new evening bodices are cut either with very short points in front or else quite round, the waist being very often outlined with a girdle of silk cord, knotted on the side, and afterward falling almost to the hem of the skirts. Draperies and puffings of chiffon round the bust and on the shoulders appear to be indispensable from these new bodices, while trimmings of ribbon and flowers are profusely used. Pompom sleeves, such as are here sketched (see Figure 2), are a new idea. The gown was plum-colored silk, brocaded with designs in the colors of shaded autumn leaves. The bretelles and other trimmings were of pale saffron silk gauze, and on the shoulders were wings of old gold. But the curious feature was the puffy structure of lace rising above the merely rudimentary sleeve on each shoulder. Odddity is thus achieved.

Just here let me tell, for the comfort of those women who have to make their own dresses, of the discomfort of a woman of my acquaintance who is bound to be stylish or die in the attempt. She has just had a frock sent home from a well-known maker. She put it on, and prepared to sally forth and strike all beholders dumb. But her bustle troubled her. The tiny pad felt like a cannon-ball. She tried to consider it her imagination, but that terrible weight pressing on her back nearly drove her crazy. At last she threw off the gown, took out the pad, got her scissors, and sat down to investigate. She ripped the pad open, and—what do you think she found it was stuffed with? That "swagger" dressmaker had swept her room and emptied her dust-pan into this bustle! There were the clippings and sweepings from a dozen different dresses rolled up along with dust from the four corners of the establishment, packed into a semblance of rag-carpet ball and made into a genuine, bona fide foreign bustle. My friend has concluded that for the future a good, plain, every-day, homelike Yankee bustle will answer all purposes.

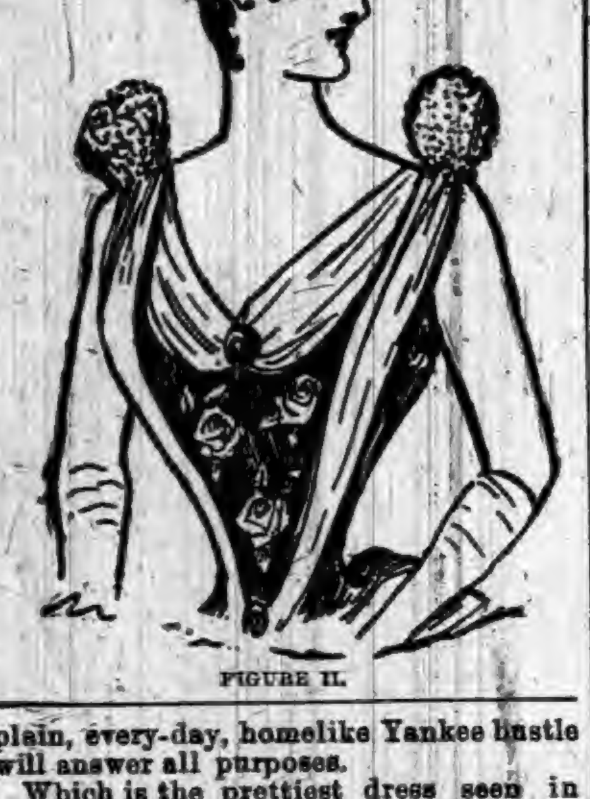

FIGURE II.

Which is the prettiest dress seen in New York swelldom this winter? O, who shall decide? The best authorities would disagree. Surely, a lovely gown of coral-pink faille, with large designs in thread-colored guipure lace. The ceinture is of coral pink velvet, while the only trimming consists of rows of frisse orange ostrich feathers arranged as designed. The gloves are of a pale straw color. Please note the shirred effect in my initial sketch (Figure 1) and also in the full-length portrait (Figure 3). That is a brand-new idea. I saw one Empire gown of bright citron-yellow satin, tight-fitting, and with no other trimming but two epaulettes of yellow roses. An overdress exactly like a—hum—dear me, I cannot use the exact term, but a "primary" garment, slightly shirred around the neck, of cream silk net in exact early Empire design—stars and a broad floral edge—copied from an antique tulle of the period, is to be worn with a band of diamonds under the bust to simulate the Recamier waist. Short puffs of starred net form the small globe sleeves. Still another gown of peach blossom velvet, has the corsage folded over from one side to the other in graceful lines. The decollettage is edged with a narrow band of ostrich trimming that continues to the waist after crossing the bust. The skirt, cut entirely on the cross, is perfectly plain, a narrow band of feather trimming cuts the velvet in a diagonal line from waist to hem. Yet another somewhat resembles the faint mauve pink of hothouse lilac buds. Lilac anemique would not be a bad name for the tone used, as we are getting to realistic terms in everything, dress fabrics included. The gown is that tint, with gleaming train and no trimming at all, the only thing that attenuates the monotone being a pair of pale green velvet sleeves, picturesquely formed and fully draped and entirely embroidered with silver spangles. In by-gone days a woman wearing a dress of one material and sleeves of another, unless at a fancy dress ball, would have been looked upon as somewhat daft, or that she had not possessed sufficient material to complete her gown. Nowadays, the fashion is not only to vary the materials but also colors, and really the effect is exceedingly becoming; consequently, at such originalities we cannot possibly grumble. There seems to be a mad idea these days to dress to counteract the natural effect of our physiques. The tall, slender girl rejoices in being able to wear sashes and hip draping. The little, round one runs to perpendicular lines. All very well when our characteristics are too pronounced.

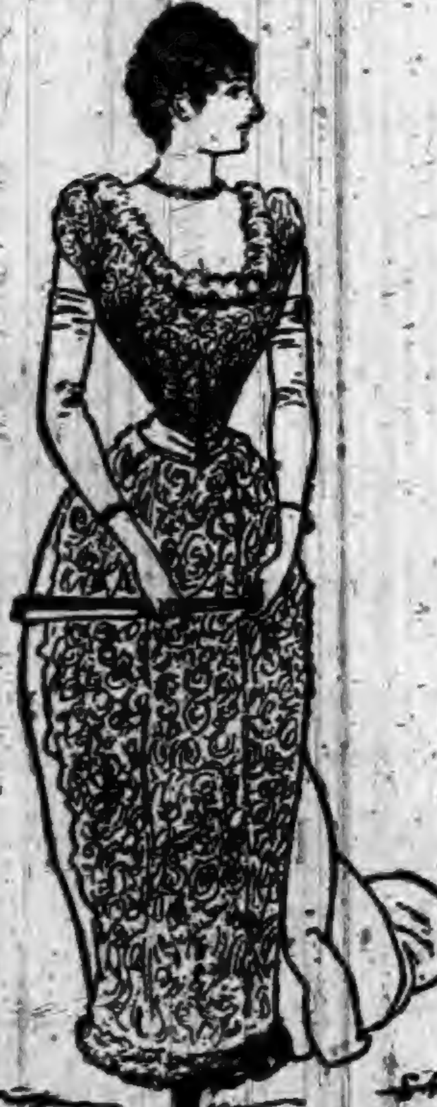

FIGURE III.

There is an evident movement against the long waists which have tortured some of us, and made us look out of all proportion besides. A handsome pointed neck dress is made with a sort of tight-fitting Spanish jacket, the edge of which just reaches the waist-line at the back and rounds up from under the arms till the two points meet and fasten just under the breast-line. The triangular space left in front is filled with loosely falling lace or not, confined by ribbons fastened to the edges of the jacket as they meet the waist-line. These ribbons tie loosely in front. The sudden, ugly, and unnatural concave from breast-line to waist in front is thus concealed.

Hair is dressed most elaborately for New York balls, but not all atop of the head as formerly. See my pictures for particulars. Hair must look as if it stays so without hair pins. The girls who have very little hair seem to be the ones in luck just now. All the same, if you have magnificent heavy locks you can afford to laugh and stick to your Greek coil at the back of your head. No woman whose luxuriant natural endowments prevent her from following a fashion need be sorry. If you can't wear a triple jacket and a pleated yoke rejoice, and don't. If your figure needs such assistance rejoice that fashion permits it, and do.

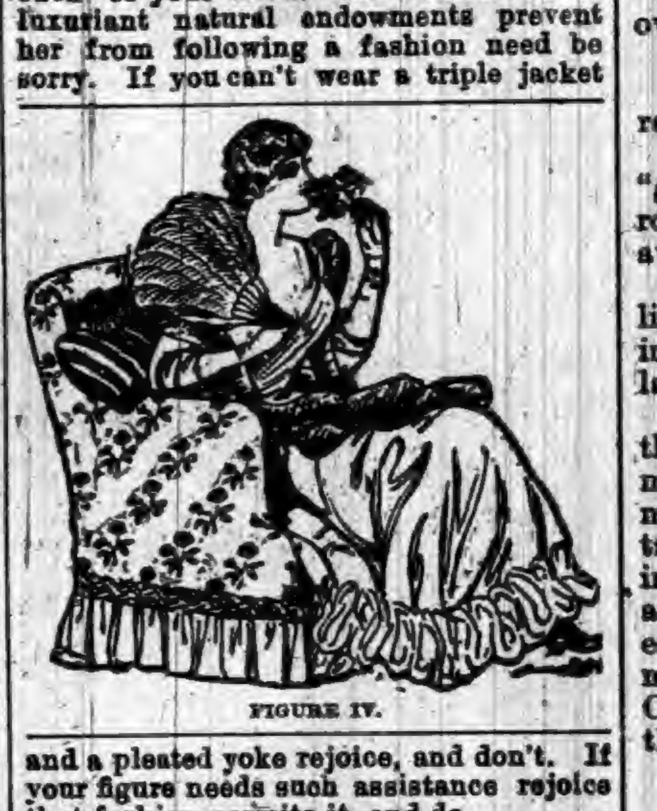

FIGURE IV.

We cannot all of us dress in a low-neck bolster case and look like Mme. Recamier. And when you go to a ball always have some extra pins about you. You can't do your waltzing comfortably if you have to drag a yard or so of Valenciennes streaming around after you. If you don't make a habit of providing yourself with these extra pins, you will many times see moments of anguish when you would give your soul for a pin and think you got it cheap. You step into the front of your dress and pull the drapery down, to be stepped on again every time you move. An awkward man places his foot on your train and—oh, horror!—the hook and the band gives way!—Daisy Dart, in Chicago Ledger.

The Misunderstood Elephant.

I have found among the memoirs of the actor Charles Young, published by his son, the Rev. Julius Young, an anecdote which will illustrate the sagacity and affectionate sensibility of these huge pachyderms. The newspapers had announced the arrival in England of the largest elephant that had ever been see. Henry Harris, the manager of Covent Garden Theater, at once purchased Chung—that was the animal's name—for exhibition in a pantomime entitled "Harlequin," which he had mounted very expensively. Harris paid 900 guineas for the beast. Mrs. Henry Johnston was to ride it, and Miss Parker was to act as Columbine. But at the general rehearsal, when Chung reached a bridge over a cascade which he was expected to cross, he refused to step upon it, distrusting its solidity, and not without reason. In vain the angry keeper punished him by pricking him behind the ear with an iron goad. With lowered eyes and pendent ears the enormous animal stood in a pool of blood, motionless as a wall.

The captain of the vessel which had brought Chung over came in during the contest between the man and the elephant. He had become fond of the beast, and often fed it with dainties. The animal had scarcely recognized its friend when it approached him with a supplicating air, gently took his hand in its trunk and placed it in the bleeding wound, then held the hand up to the captain's eyes. The gesture said as clearly as words: "See how they have made me suffer!" Poor Chung appeared so unhappy that every one was touched, even the cruel keeper. To win pardon the man ran out and bought some apples, which he offered to the elephant. But Chung disdainfully threw them away. The captain, who had also fetched some fruit from Covent Garden Market, came back immediately afterward and held it out to Chung. He willingly accepted it, and after eating it, coiled his trunk gently round his protector's waist.—Acrobats and Mountebanks.

The Bird's Breakfast Bell.

Our pet goldfinch having escaped from his cage, flew into a tall ailanthus tree in the back yard. There he sat singing his sweetest and rejoicing in his unexpected freedom, but quite unconscious of the existence of pugnacious sparrows and hungry cats. We brought out his gilded cage and set it on the top of a tall step-ladder, leaving the door open, and just inside a cup of tempting hempseed. For two hours he scorned to look at it, though he often fixed his bright little eyes on us when we called him, and answered us with a cheery, defiant "Witzah!" We had almost given up hope of getting him back, when it occurred to us to ring his breakfast bell; in other words, to rattle up the hempseed in the tin box where it was kept. This was a sound he understood, as we had long made it a practice thus to announce breakfast to his finchship. Fortunately he had had nothing to eat when he flew away, and the well-known sound suggested seed, water and lettuce to the little empty stomach, and so he hopped down slowly from bough to bough, until he was close to the cage. There he staid for some time, evidently hesitating, until suddenly he fluttered down into his home, having decided to abandon the delights of liberty for the solid comforts of civilization.—American Agriculturist.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

The Snow Battle.

From the signs of the times it is safe to say
That the big white fort will be stormed to-day;
The besiegers stand in battle array,
And the enemy take position.
The drums are beaten, the trumpets blare,
The flags are fluttering everywhere,
And every resolute soldier there
Has an armful of ammunition.

Their shouts ring out in the frosty sky.
They charge—they pause—they waver and fly!
They halt—they form—and again they try
With reckless, wild endeavor.
Fiercer and closer the conflict grows,
Who cares now for a tingling nose?
He that first o'er the rampart goes
Is covered with glory forever.

Thicker and faster the missiles fall.
Hark to the leader's stirring call:
"On! On! Over the wall!
The enemy's ranks are shaken!"
Bravely and blindly on they go,
Facing a fearful volley of snow;
Now on the height their banners glow—
Hurrah! for the fort is taken!

"Do I Look Like a Lady?"

About thirty years ago, says the Youth's Companion, a young girl in a Western city was given charge of a Sunday-school class of rough boys, usually known as "river rats," who had never been in any school before. When she entered the room she found them lounging on the desk and benches, wearing their hats, puffing vile cigars, a defiant leer on every face. They greeted her with a loud laugh, and one of them exclaimed:

"Well, sis, you goin' to teach us?"

She stood silent until the laugh was over and then said quietly:

"Do I look like a lady?"

An astonished stare was the only reply they gave.

"Because," she continued, gently, "gntlemen, when a lady enters the room, take off their hats and throw away their cigars."

The lowest American secretly believes himself to be a gentleman, and in a moment every hat was off and the lads were ranged in orderly attention.

So remarkable was the success of the girl in managing and influencing men of the roughest sort that she made it the work of her life. She established clean and respectable boarding houses for sailors and boatmen, and reading and coffee rooms for laborers, and founded an order of honor, the members of which strove to lead sober, Christian lives themselves and to help their fellows to do the same.

Naughty Jo-ann.

"Hi! Hi! Hi!" shouted Luke Moore, as his yoke of calves, Scott and Mac, sped on over the hard wood-road with their load of beech limbs on the little sled. How they kicked up their heels and pranced and shook their heads in the brisk winter air! Luke could not keep up with their nimble feet, and grasped the yoke as they galloped on down the hill, waving his goad before their noses to stop their mad career, for not far ahead, at the foot of the next hill, was another little team with its load.

But there was something the matter with that. It stood stock-still. Perhaps it was stopping to take breath. But Mac's head was up for a race, and Scott's tail stood in the air.

Puff—puff! "Out of the road there!" again shouted Luke, leaping on beside his naughty runaways. "Don't be—a—pi-i-i-g!"

"But Jo-ann won't go! She's laid down again!" shouted Lena back to the on-coming teamster.

Just then there was a crash. The two teams had come together. The sled lay down, the wood flew into the air, and in half a wink away went Scott and Mac across the snowy fields toward the barn, scared half to death at the racket they had made, and bawling with all their might.

"Huh! 'Fore I'd have such a steer as that!" sneered Luke. "Ain't worth a row o' pins—to lie down at the foot of every hill."

"But she aint a steer at all, Luke Moore!" protested Lena, in defense of her naughty Jo-ann, who lay contentedly chewing her cud, and seemed to be thinking instead of helping her mate pull the load to the top of the hill.

Luke jerked her by the guiding-rope tied to her stubby horn, and Lena cuffed her ears—not very hard, though—but Jo-ann shut up her big eyes and kept right on chewing. She had had cracked corn and clover hay for breakfast, and it made fine cuds. She liked it better than pulling a heavy sled up hill. Besides, it wasn't her business to drag loads. She would grow to be a cow some day and give white, sweet milk for the babies to drink and the grandmas to sip in their tea.

I don't know as that was what Jo-ann thought, but she looked very wise and would not budge an inch, with all their pulling and cuffing.

What was to be done? Scott and Mac had fled out of sight. It was almost dinner time, and Luke and Lena were hungry. But they could not leave Bet and Jo-ann to come on when Jo-ann got ready, for they might get into trouble.

Luke was all out of patience, and proposed snapping a stout stick onto her tail, but Lena would not hear of it. Just then something bumped against Lena's knee. It was a big French sweeting in her pocket, which she had taken to the woods for lunch.

Luke dabbed it against Jo-ann's nose. That brought her to her feet, and out whipped her long tongue to seize it. But not a taste would they let her have. Luke went ahead and held the sweeting about two inches from her nose all the way up the hill, and she had helped Bet pull the load up to the top before she knew it.

How Luke and Lena laughed at naughty little Jo-ann! They had a mind to give the big sweeting to Bet, but Jo-ann looked so penitent that they forgave her and gave her half.

After that, whenever Luke and Lena started out to the woods with their teams, they took along a pocket of apples. They found that coaxing was far better than beating.—Youth's Companion.

A Cause of Much Profanity.

When a man runs a quarter of a mile to catch a train, and jumps on the platform of the last car, "all out of breath," as the locomotive steams out of the station, he feels as if he had won a great victory. But when the train stops before it has proceeded fifty yards, backs into the station, and waits half an hour for some unexplained cause, he's mad enough to blow up the whole business with dynamite. But he simply "blows up" the railroad company with his mouth.—Norristown Herald.

The South To-Day.

The death of Editor Grady, following soon after Jefferson Davis, leaves the South without a single man whose name suggests itself at once to intelligent newspaper readers throughout the country. Generals Beauregard and Early may be cited in contradiction of this statement, but what fame they have to-day is kept alive only by their connection with a lottery, which names them in its advertisements. The younger poet Hayne and Joel Chandler Harris still sustain the literary reputation of the South, but the younger Hayne is not the equal of his dead father by any means, nor of Sidney Lanier, the chief among the Southern poets, who died before he had had a fair chance for fame. Of those who have won repute as Southern novelist, the two most famous are to-day living in the North—George W. Cabel in Massachusetts, and Miss Murfree in Missouri. There are many promising young writers in the South, but they have not won national reputation yet, and, excepting in limited circles, their names are still unknown. Of the leaders left from the war, none of the most prominent survive. Politically the South to-day is without a leader. Outside of politics there is, in all the Southern States, no man whose name is constantly on the Nation's lips.—Somerville Journal.

A Curious Occupant.

An amusing story is told of Prince Henry of Prussia. During his late visit to Corfu his Royal Highness promised to give a command night at the theater. In order to avoid the crowd the Prince stepped in quietly by the stage door and made himself comfortable in his box.

Presently a noise of wheels was heard at the grand entrance. The manager ordered the national anthem of Prussia to be played and started in full court dress with a wax candle in each hand, according to etiquette, accompanied by the whole staff. The crimson carpet was unrolled and hung gracefully down the steps. The great door was flung wide open and the manager, bowing low, received—a donkey which some of the Prince's suite had sent around as a joke, while the Prince sat behind the curtain of the box roaring with laughter. The band played and the donkey brayed responsive.—Dunlap's Cable News Company.

How Ice-Cutters Rescue Horses.

The danger of cutting ice before it has attained a thickness of eight inches or more is great, and numbers of horses have been lost by their breaking through the ice while working the plows. Old ice men say, however, that by putting a slip noose around the animal's neck before it goes under the ice the work of getting it out is not great. The action of the noose stops the animal's breathing and soon causes the body to become inflated with wind so that it will float on the surface, when it is easily hauled out upon the ice.—Boston Record.

Paying the Debt of Nature.

"It appears to me," said Serena to Sylvester, "that you kiss me entirely too often. I suppose when we are married people"—and she slightly blushed—"you will not think of kissing me more than nineteen or twenty times a day, whereas now"—and she blushed again.

"Very true," replied Sylvester. "Twenty kisses a day, I believe, the normal standard. But consider, I am 28 years old; consequently have 10,000 unkissed days. Ten thousand multiplied by twenty equals 200,000. That is to say, this alarming deficit will not be made up until I have received 200,000 kisses. You understand now what is meant by paying the debt of nature?"

"Dear me, yes," replied Serena; "but I never knew it meant that."

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Biggest Cat's-Eye in the World.

A Ceylon paper gives an account of the finding of the largest cat's-eye of which there is any record by a digger of Galle, Ceylon. It weighs nearly seven pounds. The finder was a man who had been very poor. A few months ago, however, his digging for gems was rewarded by finding a cat's-eye which he sold for $5,000. Soon after he dug up another for which he realized $10,000, and then his run of luck reached a climax when he unearthed his large stone, which is described as of perfect lustre. He had been offered £19,000 by a syndicate of local dealers, but has refused, as he declares he can cut the gem into forty stones, each of which will bring £1,000. A short time ago he also found a larger cat's-eye than this big one, but the ray was imperfect, so that it is not more than one-quarter as valuable. His total findings in one-half year, at the lowest estimate, will reach $150,000.—Globe-Democrat.

The Old, Old Story.

A little cough; a feeling ill;
A headache oft; a daily chill;

The struggle's o'er; the man is dead.

"What sort of a game is that?"

"We all sat in a circle of chairs. There was one vacant chair. It was the business of the chap who sat next to that chair to get one of the girls to fill it."

"Where's the fun in that?"

"Why, in coaxing the girl to come, of course."—Kingston Freeman.

March April May

Are the best months in which to purify your blood, for at no other season does the system so much need the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla as now. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling. It has a larger sale than any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier, and it increases in popularity every year, for it is the ideal

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured me of salt rheum, which I have had for years. I do think it is a splendid medicine. I am 40 years of age and my skin is just as smooth and fair as a piece of glass. I have six children, and when anything is the trouble with them the first thing I go for is Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. LILLA CLARK, South Norwalk, Conn.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Juniper Berries, and other well known vegetable remedies, in such a peculiar manner as to derive the full medicinal value of each. It will cure, when in the power of medicine, scrofula, salt rheum, sores, boils, pimples, all humors, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, indigestion, general debility, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney and liver complaints. Blood Poison

"For years at irregular intervals in all seasons, I suffered the intolerable burning and itching of blood poisoning by ivy. It would break out on my legs, in my throat and eyes. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, as a blood purifier, with no thought of it as a special remedy for ivy poisoning, but it has effected a permanent and thorough cure." CALVIN T. "TAKEN IN."

"I used often to read the newspaper aloud to my wife," said Bert Robinson, "and once I was fairly 'taken in' by a patent medicine advertisement. The seductive paragraph began with a modest account of the sea-serpent, but ended by setting forth the virtues of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which, it was alleged, was a sure cure for all Bronchial, Throat and Lung troubles, and would even cure Consumption, if taken in time. The way I was taken in was this: I had lung disease, and I bought a bottle of the remedy; I was a stranger to it, and it took me in—and cured me." Robinson's experience is identical with that of thousands of others. So true is this, that after witnessing, for many years, the marvelous cures of Bronchial, Throat and Lung affections wrought by this wonderful remedy, its manufacturers feel warranted in selling it as they are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee that, if taken in time and given a fair trial, it will relieve or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. No other remedy for such maladies is sold under such trying conditions; no ordinary remedy could sustain itself under such a plan of sale.

For all chronic or lingering Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Bronchitis, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, and kindred ailments, it is a most potent remedy. While it cures these diseases it also cleanses the blood, invigorates the liver, improves digestion, and builds up both flesh and strength. Contains no alcohol to inebriate, no sugar or syrup to sour or ferment in the stomach and interfere with digestion. It is a concentrated, fluid, vegetable extract. Dose small and pleasant to taste. It stands alone in the field of medicine, and is as peculiar in its wonderful curative effects as in its composition. Therefore, don't be fooled into taking something recommended as "just as good." Bear in mind, it's the only Liver, Blood and Lung Remedy possessed of such transcendent curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in selling it under a printed certificate of guarantee, which wraps every bottle. Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

More About Ditches.

Kelley has got mad. He started his boom to get a nomination, but it busted—"died borning." But Kelley in his anger, must be consistent and not prevaricate. To be successful at this a man must have a good memory, which he has not. In his last article he charges me with making false statements, and says "that he (I) says I (Kelley) do not wish any ditches laid unless there is a majority of owners "willing." In that, he does not tell the truth, but I did almost literally copy his language in his first article, the main idea of which was, that when a man wanted a ditch he would go to the Board of Commissioners and have a man appointed to view the locality, and go up to the "water-shed," and follow some stream as far as necessary and look over the country and ascertain the names of all the owners who might, would or should be interested or affected by the drain, and when that was done, if the majority of those thus named would petition for a drain or ditch, then they could get it and not before. If this is not a fair general statement of his first published views, I will give it up. Ninety nine out of every hundred of the readers of the COURIER will say that was his first proposition. He is now hedging and seeing that he has got his foot in it, is trying to deny it. He misstates me again, when he says, that I suggested going into court to get rid of the expense. I spoke of that matter of appealing as against the statement he had made, that he knew of plenty of farmers who have paid $500 to $1,000 on ditches without any corresponding benefits. I think I showed in that article that he made a misstatement and I said I did not believe him, which he has failed to answer, and to prove that he did not tell the truth. I stated that three disinterested men, under oath, had made a report on the ditch, to a disinterested court, and that if any man was so outraged, he still had a right of appeal and a re-hearing before an impartial jury. I brought in this argument to show that Kelley never saw such a condition of things. As to his votes in the legislature, I care not. I said nothing on that subject. He simply lugs that in. Whether or not he voted for Judge Lowry or Dills, has nothing to do with his foolish ditch ideas. They are able to take care of themselves, but Kelley ought not to get mad and tear his linen because he has been worsted in a little newspaper controversy about a ditch.

The Fight for Pure Food.

The aggressive war waged by the Royal Baking Powder Company upon the hosts of adulterated and impure baking powders sold throughout the country is having a desirable effect. The bitter attacks upon the Royal Company by the manufacturers of the impure goods (which are made doubtless both from a spirit of revenge and in the hope of breaking the effect of the damaging exposures), with the official confirmation of the charges which in turn have come from various official authorities fully corroborating the statements originally made by the Royal Company, have awakened a wholesome public sentiment in favor of repressive laws, which means mischief to the illegitimate traffic.

The Royal Baking Powder Company set out some time ago to expose the character and to break up the sale of adulterated baking powders. Having found from an examination of many specimens that there was a large number of actually injurious powders in the market, they brought the matter before the public and denounced the makers by name in the press and to the health authorities. The affair was taken up by physicians, Boards of Health and Legislatures throughout the country, chemists were employed to test the various powders in the market, and the Government itself directed analysis to be made before it would purchase the supplies needed for army, navy and Indian uses.

The result justified the charges made by the Royal Company. Not only were the majority of baking powders in the market found to be largely adulterated, but many of them were ascertained to contain alum and other poisonous ingredients to such an extent as to render them positively unsafe to use in human food. In making the charges the Royal Baking Powder Company did not hesitate to enter into competition with every other baking powder in the country, and it is a public satisfaction that in the official tests by the Government and State chemists, and by Boards of Health, the Royal Baking Powder has been declared to be the superior of all others in strength purity and wholesomeness, and absolutely free from all inferior and detrimental substances.

From recent official reports it is evident that the alum and otherwise impure goods have again come upon the market in dangerous quantities, and their old enemy, the royal, is again upon the war path. In continuing its warfare against these goods the Royal is meeting with the old-time oppositition and abuse. The public, however, will appreciate, as heretofore, both the object of the abuse and the action of the Royal Company, and award full justice to the company that so fearlessly stands up for its protection from such adventurers.

Hendricks county would be candidates will indulge in a fox drive Saturday. Are about 40 of 'em.

Blood vs. Nerves.

Great mistakes have been made in the world, by supposing many nervous troubles were due to bad blood. Thus headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc., are always due to weakness or irritation of the nerves of the brain; dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc. to weakness to the nerves of the stomach: weak lungs is caused by weakness of the parts; biliousness, constipation, etc. to weakness, of the nerves of the liver or bowels; pains, irregularity, sterility to derangement of the uterine nerves. For all weakness, Dr. Miles' great nerve and brain food surpasses all other remedies. Trial bottles free at F. E. Davenport. 1

Dropped Dead.

Physiologists estimate that the heart does 5,000,000 pounds of work each day. No wonder people drop dead with worn out hearts. This could be prevented by Dr. Miles' new and great discovery, the new cure. Always commence when you first begin to get short of breath, have weak, faint or smothering spells, pain or tenderness in side, etc. Sold at Davenport's. 1

Two stallions at Huntington got into a fight the other day and one if not both are seriously injured.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles found herself sound and well, now does her own house work and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at Robbins & McCord's drug store, large bottles 50c. and $1. 2

Two-and-a-half Lies.

The Press last week again shows the malignant disposition of its editor, when it refers to our opinion on the Direct Tax Bill. It says "The only consistent reason for so doing (COURIER's opposition to the bill,) that is apparent seems to be that the south will not receive much of the money." Now we challenge the Press editor to show where we made a single word of allusion to the south. We had not even thought of the south, and the editor's only possible motive must be to make some statement, no matter how false or malignant, only so, he could misrepresent an opponent. With an honorable man, such a course would be scrupulously avoided, but the editor of the Press seems to enjoy it. Again he says: "At the time this tax was collected, the editor of the COURIER was opposed to raising it." This is another square lie. how could he know what we thought of the tax, as he never even heard of us till years afterwards. And he cannot bring a word to bolster up this second malignant untruth. The facts are, we never mentioned the matter, except once or twice in the COURIER, a year or so ago, when we stated we opposed the refunding of the tax. As to paying the tax to the government, we never even objected to it. At the time this tax was collected, we paid it, on such property as we had, in three states, and never whined. It was as much a duty, as to pay other taxes, and we paid it all the more readily as we believed it was for a good cause. This federal tax, as we have before said, never belonged to the states. It was raised for the United States alone, and if it is to be refunded, it should be refunded to the men who originally paid it. But this cannot now be done. Many of the taxpayers are dead; many have changed location; many have lost recipts, where receipts were given. The COURIER is not even "opposed to receiving it back," but will take its share any time. But we are opposed to having the government pay our money over to another party, no matter how much that other party may "need it." Our opinion is the state will need a good deal before its present republican state officers get through with her. In the meantime let the editor of the Press read carefully that commandment that refers to those who bear false witness.

The National Capital.

The City of Washington is an object of perennial interest to all patriotic Americans. Not alone because it is the great throbbing heart of the mightiest and grandest Republic the earth has ever known, but also on account of its material magnificence. All Americans take pride in its beautiful avenues, majestic architecture, stately homes, and well stored galleries and museums as things of grandeur and beauty in themselves, apart from the historic interest with which they are invested. It is a hope and aspiration of all "young America," at least, to some time or other to visit the Capital of his country. The Baltimore and Ohio R. R. offers unequaled facilities in aid of this desire. All its through trains between New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, on the east, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, St. Lewis and Chicago on the west, pass through Washington. Its fast express trains are vestibuled from end to end and heated with steam. Pullman's latest and best productions in the way of sumptous Drawing Room Sleeping Cars attached to all its through trains. The present management of the B. & O. have made vast improvements in the last two years, and the road is to day one of the foremost passenger carrying lines in the country. Through tickets via B. & O. R. R. can be procured at all the principal ticket offices throughout the United States. 9 10

Two Administrations.

The Minneapolis Tribune is copied by the Dispatch, as saying that Harrison's administration is such a very nice and pure one. Here's richness. The cloven foot of hate is shown most plainly when it speaks of "Bill" Vilas and his administration of the office of secretary of the interior. Now we challenge the Tribune, or even the Dispatch to compare the work of the two administrations, act by act, year by year, decision by decision. Say we compare Harrison with Cleveland, Blaine with Bayard, Noble with Vilas, and so on through the list giving as nearly as can be secured an itemized account of what each has done. The Dispatch will not do it, because it dare not. We wait to see whether we judge it correctly.

* * *

So we challenge the Dispatch to state what acts of Vilas were "scandalous and disgusting;" what acts of secretary Whitney of the navy, were "stupid and arbitrary;" what acts of Garland were "boorish;" what acts of Bayard showed "weakness and vacillation," and what will show that Cleveland's administration was "queer and bungling." And then there is a golden chance to tell what there is in Miller's administration, that is so "clean cut and efficient," in Blaine's so full of "promptness and firmness;" in Tracy's so "orderly and masterly;" etc. etc. to the nauseating point. Or, finally what as to "Harrison's splendid and dignified administration," and his "vigorous and successful administration of the civil service law." Here's richness again. Harrison's civil service reform, is a thing of beauty, nearly as much so as the ignorance of any one who believes that he tries to respect civil service reform. An administration that has in one year turned out as Clarkson says he has 41,000 fourth-class postmasters, out of 55,000, is a daisy in the way of civil service reform. And a man like Harrison whose chief object seems to be to give the public offices to those only, who gave money for his campaign, is a daisy of a civil service reformer. Oh, by all means let us have this comparison between the two administrations.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

For March, 1890. Frank Vincent, the well-known traveler, author of the recently published book, "Around and About South America," and of a forthcoming work on Central America, furnishes an elaborate leading article on "The Republics of Central America," in the March number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica are graphically described, with numerous and beautiful illustrations, making a contribution of the highest intrinsic interest, as well as of peculiar timeliness in connection with the work of the Pan-American Congress. Other illustrated articles offer attractions in a variety of directions—notably Frederick Daniel's charming description of Richmond, Virginia's historic capital; "The Music of all Nations," as exemplified at the Paris Exposition; Where Garfield was canal-boy," an account of a leisurely voyage on the Ohio Canal; "Ostrich Feathers," from the bird to the bonnet; "The Pictographic Autobiography of a Sioux Cheif," etc. Alfred H. Guernsey begins a series of historical papers on Frederick the Great. The serial and short stories are always a special feature of the Popular Monthly, while its pictures are more numerous and excellent than ever.

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says; Through the recommendation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in a case of severe cough, after using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors.

Amos Clark.

House Breaking. 870

Mr. Editor: It may not be generally known but it nevertheless is a fact that our home was entered by known parties, while myself and family were at church last Wednesday night. When we returned we found our usually quiet home filled from end to end, with members of the church and congregation, who in our absence had piled our dining room table heaping full of groceries and provisions amounting to over $12, and to grace it all had placed thereon three elegant pieces of silverware worth at least $18.00 or $19.00. Upon our entering the home we were confronted by Prof. Merica, who explained to our entire satisfaction why they were there, and in a neat speech presented to us the expressions of good will, under which our table fairly groaned. We greatly enjoyed this speech until it gradually dawned upon our dazed mind that he expected us to reply. This would have been a complete failure, had not the teacher of the public schools with wise forethought presented us with a pound of "common cents." This helped us out of our dilemma, and enabled us to say at least that we were thankful. We desire to say this in a more public way to make our acknowledgements, and again say "thank you," and as you sang: "May God be with you till we meet again."

Yours gratefully,
H. M. Lamport and family.

The Minister All Right.

There has been some dissatisfaction manifested by some of our people as to the truthfulness of an assertion advanced by Rev. Joseph Neal sometime since in regard to the use of wines and liquors by the representatives of our people, and where these intoxicants are to be obtained in Washington. Some have even gone so far as to question the ability and education of this venerable gentleman and charged him with being ignorant. For the benefit of those who have judged so inconsiderately, we herewith submit a letter written by one of the congressmen, at the National Capital, to one of our citizens here, which throws some light on the subject, and to a greater or less extent, verifies the statements made by Mr. Neal.

DEAR SIR:—Yours received. I would say that there is no truth whatever in the claim that a bar is run in the Shoreham, and I might add it is the only hotel in Washington that has no bar. The vice-president in fact has nothing to do with the hotel, he owns the building its true, but rents it. I understand that guests at the house can order wines and liquors to their tables and rooms. I trust this may set your controversy at rest. Yours [illegible]

If there is any business where the importance of little things is almost every day forced on the attention, that business is farming. Many a farmer knows from sad experience what it is to lose some, if not all his crop, not from bad weather, but from a machine that looked well in a warehouse, but failed to work in the field. The best precaution against disaster in harvest time is a Deering Binder or Mower.

Wheat Wasn't so Cheap.

The Dispatch is informed that its authority, the LaFayette Courier is wrong in regard to the price of wheat. Wheat did not go as low as .50 cents in 1859. The highest prices wheat ever bore, except the inflation years about the close of the war was from 1850 to 1860. The price in the city of New York, which was probably ten cents higher than in Chicago, was at the lowest point, in this period, in 1851, when a low grade reached 93 cents, and the highest point that year was $1.22. The highest point in the ten years was in 1855, it brought $2.80. As to the year, 1859, the New York prices were: lowest, $1.30 and highest $1.65. As we said, there was likely ten cents difference between Chicago and New York prices—possibly 15 cents. Take off the difference and the Chicago prices would be $1.15 to $1.50. This proves that the "average price that year" was not "82½" cents as the Dispatch says. And this is about our recollection of it. We never sold our wheat then, and we were within fifty miles of Chicago, unless we got $1.20 to $1.60. The Dispatch quotes further, "Wheat has never been so low since Buchanan's time as it was during Cleveland's administration, it having been quoted in 1887 at 66⅔ cents." There are no Chicago quotations as low as that for 1887. The lowest we find on looking over the list is 71 cents. The Dispatch is quoting rotten wheat on its readers. In the meantime, the farmers about here, know they received better prices for everything, in Cleveland's administration than they have since Harrison came in. All farmers know they got the highest prices in Cleveland's time, and that prices fell when Harrison came in. The Dispatch does not dare to publish the price lists for the past two years, as given each week in its own Chicago columns. By all means let us have the full price list.

Obituary.

Mrs. M. M. Steel, a school friend of Mrs. Hodge, who returned with her in January from Pennsylvania, died very unexpectedly last Thursday morning, Feb. 27. For many years she has been a great sufferer from an internal disease which she bore with the cheerful patience characteristic of her. Born into the spiritual world at the age of sixteen, she became a member of the M. E. church and has always adorned her profession of faith in Christ by following His blessed example. The last few weeks of her life were peculiarly blest by a strong sense of being Divinely led, and she was led so gently without one fear or pang, from peaceful sleep to rest in Paradise. Her only sister, Mrs. Weaver, of Falls City, Neb., and her two brothers Fredrick B. and Will Myers, of Kingston, Pa., came on Saturday and took the remains of their beloved sister to bury her beside those of her husband in their western home.

AN AWFUL DEATH.

Horrible Result of a Collision Between Trains in Ohio—The Crash Fires a Tank of Oil.

A special from Mansfield, Ohio, says: The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad had a freight wreck at Lakeville, just west of this city. Three trainmen and thousands of dollars worth of property were consumed in the fire which followed. The third section of westbound freight train No. 93 broke down a mile west of Lakeville and the fourth section of the same train crushed into the rear end. Immediately after the crash a tank car of gasoline in front of the caboose exploded and scattered the burning liquid over the debris, which took fire and burned fiercely. On the engine were Engineer John Cowan, Fireman Harvey Galehouse, and Head-Brakeman Edward Miller. All of them received probably fatal injuries before the fire reached them, but when their bodies were found the fire had roasted them. Fireman Galehouse's body was buried in the debris and was burned to a crisp. Cowan and Miller were married and had two children each. They lived at Alliance. Galehouse was unmarried and resided at Doylestown. The oil from two other tank-cars added fuel to the fire, which consumed twenty freight cars and the ties on about 300 feet of the track. So intense was the fire that the steel rails were twisted out of shape and the bell on the buried engine was melted. The track was so badly damaged that freight and local passenger traffic was delayed about fourteen hours. The through passenger trains were sent over the Nypano via. this city, Creston and Orrville. The cause of the wreck was the failure of the dead engineer to stop when flagged by a brakeman from the disabled train. The supposition is that the three men were asleep on the engine and did not have time to jump off if they did waken up before the crash.

A Bloody Battle.

Paris special: A report has been received by the Government from the Governor of Senegal stating that 800 of the King of Dahomey's troops attacked the French force under Commandant Terrilon, at Atzebo. After a severe fight the French repulsed the natives, killing and wounding 100 of them. It is reported that the Government intends to annex the Kindom of Dahomey to the French possessions in Africa, and that a large expedition will be sent to the west coast. The expedition, it is said, will be under orders to act promptly upon its arrival in order to avert the putting to death of many captives on the occasion of the King's accession to the throne, it being the custom in Dahomey to sacrifice a large number of prisoners and Dahomians at all state and religious ceremonies.

Unmasked a Villain.

Chicago special: The Times prints a story of an alleged villain in the garb of a clergyman who is said to have advertised for girls to take various situations, and when he got them in his toils accomplished their downfall. In one part of the city he was known as Dr. Towner, a physician, and in another as the Rev. C. B. Cahusac, engaged in mission work. The Times says he was brought into the office of that paper and confronted with the evidence of his guilt and promised to leave town if the matter was suppressed. He is said to be now employed in Kinsley's restaurant on Adams street.

Lord Salisbury Denies It.

London special: Speaking in the House of Lords with reference to the charges made against him by Henry Labouchere in the House of Commons last Friday night, Lord Salisbury said he met Lieut. Gen. Sir Dighton Probyn, of the Prince of Wales' household, casually at the railway station and they had a very brief and hurried conversation. Whatever passed between them, Lord Salisbury denied that he said a warrant was about to be issued against Lord Arthur Somerset.

Renegade Apaches Making Trouble.

San Carlos (N. M.) special: The renegade Apaches are making themselves known as winter disappears. Of the eleven renegades five or six of them are in Sonora, Mexico, and on a late raid stole sixteen horses, besides committing numerous other depredations. It is safe to say that an Apache war is imminent, and the local police and the military are not likely to anticipate or prevent it. Five Indian murderers are being housed by their friends on the reservation.

Toledo Printers Take a Raise.

At a meeting of Toledo Typographical Union No. 63, it was decided to demand a raise in the scale of 5 cents per 1,000 ems on all work, making the scale 35 and 38 cents respectively; also to abolish the use of all plate matter. The Daily Commercial approves the action of the union.

Rowdy Students.

Twenty masked students of a Kalamazoo, (Mich.) college seized Profs. Ferry and Trobride, bound them hand and foot and left them in an open field two miles from the college until daylight. The matter is being investigated.

Result of Stone Throwing.

A 12-year old son of Abram Patterson, at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, threw a stone at a boy named Porter. The missile missed its mark, hitting and killing a little child who was standing near. Young Patterson is in jail.

Kilrain Sentenced.

Jake Kilrain has been sentenced to two months imprisonment in the Purvis jail and to pay a fine of $200.

STARVATION.

Mr. Powderly Says It Stalks Abroad in Scranton, Pa., and the Great World Closes Its Eyes to Misery and Want.

Scranton, (Pa.) special: Mr. Powderly, speaking with reference to the series of articles he is writing on the condition of the mining class in this region, said that the first one, which was printed last week, had brought him many letters from all over the country. "A man in New Jersey," he continued, "has written me that he will care for one family if I will send them on. I thought I knew the family and made them the offer. With tears in their eyes the husband and wife told me that they could not accept the generous offer. They were living in a house which they had partly paid for, and to leave it would be to sacrifice all they had laid by during years of toil. I will have to hunt up another family. I also have received letters from Illinois, several of them coming to-day, asking if the surplus miners cannot be sent away from here. There is plenty of work out West, they say. It is probable that our poor people would not leave Scranton if furnished the means with which to go." "Business seems to be booming quite nicely in the heart of the city," suggested the interviewer. "That is true," said Mr. Powderly. "Fortunately Scranton has not reached the stage where its various industries do not render it wholly dependent upon the mines. Therefore, everything looks well in the central wards. You will have to go to the outskirts if you want to see gaunt want. Really, any amount of our poor people do not get enough to eat. Misery and privation stalk abroad and we often close our eyes to the specter."

HOWLING WINDS.

Brownsville, Tennessee, Unroofed by a Furious and Terrific Cyclone.

A special from Memphis, Tenn., dated Feb. 28, says: Brownsville, Tenn., six miles northeast of Memphis, on the Louisville and Nashville road, was struck by a cyclone at 4 o'clock yesterday morning. Half of the business houses of the town were unroofed and many materially damaged, while several buildings are in a total state of destruction. The cotton compress was unroofed. The Northern Methodist Church was demolished. A brick mill was unroofed. It next struck the handsome building of the Brownsville Savings Bank. The roof was picked off and fell to the street with a tremendous crash. The squares of buildings across the street just north of the bank were unroofed, with the exception of the house of J. B. Phillips & Co. Only one residence is reported as having been damaged, that of Mrs. S. A. Baynson, Washington street. Just following the cyclone came a great flood of rain that completely drenched the goods in the various unroofed houses, causing almost complete destruction in most cases. The losses will aggregate $50,000. The only loss of life reported is that of a woman, about three miles from Brownsville, who was struck by a falling tree and instantly killed. Her two children were severely injured.

At Marianna, Ark., the new Christian Church was completely demolished, Lesser's cotton-shed was blown away, and the roofs of several other buildings were lifted off. About three miles west of town a negro school-house, with eighty-five children in it, was blown from its foundation, but no one was hurt.

The White River at Halesville, Ark., rose eight feet in a few hours, washing away culverts and delaying trains badly.

Three houses were blown down near Riverside, and several buildings flattened out in the southwestern portion of the county.

The Hot Springs old observatory, which has stood for several years on the summit of Hot Springs mountain, and from whose top thousands of visitors have viewed the surrounding country, was leveled to the ground by the gale. The storm played havoc with the entire country between Hot Springs and the Auchita River. Many farm houses were torn to atoms and the path of the storm is one mass of wrecked timber. Large trees were uprooted and in many places the roads are completely blockaded by fall of timber. It is not yet known whether any lives are lost, but that there were is more than probable, owing to the destruction of so many farm houses.

Considerable damage was done to buildings and fences at Little Rock, and at Alexander, near that place, a school house was blown down and nine children injured.

STORY OF A CRIME.

A Villian Who Murdered His Wife and Two Children Suffers the Penalty.

A special from Birmingham, Ala., says: Richard Hawes, the wife murderer, was hanged at 12:20 Friday. His neck was broken by the fall. He stated on the gallows that John Wyley did the killing and was paid $200 by him for his services.

The crime for which Richard R. Hawes paid the penalty with his life was the murder of his wife and two children, May and Irene. On Tuesday morning, Dec. 4, 1888, the body of May was found floating in an artificial lake at East Lake, a pleasure resort, six miles from this city, but it was not identified until the next day. The discovery led to still further investigation and the residence of Hawes was visited by several persons, who found the place deserted and evidence that a terrible crime had been committed. There were blood stains on the floor and walls and in a corner of one of the rooms a bloody club was found. On the same day it was learned that Hawes had been married to Miss May Storey, at Columbus, Miss. He was arrested the same night while passing through Birmingham, on his way to Georgia to spend his honeymoon. He identified the body of his child, but stated that he had been divorced from his wife, and she had gone away. The children, he said, had been placed in a convent at Mobile, and he was at a loss to understand how May's body came to be found where it was. The palpable improbability of such a story convinced those who heard his statement that he had murdered the rest of the family. By the direction of the Coroner the lake was drained and the bodies of Mrs. Hawes and little Irene heavily weighted with railroad iron were found on the bottom. The finding of Mrs. Hawes' corpse inflamed the public mind to a state of frenzy. All efforts of the press of the city and of the county authorities to allay the excitement were futile. The jail was stormed by 10,000 persons, determined to lynch the murderer. The Sheriff ordered them to halt, but the mob replied with cries of derision and pressed forward. The order was given to the guard to fire, and the volley resulted in the killing of ten persons and the wounding of many more. The spirit of the mob was broken and it never returned to the attack, contrary to the expectation of the authorities, who had in the meantime telegraphed to the Governor for military assistance. The trial of Hawes began on April 26, and lasted eleven days. The jury returned a verdict of guilty with the death penalty after two hours' deliberation.

THE CRONIN PLAN.

A Dastardly Attempt to Assassinate Dr. Alex Neif, at Columbus—A Revolver Placed to His Head Misses Fire—The Bloody Plot.

Columbus (O.) special: About 11 o'clock Friday night a desperate attempt was made to assassinate Dr. Alex Neil, one of the leading physicians and best known men of this city. An unknown man called at the doctor's residence and rang the bell. The doctor, suffering with influenza, went to the door and asked what was wanted. The man said he wanted the doctor to go and attend his sick wife. The doctor then asked the man who he was and where he lived. The visitor answered that his name was Corbin and that he lived on East Goodale street. The doctor said he was too ill to go out but would fix up some powder. He did so and opened the door a few inches to hand them out, whereupon the man burst into the hall drew his revolver and placed it against the doctors head, shouting: "I'll kill you!" at the same time pulling the trigger, but it failed to go off, and the doctor immediately grabbed the man. After a desperate struggle the doctor succeeded in taking the revolver away from the assassin, who ran out. The family, with the doctor, then went up stairs, and directly the man came back and smashed in several windows with boulders. The doctor's daughter ran to the telephone and called up police headquarters. A patrol wagon was sent to the residence and a guard placed at the house. It is thought to be a bold attempt at assassination, or to murder the doctor for money. The object was to get the doctor out on an errand of mercy, like Dr. Cronin's case, when the unknown man, with confederates near and in hiding, would pounce on and kill him.

SHOT DOWN.

Sensational Shooting Affray at the Capitol Building in Washington.

Washington special: In the corridor of the House of Representatives ex-Congressman Taulbee was shot through the head by Charles Kincaid, correspondent of the Louisville Times. Both men are Kentuckians, and the trouble was caused by the ex-Congressman pulling the correspondent's nose for publishing certain statements in regard to him. The shooting occurred just outside the Capitol, near the southeastern entrance to the building. Taulbee was shot in the head, but it is not known yet how serious a wound was inflicted. Kincaid is a slightly-built, inoffensive-looking man of about 35 years of age. He was formerly a Judge in one of the Louisville courts, and his family is one of the best known in Kentucky. He has a wide acquaintance in social circles here and has spent considerable of his time in attending receptions, parties and other society events. The statements published by Kincaid in the Times were in effect that Taulbee had been guilty of some improper conduct with a female clerk at Washington. They were published about eighteen months ago. The men had not met since that time. Both were unarmed. Taulbee is a large sinewy fellow. Kincaid had just been ill of typhoid fever. When Taulbee attacked him he said: "I am weak and unarmed." Kincaid then went and got a pistol, and an hour later, meeting Taulbee, shot, him, the ball entering just to the right of his left eye. Taulbee was taken to his residence. The wound is considered a dangerous one, but still may not prove fatal. Kincaid is at the New Jersey Avenue Police Station and is described as a physical wreck from nervous prostration, and spends his time moaning and rocking to and fro.

Looking for Disasters.

A Cincinnati special, dated Feb. 28, at 10 p. m., says: A steady rain prevailed here during the entire day and up to 9 o'clock to-night, when the clouds became lighter, the moon shone faintly through the rifts and the rain ceased. If the rain is severe in this section it will probably cause a flood, but if it continues at the rate at which it fell to-day, even throughout the entire Ohio valley, it will hardly do more than to keep the river at its present stage, or a little higher, for a few days only. Those living in the lower portion of the city are watching the sky with some anxiety to-night. The Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern (formerly the Cincinnati, Washington and Baltimore Railroad) and the Bee Line have their tracks covered with water to the depth of three or four feet near the stock yards. A number of approaches to the Central Depot have been blocked by the water, but the roads affected by this have erected temporary depots where the water cannot reach and business will not be interrupted.

Midnight—the Ohio River has reached 55 feet, 2½ inches, and still rapidly rising. Two more inches will cause the railroads to abandon all trains leading out of the Grand Central Station. The back-water from the Ohio entering at the Mill street sewer has covered the tracks at several points. Washouts between Lawrenceburg and Aurora are reported, and the Big Four trains are not running.

Self-Mutilation.

Thomas H. Cluff, a married man of 33 years, and possessing a wife and two very bright children, a prosperous and well-to-do farmer, living five miles northeast of Marion, Ohio, went into the barn and with a jack-knife attempted to emasculate himself, and was partially successful in his horrible mutilation. He is suffering terrible pain, while but slight hopes are entertained of his recovery, lock-jaw being feared. He gives no reason for his terrible deed, and says there has been no trouble between his wife and himself. Cluff has been married six years, and his doctors think he was laboring under temporary insanity at the time.

Two Hundred Lives Lost.

London special: A dispatch received here states that the British steamer Quetta, which sailed from Australian ports February 27 for London, has been lost at sea. The number of persons drowned is not definitely known, but the dispatch says a fearful number perished. The Quetta was a vessel of 2,254 tons burden. The report of the loss is confirmed at Lloyd's. The advices received there state that 200 lives were lost. The steamer struck a rock not shown on the chart near Somerset, in the Torres Straits, at the northern extremity of Australia, and sank in three minutes.

Arsenic in the Tea-Kettle.

Perry Keuhn, living at Black Jack, about fifteen miles from Logan, Ohio, was arrested charged with attempting to poison his father's family. Perry is an illegitimate son of Henry Keuhn, the father of the family he is charged with attempting to poison. The poisoning, as alleged, was done last August. Keuhn was indicted at the present term of court. One of Henry Keuhn's daughters says she saw Perry throw something in the tea-kettle, and so informed her father, who found something white in the kettle, which he brought to Logan, where it was found to be arsenic. It is claimed that Perry wanted to do away with the family that he might inherit his father's wealth. The State thinks it has a good case against him.

They Are Mad.

The French newspapers of the opposition are raising a terrific howl at the decision of the Paris Government to participate in Emperor William's labor conference at Berlin. The decision, these journals declare, is a complete surrender of the principles which every French government and every French citizen has held since France was despoiled by German greed and German vandalism, and in that spirit the act will be treated by the French electors at the earliest opportunity offering.

Subornation of Perjury.

Kasper W. Natson was arrested at Marion, Ind., charged with subornation of perjury. Two months ago Miss Nora Macy made complaint against Burr Harris, alleging that he was the author of her downfall. The girl has since weakened and now declares that Watson is the author of her misfortune, and that Watson procured her to swear to the charge against Harris. Watson is a saloon-keeper. His crime is punishable with imprisonment from two to twenty-one years.

The Perils of Travel.

A Milwaukee and St. Paul freight collided with a stock train at Salt Creek, Ill. Twelve cars of the stock train were demolished, much stock killed, two persons fatally injured, and two boys badly hurt. The victims were: Fireman Ogden, Chicago, fatally injured; Charles Alexander, fatally injured; Patsy Ryan, seriously hurt; Henry Alger, badly hurt. Alexander, Ryan, and Alger were boys who had run away from their homes at Beloit, Wis., and were concealed in a box car.

A Sudden Death.

As Mrs. Israel Ealy entered the Grand Opera House in Columbus, Ohio, the other night, accompanied by her son and daughter, to witness the performance of "The Fakir" she complained of sudden sickness and sat down in the manager's office for a few moments. Feeling relieved she proceeded into the theater and was scarcely seated when she fell back dead. Her home was in Powell, Ohio, and she was at Columbus visiting. Dr. Wilson was summoned and said it was heart failure that caused death.

Powder Shake-Up.

A wheel mill at the Miami Powder Works at Goes Station, north of Xenia, Ohio, was blown to atoms. It contained several hundred pounds of the explosive substance, and didn't leave an atom of the building. No one was in or near the building at the time. The wheel mills are small concerns, situated a considerable distance apart, and one man attends to several of them. The explosion shook nearly every house in Xenia.

Bringing in the Thieves.

Sheriff Ruff, of Pulaski County, has delivered Jerry Schofield over to the authorities of Peru, Ind. Some time ago Schofield, with James Dickey, a companion, victimized A. Pence and Swasee out of $1,300, including a $500 stallion, which he gave in exchange for territory for a patent gate which they falsely represented. Schofield was bound over. Dickey, who is now in jail at Winamac on another charge, will be taken to Peru as soon as his sentence has expired.

Organized Robbery.

A gang of freight train robbers has been unearthed at Lima, Ohio, who are operating largely in this vicinity on the Chicago and Atlantic and Toledo and Kansas City roads. The operations are largely confined to shoes and wearing apparel, and many thousand dollars' worth have been taken. Al Jones, a supposed leader of the gang, was arrested. The parties are selling their goods to country folks away below cost.

Exploded in the Professor's Face.

Dr. Edward W. Morley, Professor of Chemistry at Adelbert College, Cleveland, was painfully injured by the explosion of a glass jar containing uranium. His spectacles were shattered and deep cuts were made in his ear, neck, and chin. All the wounds had to be sewed. A piece of glass was also forced into one of his eye-balls. While the injuries are not fatal, they are exceedingly painful.

Idaho as a State.

The House Committee on Territories has decided to report favorably to the House the bill for the admission of the Territory of Idaho as a State. The action of the committee was not entirely unanimous, there being a vote or two on the negative, and another member of the committee being absent. Two reports will therefore be in all probability submitted to the House.

Punishment Which Fits the Crime.

Ben Morgan, colored, of Owingsville, Ky., was tried on a charge of attempting to intimidate and frighten into submission to his evil purpose Mrs. Ambrose Wright, a respectable married white woman, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $500, in default of which he is to work it out at hard labor on the streets at $1 a day.

Sunday Liquor and Perjury.

Several days ago Jesse Stephens, a saloonkeeper of Indianapolis, was charged in the City Court with selling liquor on Sunday, and he testified so falsely concerning the matter that he was ordered arrested for perjury before leaving the court-room. Monday he was convicted in the Criminal Court and sentenced for four years in the Prison North.

How Much Did They Get?

A bold bank robbery occurred at Valley Falls, Kan. A masked man entered Hick & Gephart's Bank about five o'clock in the evening, help up the cashier with two revolvers and robbed the bank. President Gephart is absent. The robber escaped, although the town turned out five minutes after the robbery in hot pursuit.

Young Lincoln Improving.

London special: Young Abraham Lincoln is steadily recovering from the effects of the latest operation. The serious phases of his case are diminishing. While all danger is not yet passed, the prospect is more encouraging than at any time since the illness became alarming.

Mangled Brains for a Wounded Heart.

Herman Welton, of Vincennes, Ind., aged 21 years, blew out his brains with a revolver. The deed occurred at the residence of his father, David Welton, near Monroe City, and as near as can be ascertained was the result of a disappointment in love.

May Pardon Mrs. Maybrick.

A petition bearing many influential signatures has reached Queen Victoria, asking her to pardon Mrs. Maybrick, the American woman who was convicted in Liverpool of poisoning her husband and sentenced for life. It is understood that her Majesty will act favorably.

INDIANA HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crime, Casualties and General News Notes.

The Indiana Farms.

The agricultural statistics of the State for the year 1889, the compilation of which has just been completed by William A. Peelle, Jr., shows that there were sown in the State, last year, 2,773,883 acres of wheat, an increase over the preceding year of 47,772 acres. The wheat crop for the year was 41,541,570 bushels; nearly 13,000,000 more than in 1888. The average per acre was 14.9 bushels against 10.5 bushels year before last. Knox County has the largest average, 22 bushels per acre, but is followed closely by Elkhart, Gibson, and Noble, with 21. Perry and Crawford counties were the lowest in the list, with an average of 9 bushels each. Gibson County produced the most—1,469,858 bushels. The corn crop fell off nearly 26,000,000 bushels from the preceding year, the total yield being 106,542,161. The average was 31 bushels against 37.6 in 1888. Crawford County leads with an average of 45 bushels, while White County is the lowest, with 20 bushels. Tippecanoe's total crop was the largest, 2,457,420 bushels, and Ohio's the smallest, 205,668 bushels. The oats crop was 28,710,935 bushels, over 1,000,000 bushels bigger than in 1888. Carroll County shows the largest average, 43 bushels, while Perry is at the foot with 13 bushels. The yield of barley was 416,325 bushels, nearly 14,000 larger than the preceding year. Dearborn County leads with a total of 34,056 bushels, while Crawford brings up the rear with 208 bushels.

There were produced 33,246,616 pounds of butter and 519,838 pounds of cheese, and Indiana cows gave 151,365,605 gallons of milk. There were raised 722,065 dozen chickens, 47,734 dozen turkeys, 19,845 dozen geese, 49,616 dozen ducks, while 21,750,638 dozen eggs were laid, and 194,592 pounds of feathers plucked. During the year 2,384,667 rods of rail fence, 790,667 rods of board fence and 1,311,316 rods of wire fence were built.

Minor State Items.

—Samuel H. Beckner, aged 79, was fatally stricken with paralysis at Lafayette.

—Frederick Benthine hanged himself at Benthine. He was a man of dissipated habits.

—Mrs. Mary Clafley, a widow, was found dead in bed on her farm near Bertrand, where she lived alone.

—Mrs. S. Thomas, of Rushville, bled to death after a surgical operation performed to relieve abdominal trouble.

—The Board of Commissioners of Union County has accepted the new infirmary buildings, erected at a cost of $16,500.

—Joseph Shuck, a prominent schoolteacher of Franklin County, was drowned while crossing Clear Fork. His body was recovered.

—Andrew Beall, a farmer, near Versailles, Ripley County, gave his son a dose of strychnine, mistaking it for quinine. It proved fatal.

—At Colfax, during an epiletic fit, John Harshbarger fell across the Big Four tracks and fractured his skull, from the effects of which he died.

—An old and well-worn pocket-book was kicked about the floor of Buyalin's drug store, at Logansport, for several hours, until it occurred to somebody to pick it up. It contained $300, belonging to Newton Donaldson.

—Turner Sims, of Shelbyville, made a slighting remark about the daughters of Mrs. Francis Diggs, who lives in the same house, and she attacked him. He secured a hatchet and cut her on the head, face, and shoulder. Her daughters came to her rescue, one of them armed with a club, with which Sims was knocked down. He was fined, and bound over to keep the peace.

—The Crawfordsville branch of the State Fish and Game Association has been re-organized, and the following are the officers: President, R. C. Smith; Vice President, Judge T. F. Davidson; Treasurer, Marshal Nye; Secretary, C. R. Snodgrass. The membership fee has been placed at fifty cents for the citizens of Crawfordsville and farmers free. The annual dues are to be one dollar.

—Henry Lewellen, a young married man, living about fifteen miles southeast of Columbus, in Jennings County, had a quarrel with his mother because she refused to deed him the farm upon which both lived, and struck her a severe blow on the head with a large club. Lewellen made his escape and has not yet been arrested, although officers are after him. Mrs. Lewellen's skull is fractured, and she cannot possibly recover.

—Willie, aged 14 years, a son of William Mertz, of Bluffton while handling a revolver, accidentally discharged it, the ball taking effect just above the right eye. Medical aid was at once summoned, but after several hours' probing the physicians were unable to locate the ball, and discontinued the painful operation. The boy is in a precarious condition, and was taken to Fort Wayne, where he will again be operated upon.

—Barton Denton, a well-known citizen of Milltown, Crawford County, mysteriously disappeared from his home in that county twenty-seven years ago. So well did he cover up his tracks that he was given up as dead long ago. A few days ago old friends at Milltown received a letter from him at Larimer, Iowa, where he had a fine farm and was doing well. Denton wrote that the cause of his disappearing was a desire to break off all friendly ties until fortune smiled upon him. He promises to pay his old home a visit soon.

—Sheriff J. G. Edwards, of Boone County, is defendant in a damage suit for $5,000, growing out of the fact that Edwards detailed his deputy to bring Elvin Wade before the grand jury. Wade attempted to escape and the officer shot him.

—A loaded car at the top of the slope in the Park County coal mine at Coxville broke loose, dashed down into the mine and struck Jordan Davis and the mule which he was driving. The mule was killed and Davis was crushed between the car and mine wall and probably fatally injured.

—Last October Charley Hays, a one-armed man, and Harvey Thompson, colored, had a fight at Crawfordsville, and two city police officers arrested Hays and put him in the county jail. In the fight Hays had an eye injured, and finally the eye went blind. Hays claims that the county physician would not come to treat him, even after being sent for, and he remained there six weeks without medical treatment, losing an eye as the result. He has sued the county for $2,000.

—There was a serious wreck on the Monon route at Pleasant Ridge, a station about four miles east of Rensselaer. A train of fourteen empty Pullman cars going north attempted to switch for the passenger train going east, when a heavy freight train going north struck the rear coach, which completely wrecked the freight engine, seven freight cars and two Pullman coaches. Fortunately the coaches were empty excepting a negro porter, who miraculously escaped serious injury. The company's loss will be between ten and fifteen thousand dollars.

—J. N. Davidson, President of the Montgomery County Farmers' Council, has appointed the following persons as a committee who shall raise sugar beets this season and make sugar from them, their results to be reported to the council when the experiment is completed: H. M. Billingsby, J. J. Darter, H. H. Talbott, E. T. McCrea, J. M. Harshbarger, W. Q. O'Neall, J. N. Davidson, P. S. Kennedy, H. H. Swindler, E. M. Smalley, B. B. Rusk, and Ambrose Remley. It is proposed to establish a sugar-beet industry in that county if the beets can be successfully raised.

—When a Lake Shore and Michigan Southern passenger train was a mile from Elkhart, on its way to Chicago, and running very rapidly, a 3-year-old child, whose parents were asleep in a coach, escaped from them and walked off the platform. It was supposed that the child had been instantly killed, but when the train was backed the trainmen found the little one standing on the track, and, aside from a scratch on one ear, perfectly uninjured. The oldest railroad men say the child's escape is the most marvelous one they have ever known.

—The little 3-year-old daughter of Lon Trucks, residing in Bluffton, was burned to death while the mother was absent from the house a few minutes at a neighbor's. The child by some means, had got hold of a piece of paper and lighted it in the stove, thereby setting fire to her clothes. Her screams were heard by the mother, who, upon running into the house, found the child in a perfect sheet of flame. In the excitement, she did the best she could to extinguish them, but her efforts were futile until after the flesh of the child's body was completely cooked. The little one's agony lasted but a few moments.

—Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: Peter M. Dice, North Manchester, assignor of one-half to E. L. Webster, land-marker; William K. Fraley, Lebanon, wire fence; Adolph E. Herman, Terre Haute, cab for pall-bearers; James and M. McCarter, Bowers, washing machine; Lemuel F. Norton, Lebanon, fence-post; Charles Orth, Jr., Mount Vernon, corn-sheller; John L. Powles, Goodland, draft equalizer; Nat H. Roberts, assignor to E. C. Atkins & Co., Indianapolis, saw-jointer and guage; John J. Stedman, La Porte, dental plate; Samuel Stephens, assignor of one-third to A. C. Ayers, Indianapolis, rendering apparatus; Charles F. Walters and P. S. Sellenback, Richmond, roller mill.

—The good people of Syracuse, a little place of about five hundred inhabitants, in Kosciusko County, have adopted a novel way of getting rid of two saloons in the town. The saloon-keepers themselves seem content with the way matters are progressing. The women folks have commenced a temperance crusade, visiting the saloons and holding meetings in these places of iniquity, pleading with the proprietors and habitues of the places to desist from their evil ways. Strange to say, no ill-feeling whatever has been engendered, and every evening witnesses the strange novelty of holding religious services in saloons. There have been a number of conversions, and the work goes bravely on with unabated interest.

—One morning recently when Jack Riley, Vandalia watchman at the Sixth street crossing in Terre Haute, opened his little watch-house as usual, he found two men lying in it whom he recognized as Charles Hanley and William Dodson. He could not arouse them and supposed they were drunk. A policeman passed along and the patrol wagon was summoned and the two men were carried out to it by the officers, still under the impression that they were drunk. Just then it was discovered that Hanley was dead and that Dodson was unconscious and more dead than alive. A physician was summoned and it was ascertained that the men had been asphyxiated. They had raised a window in the watch-house and got in some time during the night, probably during the heavy rain storm. They had been overcome by gases operating the street guard. The watch-house had been closed all day and the odor was very strong. Hanley was 32 and a moulder by trade. Dodson, at last accounts, was still alive, but he is believed to be beyond recovery. He is 24 and a railroader. Both are unmarried.

The rye yield was 871,216 bushels, a large increase over the previous year. Spencer County is in the front with an average of 40 bushels. The crop of buckwheat was 89,754 bushels; clover-seed, 253,728 bushels; timothy-seed, 33,419 bushels; clover hay, 2,349,528 tons, an average of two tons per acre, and timothy hay 1,823,047 tons, an average of 1½ per acre. The Irish potato crop amounted to 7,783,267 bushels, raised on 79,213 acres. Of sweet potatoes the acreage was 2,772 and the crop 194,040 bushels.

—The little 2-year-old daughter of William E. Sherwood, waterworks inspector of Evansville, was fatally scalded by overturning upon itself a foot-tub of boiling water, which the mother had placed on a chair for a moment.

—Corda, the 3-year-old child of W. H. Reed, of Webster Township, Harrison County, was burned to death. While sitting in front of an open fire-place her clothing caught fire and there was no one in the house at the time to render assistance. The child suffered great agony a few hours before she died.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted On.

In the Senate, on the 25th, among the bills reported and placed on the calendar was one to authorize the purchase of gold and silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes in payment thereof. The bill directs the purchase of silver bullion to the amount of $4,500,000 a month, and of as much gold bullion as may be offered, and the issue thereof for Treasury notes, and it repeals the law directing the coinage of 2,000,000 silver dollars per month. Mr. Chandler's resolution, offered the previous day, was then taken up, and a bitter debate between Chandler and Call followed, after which the resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Senate spent the afternoon in a discussion of the Blair educational bill. In the House, Mr. Baker, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, called up and the House passed bills extending to San Diego and Wilmington, California, and San Antonio, Texas, the provisions of the act relative to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods; also the Senate bill making Minneapolis a sub-port of entry and delivery. The House Committee on Libraries reported favorably the bill for the erection of a monument at South Bend, Ind., to William Henry Harrison, President of the United States and grandfather of the present President. The bill appropriates $25,000 for the erection of the proposed monument. The House, after referring the exposition bill to the committee to be perfected, spent the entire day on the Oklahoma bill and adjourned without action.

The Senate, on the 26th, passed twenty-six pension and private bills and the following public bills: Providing for a steam vessel for the use of the civil government of Alaska (appropriating $50,000 for the vessel and $11,000 for the annual expenses); appropriating $100,000 for enlargement of the public building at Topeka, Kansas; to provide for the judicial determination of the controversy between the United States and Texas relating to Greer County. The bill to amend the act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska was indefinitely postponed. The Senate also passed a resolution authorizing the select committee on the five civilized tribes of Indians to investigate the status of the negotiations between the Government and the Cherokee tribe of Indians in relation to the Cherokee outlet. The Blair education bill came up for further discussion, and after a brief executive session the Senate adjourned. Immediately after the reading of the journal in the House, Mr. Rowell of Illinois called up the contested election case of Atchinson vs. Pendleton, from the First District of West Virginia. It was agreed that six hours' debate should be allowed, after which the previous question was to be considered as ordered. The case of the contestant was championed by Mr. Rowell, and Mr. Pendleton's claims were maintained by Mr. O'Ferrall of Virginia. Mr. Rowell was seconded by Mr. Lacey of Iowa, and Mr. O'Ferrall by Mr. Wilson of Missouri. All the speeches were confined to an analysis of the evidence, and were dry and uninteresting. Pending further debate, the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 27th, various bills were reported and a number passed, among them one for the erection and location of a bronze statue of Christopher Columbus and the removal of the naval monument to a new site. The Senate spent the afternoon in the discussion of Mr. Sherman's bill declaring as unlawful trusts and combinations to restrict trade and productions. Senator George spoke in opposition to the bill. After a brief executive session the Senate adjourned. In the House Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, called up the contested election case of Atkinson vs. Pendleton, from the First District of West Virginia, and the floor was accorded to the contestee, Pendleton. After the debate was closed a vote was taken on the minority resolution declaring Pendleton entitled to the seat. It was defeated—yeas, 142; nays, 159—a strict party vote. The vote then recurred on the majority resolution seating Atkinson. The Democrats refrained from voting, their object being to have the contestant seated by less than a quorum, so that the question of the right of the Speaker to count a quorum may be taken before the courts. The vote resulted—yeas, 162; nays, 0 (the Speaker counting a quorum). Mr. O'Ferrall of Virginia, raised the point of no quorum, but the Speaker ignored him, and the newly elected member appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office. The House devoted the afternoon to a consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill for the current fiscal year in committee of the whole. The committee arose without having finished consideration of the bill.

In the Senate, on the 28th ult., after a number of petitions had been presented, a note from Vice President Morton was read, which stated that he was about to leave Washington for an absence of two weeks. Mr. Ingalls was therefore elected Vice President pro tem., and immediately took the oath. Mr. Blair created some amusement by making an attack on the press for not reporting his speeches more fully. The Senate spent the entire afternoon in discussing the pension bill, and after a brief executive session, adjourned. In the House, after the reading of the journal, Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, moved that the House go into committee of the whole on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, the vote resulting 92 to 21. Agreed to. After three hours and a half consumed in the discussion of the points of order the committee rose and the bill was passed. It appropriates $28,650,000—the largest item being an appropriation of $21,600,000 for the payment of pensioners of the war of 1812 and the Mexican war. The remainder of the day was devoted to a consideration of the private calendar, but no bills were passed. The House at its evening session passed forty-five pension bills.

Are Manuscripts Read?

It seems a pet idea with some authors to trouble themselves over the oft-mooted question "Are all the manuscripts which come to magazines carefully read?" There are some manuscripts that go unread, for the reason that their unworthiness is apparent from the opening pages, and often from the opening sentence. Or, their unsuitability will be revealed from their subject-title, and it is then that the editorial decision is made regardless of the literary merit which the article may possess. The most attractive and best-composed articles are oft-times the most unsuited for the magazine to which they are submitted. And therein comes the tact of correct application so often lacking with authors. But of the thousands of manuscripts sent to the magazines each year, each one receives examination, some more, some less, precisely in proportion to their relative merit, and of this authors can always feel assured. The funny paragrapher has magnified the editor's waste-basket far beyond its normal proportions. In reality few manuscripts are consigned thereto, and those which do find their way therein richly deserve the interment. Reputable publications will always return manuscripts where postage is inclosed, except in special instances, and then the declaration is always made in some conspicuous place of the periodical. Authors, as a rule, are safer in the hands of the editor to-day than they were twenty years ago. If the literary supply has increased, so has the demand.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Just What He Wanted.

Agent—"I have here, sir, a most wonderful hair dressing that I should like to show you. It absolutely removes dandruff, keeps the hair bright and oily, and——"

Merchant—"Wait a moment, young man. I don't need to buy any hair dressing, or anything of that kind; but will your preparation keep the hair from coming out?"

Agent—"Yes, sir; warrant it to do that in every instance, sir."

Merchant—"All right, give me a bottle. Never mind the price. I left a letter in my coat pocket at home this morning that my wife gave me to mail New Year's day, and I want something of this kind before I go home."—American Commercial Traveller.

I'M GROWING OLD.

BY C. LOWATER.

I'm growing old; for sixty years
I've struggled through mortal life;
I've seen some joy, I've seen some strife—
I've had five children and a wife.
But, all in all, for all my fears,
I've seen more happiness than tears;
And now, when I am sixty years,
I love the memories of my life.

You'll never see the days, my lad,
As bright as those when I was young;
Then every little bird that sung
Seemed joyful that the earth was young.
In its old days the earth seems sad;
It has not now the life it had
In those gay days long passed, my lad—
Those happy days when I was young.

The life we led was wild and free,
The men were bold, the girls were sweet;
Not such as now you often meet
In theaters or on the street.
Why, sometimes now, it seems to me,
From what I hear and what I see,
'Tis the girls who are bold and free,
And men, poor things, try to be sweet.

The rod, my lad, was in the school
In days when I first learned to spell.
We had to learn our lessons well;
The difference you soon could tell.
They praised the quick and whipped the fool,
And ruled us with an iron rule;
They trained men in the olden school
Whose names a nation now can spell.

They had a noble hardihood
To fight against the wilderness;
They worked and prayed to God to bless
Their toil with peace and plentiness.
He must have heard their prayers and stood
With them in the leafy wood,
For He has blessed their hardihood
And labor in the wilderness.

I'm growing old; for sixty years
I've smiled at pain and laughed with joy;
But though my head is white, my boy,
The hand of age cannot destroy
The record of the hopes, the fears,
The happiness, the smiles, the tears
Which I have known for sixty years,
And whose remembrance is my joy.

THE STORY OF A TERRIBLE EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF AN ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.

By F. W. HUME.

CHAPTER I.

A FOGGY NIGHT.

At two o'clock in the morning during the month of August sounds of music could be heard proceeding from a brilliantly lighted house in Park lane, where a ball was being given by the Countess of Kerstoke. True, the season was long since over, and though the greater part of London society had migrated swallow-like to the south of Europe in search of warm weather, still there were enough people in town to justify the ball being given, and a number of celebrities were present.

Outside it was dull and chilly, with a thick yellow fog pervading the atmosphere, but within the ball-room it was like fairyland with the brilliant light of the lamps, the profusion of bright flowers, and the gay dresses worn by the ladies. The orchestra, hidden behind a gorgeous screen of tropical plants, was playing the latest waltz, "A Friend of Mine," and the sigh and sob of the melody as it stole softly through the room seemed to inspire the dancers with a voluptuous languor as they glided over the polished floor. The soft frou-frou of women's dresses mingled with the light laughter of young girls and the whispered confidences of their partners, while over all dominated the haunting melody with its weird modulations and suggestions of sensuous passion.

Near the door of the ball-room a young man of about thirty years of age was leaning against the wall in a lazy attitude, idly watching the dancers swinging past him; but judging from the preoccupied expression of his face his thoughts were evidently far away. He was tall, dark-haired, with a short cut, well-trimmed beard, piercing dark eyes, a firmly compressed mouth, and, judging from his swarthy complexion together with a certain crisp curl in his hair, he evidently had some negro blood in his veins. Suddenly he was aroused from his meditations by a touch on his shoulder, and on glancing up saw before him a stout elderly gentleman with white hair, a ruddy face, and rather a Silenus cast of countenance.

The one was Spenser Ellersby, only son of a wealthy West Indian planter, and the other Horace Marton, a well-known society man generally called The Town Crier, from the fact that he knew all the current scandals and retailed them with elaborate embellishments to his numerous circle of friends.

"Hey! Ellersby, my boy," said The Town Crier, on the alert to acquire new information, "have you come back once more to England, home and beauty—hey? Been all over the world, I suppose, hey? Going to publish a book of travels, hey?"

"Not me," replied Ellersby, in the slow, languid manner habitual to him; "every one who goes a half a dozen miles nowadays publishes a book of travels under some fantastic title. I prefer to be renowned for not having done so."

"Broke no new ground, hey?"

"No," indifferently. "I haven't the instincts of Columbus, so the old ground was good enough for me. I've done Africa in a superficial manner, called on our American cousins, passed the same compliment to our Australian ditto, in fact done the usual thing with the usual result."

"Hey! what's that?"

"A sense of being bored—I agree with Voltaire to a certain extent, 'this is the best of all possible worlds,' but one does get a little tired of it—however, I have satisfied your curiosity, now return the compliment. I've been away from England for two years, so know nothing of life in town—come, unfold—tell me all—scandals, deaths, marriages, divorces, in fact all the gossip of the hour."

This was an occupation after The Town Crier's own heart, so he launched out into a long description of folly and fashion, varied by sermons and scandal, which, being spiced with a little maliciousness, proved quite an amusing discourse. Ellersby listened in silence with a quiet smile on his lips, every now and then giving vent to an ejaculation as he heard some special morsel of news.

"You ought to write your memoirs, Marton," he said, dryly; "they would be as gossiping as Pepys, as scandalous as De Grammont, and as amusing as either, but go on—anything more? Who are the new beauties?"

"Hey! oh! one was here to-night, Lady Balscombe."

"What! old Balscombe married," said Ellersby in a surprised tone. "I thought he loved no one but himself—so!—and who is the lady?"

"That's what every one wants to know," replied Marton, eagerly; "he picked her up down in the country somewhere, but she's got no pedigree—no money, no talents—nothing but personal beauty."

"Which is worth all the rest put together to a woman," interrupted Ellersby cynically. "What is she like?"

The Town Crier reeled off an auctioneer-like description of her at once.

"Tall, fair, blue eyes, beautiful complexion, magnificent figure, and the devil's own temper."

"Nice set of qualifications, especially the latter," murmured Ellersby. "Balscombe fond of her?"

"Hey! oh, yes—madly! won't let her out of his sight, but he had to to-night, as he's off down to his place in Berkshire on business; tried to make her ladyship come too, but she wouldn't because of this dance—good Lord—fancy a dance at this time of year!—but Kerstoke's wife was always slightly cracked!"

"Does Lady Balscombe reciprocate her husband's adoration?"

"Not exactly! hey!" he replied, chuckling. "Calliston is first favorite there."

"Eh!—the deuce—I thought he was in love with old Balscombe's ward, Miss Penfold."

"So he is—but he makes love to the wife, just to keep his hand in. I wouldn't be surprised if it ended in the divorce court."

"Well, you are generally right in your surmises," retorted Ellersby; "but what would Miss Penfold say to that?"

"Hey! oh, she'd be glad," replied Marton; "bless you, she cares more for Myles Desmond's little finger than she does for the whole body of Calliston."

"Oh, I know Myles," said Ellersby, promptly; "a rattling good fellow, was with him at Cambridge, but we somehow never hit it off—trying to make a fortune by his pen, I hear."

"Yes! and hasn't made a penny yet, so he acts as secretary to his cousin, Lord Calliston. He's next heir to the title, you know, hey?"

"Much chance he'll have of it," replied Ellersby, contemptuously. "Calliston's sure to marry and have heirs, unless he kills himself in the meantime with drink—but to revert to our former conversation—the Balscombe menage seems slightly mixed."

"Hey! rather. It stands this way," explained Marton, eagerly; "Balscombe's jealous of his wife on account of Calliston, Lady B. is jealous of Calliston on account of Miss Penfold, and that young lady does not care two straws for the whole lot of them in comparison to Myles Desmond."

"Sounds like the second act of a French play," murmured Ellersby, yawning. "Well, when I see Lady Balscombe I'll give you an opinion of her looks; meantime, you must be dry after all that talking, so come and have a drink."

"Where are you stopping?" asked Marton, as they went to the supper-room.

"Guelph Hotel, Jermyn street," said Ellersby, "only for a few days till I get my rooms fixed up; I've brought such a lot of things home that my chambers look like an old curiosity shop. What are you having?"

"Champagne," replied Marton. "Oh, I say, dear boy," seeing his companion with a small glass full of brandy, "that looks bad at this hour! Hey, you haven't——"

"No, I haven't," interrupted Ellersby, impatiently; "I'm only taking this to-night because I don't feel up to the mark."

Marton said no more, but after parting with his companion went back to the ball-room, and, meeting a friend, confided to him that Ellersby was going to the dogs through drink.

"Brandy neat, dear boy, hey!" said the old reprobate. "Bad habits, these young fellows pick up abroad, hey! Looks used up, by Jove. Gal in it, dear boy, hey!—oh, shocking!"

So The Town Crier evidently did not intend to give the returned wanderer a good character.

Ellersby was now tired of the ball, so bade good-night to his hostess, who was a queer, thin little woman, wearing a wig, a low-cut dress, and many jewels, giving one the general impression that she was mostly bones and diamonds.

After taking leave of this bizarre figure Ellersby put on his coat and went outside into the street, where he stood for a few minutes, undecided whether to take a cab to his hotel or to walk. The fog was very thick, and the gas lamps shone through it like dull yellow stars, while the chill breezes of the night seemed to penetrate the body of the young man, accustomed as he had been of late to tropical climates.

In spite of the apparent discomforts offered by a walk at such a time, Ellersby determined to risk it, thinking it would give him a certain amount of amusement, akin somewhat to the unraveling of a puzzle, to find his way through the fog to Jermyn street. Smiling at the oddity of the idea of finding pleasure in a cool walk on a foggy night, he lighted a cigar, and, buttoning up his coat, took his way down Park lane toward Piccadilly.

There is a strange feeling in the complete isolation one experiences in fog-land—the thick yellow mist hiding everything under its jealous veil until the pedestrian finds himself adrift, as it were, on a lonely sea, and though on every side he is environed by millions of human beings, yet the fog creates for the moment a solitude as in those enchanting cities of the Arabian Nights.

Ellersby managed to find his way to Piccadilly, and was soon swinging along the pavement at a good round pace. Every now and then ragged figures with sinister faces would come suddenly out of the fog on the watch for unwary wanderers, but the nomadic life of Ellersby having wonderfully sharpened his faculties, he was always on his guard against the evil advances of these night-birds. Occasionally he could hear a cab drive slowly past, the driver cautiously steering his horse down the familiar street, which, as if by magic, had suddenly assumed an unreal appearance, transforming Piccadilly into a vague immensity resembling the steppes of Russia.

With his ears alert for every sound, and his eyes peering anxiously into the veil of gray mist, Ellersby hurried along, managed to cross the street, and by some miracle of dexterity, which he placed at once to the credit of instinct, turned down St. James street, and it was here his first mishap occurred, for just as he rounded the corner he came against a young man hastening in the opposite direction at a rapid pace.

"I beg your pardon," said the stranger quickly, "but the fog is so dense I could not see—excuse me."

And he was about to hurry away when Ellersby, recognizing the voice, stopped him.

"Wait a moment, Desmond," he said, gayly, "and give an old friend a word."

Desmond seemed annoyed at being recognized, and looking sharply at the face of the other, gave vent to an ejaculation of surprise, which, however, had not a very delighted ring in it.

"Ellersby, by Jove!" he said, in a hesitating manner, "I thought you were in Persia or in Patagonia. Who the deuce would have expected to see you in Piccadilly on such a devil of a night?"

"I've been to a ball," explained Ellersby, "and thought I'd walk back to my hotel just to renew my acquaintance with London fogs. It was a mad freak, but amusing. Come to my hotel and have a nightcap."

"Thanks, awfully," said Desmond, hurriedly, "but I can't. I'm—I'm in a hurry. Where are you stopping?"

"Guelph Hotel, Jermyn street."

"Eh!" said Desmond, with a start. "Jermyn street—all right; look you up to-morrow."

"Wait a moment," observed Ellersby, detaining him. "Tell me, where is Calliston? I want to see him."

"Not much chance," replied Desmond, shaking his head. "He's—gone off to-night down to Shoreham—yachting, you know. Wants to go to the Azores; well, will see you to-morrow; good night—I'm in a deuce of a hurry."

He spoke rapidly, with nervous agitation quite at variance with his usual demeanor, as Ellersby knew, and as he went off quickly and was swallowed up by the fog, the latter resumed his walk with a quiet laugh.

"A woman, I bet," he said to himself, as he made his way cautiously along. "Fancy Venus on such a discouraging night as this—the rosy mists enveloping the goddess are charming, but a London fog—ah, bah!"

He stood on the pavement, wondering how he could strike Jermyn street, and was about to attempt to cross on a chance of his luck guiding him when the tall form of a policeman loomed out of the fog and flashed the light of a lantern on him.

"Ah, just in time, policeman," said Ellersby, in a relieved tone. "I've got slightly astray in this fog, so you must guide me to the Guelph Hotel."

"Just across the street, sir," replied the policeman, touching his helmet, and he stepped off the pavement, followed by Ellersby.

They soon got into Jermyn street and went along the left-hand side toward the hotel. Though the fog was still thick, Ellersby in the vanity of his heart thought he could now find the way for himself. He gave the policeman half a-crown, and going along a few yards, went up what he supposed was the steps of the hotel. The policeman stood in the same place, ready to render his services as a guide, should he be required, when suddenly he was startled by a cry from Ellersby.

The young man had gone up the wrong steps, and was standing on the top when the policeman hurried up, while at his feet was a bundle of what looked like clothes.

"I say, policeman," said Ellersby, in an agitated tone, "here is a woman—I believe she's dead."

"Dead drunk, more like, sir," replied the policeman, skeptically, ascending the steps.

"No," said Ellersby, "I have shaken her and she will not waken. Her face is quite cold—just look!"

The policeman, somewhat startled out of his professional phlegm, turned the light down on the figure of the woman, which was lying in the doorway. It was that of a female with a fair face and golden hair, dressed in a long sealskin jacket and a silk dress, with a fashionably shaped hat on her head. Her well-gloved hands were tightly clinched and her eyes, wide open, were staring straight up at the horrified discoverers. There did not seem to be any wound or blood about, but her face was swollen and appeared to be of a dark purple color, with the tongue slightly protruding between the teeth. It was not by any means a pleasant sight, and both men felt a sensation of horror as they looked at the body.

"She's dead, sure enough, sir," said the policeman at length, and blew a whistle. To this call there was an answer, and soon another policeman made his appearance.

"She looks as if she had been strangled," said Ellersby, who was much upset by the discovery; "her face is so purple and her tongue protruding."

The first policeman bent down and looked at the neck of the corpse, but could see no marks of violence, so he shook his head.

"Don't know sir," he answered. "It looks a queer sort of case. We'll take the body to the hospital and see what the doctors say."

In the meantime the other policeman had gone for aid, and in a few minutes two more made their appearance with a stretcher, upon which the body was placed and taken to the nearest hospital.

In accordance with a request made by the policeman, Ellersby gave his card, so that he could be called on to appear at the inquest, and then went to the Guelph Hotel, which was only a short distance up the street.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

How to Cure Frowning.

A great many earnest thinkers of a nervous temperament fall into the habit of scowling when they read, write or talk seriously. This causes two little perpendicular lines to plow in between the eyes, and ages a face ten years.

It is a habit almost impossible to correct, once formed, as it is done unconscientiously by a great many young people. Even in sleep their brows will be drawn together in this malicious little frown, that is the aider and abettor of age.

A bright, studious young woman still in her early twenties found herself the victim of this scowl, which had already made two fine hair lines in her white brow. She set herself to work to cure the habit by setting her mirror before her face when she read, wrote or studied; but as this distracted her attention from her work she finally placed a ribbon band tightly across her brow, tying it in a knot at the back of her head, and at night she slept in the band.

After several months the little hair-lines disappeared from her pretty forehead, and she is quite cured of the disfiguring habit.

A smooth, white, uncorrugated brow is one of the greatest attractions in a woman's face, while a prematurely furrowed and wrinkled brow mars the beauty and youth of the fairest features.—New York Morning Journal.

Mothers Strangely Equipped.

The author of "King Solomon's Mines" and "Allan Quatermain" has had much laid to his charge—from plagiarism to downright lying, but as time goes on it becomes every day more apparent that the only South African romancist has a considerable modicum of truth at the bottom of his seemingly most bizarre conceptions.

Take, for instance, the Mapsi, a small tribe of bush people living between the Kaverezi and Yankotoi, who, among a number of other curious habits, slit the skin over both shoulders in the form of a loop, and which, by being upheld, permits a second cuticle to grow beneath. A corresponding slit is made on each side of all the young ladies of this interesting people, the loops, when the girls develop into womanhood, forming four "natural" resting places for a child, either at the breast or back, the straps of flesh on the shoulders being for the hands or arms and the others for each baby leg.—Johannesburg Standard.

A Clear Conscience Obtained.

Broker's Wife—How happy you look, my dear. What is the cause?

Broker—A clear conscience. I have not taken any innocent and confiding man's money for twenty-four hours.

"I am glad to hear it."

"Yes; you see my partner died last night, and our office was closed today."—New York Weekly.

THE total number of miles of railroads in the United States at the close of 1888 was 156,082, of which 7,028 miles were built during the year. The number of locomotives in service was 29,398; passenger cars, 28,252; freight cars, 1,005,116. This is an increase during the year of 1,548 locomotives, 1,388 passenger cars, and 48,485 freight cars. In the Dominion of Canada there are reported to be 12,701 miles in operation, on which there are 1,657 locomotives, 1,912 passenger cars, and 44,009 freight cars.

IT is stated that a millionaire who died recently at Vienna had such an antipathy to darkness that he left instructions in his will for the illumination of his tomb. HUMOR.

WORKS both ways—a walking beam.

A LIFE in suspense—that of a spider.

A LAUGHING stock—the joker's fund of humor.

"SOUND as a dollar" doesn't refer to paper money, for it has no sound.

THE fellow who winds his watch at night doesn't always wind it up "tight."

"I DON'T see how you left by rail—there are no railroads out there." "No, but there are plenty of rails."

IT is inexact to say that a man is inclined to be bald. No man's inclination is that way, but rather against it.

NOT very busy: First orange—Hello! What are you doing here? Second orange—Nothing; just looking round.

"IF I gave you a cent, Bobbie, what would you do with it?" "I'd buy a postal-card and write to you for a quarter."

SHE—What a low-cut dress that girl has on, and what an ugly neck she has? He—Yes. It is certainly open to criticism.

CINCINNATI MAN (reading the paper): I see that they are closing up the bucket shops. His Wife: That's right. They should sell their beer in kegs.

MRS. GAZZAM—Young Mr. Dolley dotes wildly on our Amy. Mr. Gazzam—Yes, my dear. He is just at the age when young men sow their wild dotes.

"You must not make fun of your grandfather, Tommy; you should always respect gray hairs." "Yes; but mamma, how can I when he's so bald?"

MRS. SHOPPER—I ought to get a little present for Mrs. Spiter's little boy. I like him very much, but I heartily dislike his mother. Mrs. Gadder—Buy the dear little fellow a tin trumpet.

SHORTPURSE—Yes, those are nice trousers, old boy, but aren't they, er, a—a trifle loud? Smallpay—On the contrary, old boy, they are of a modest and retiring disposition—shrunk three inches in six hours.

DOCTOR—My dear madam, I'll give you a tonic that will do you a world of good. Lonesome Widow—Oh! Doctor, if you could only prescribe a little love. Doctor—Really, madam, if I were not married——

LAWYER—You say you think the witness is a wholesale liar. What do you mean by a wholesale liar? Witness—Well, he is a man who wouldn't tell a single lie for a nickel, but would tell a dozen for half a dollar.

MRS. NOOLY—I see Mrs. Hot-Potter will be at the Grand next week, supported by a strong company." Mr. Nooly—Sho! Fr'm the way they say she dresses, I reckon they had to form a syndicate to support her.

"WHAT are you doin', you young rascal?" said a farmer to a remarkably small boy, on finding him standing under a tree in his orchard, with an apple in his hand. "Please sir, I was only goin' to put this 'ere apple back on the tree, sir; it had fallen down, sir."

SOMETHING of an expert: Patient—Doctor, I don't believe that medicine is doing me any good. Doctor—You haven't tried it long enough to see the effect yet. "What effect ought it to have?" "Um—ah—well—er, I haven't tried it long enough on you to know just yet."

GLIMPSES FOR GLANCERS.

There's the woman we all of us frequently meet,
Whose parasol's aimed at our eye;
And the chumps who persistently tramp on our feet,
They're all pretty hard to get by,
But there's no other lunatic running around
Who so sadly of sense is bereft—
No other transgressor has ever been found,
Like the demon who turns to the left.
—Chicago Herald.

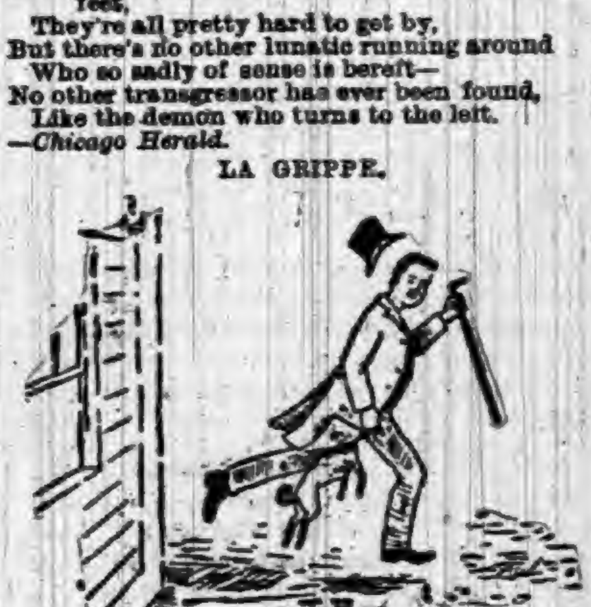
LA GRIPPE.



Gen. Early's Faithful Servant.

"One of the greatest instances of devotion that I ever saw," said an old Virginian to the Man About Town, "outside of that of a dog for his master, is that shown by 'Early's nigger Joe.' Joe is an old negro about seventy years of age, who was born a slave in Gen. Jubal Early's family, brought up with 'Jube,' became his body-servant, served all through the war with him, as watchful of his master as a mother of her babe. After the war Joe was informed that he was free. 'I'se free?' said Joe, with a look of contempt. 'I'se not free. I belongs to Mas' Jube till I dies.'

"Early is very fond of his servant, and has told every shopkeeper in Lynchburg to let Joe have anything he wants and send the bill to him. Joe follows his master around on certain occasions like a dog. When Early lets the mountain dew of old Virginny get the better of him, Joe will say:

"'Mass' Jube, you mus' come home.'

"'Why, you —— nigger, who are you talking to? Who's boss, anyway?'

"'Well, Mass' Jube, when you's sober you's boss, but when you's drunk I'se boss.'

"'Well, Joe, you're right. When I'm drunk you're boss.'

"And Early will resign himself to the faithful old darky's care."—St. Louis Republic.

Indian Honesty.

One of the Indian boys at Hampton, Virginia, did not like to take his medicine, and his nurse agreed to pay him so much every time he took it. At first he was pleased with this arrangement, but one evening the nurse found that he had made no marks on the card where he kept a record of the number of times he had taken medicine. She asked what it meant, and received an explanation from which many a white boy might learn a lesson, and spare his mother much trouble and annoyance:

"Me lay here all day doing nothing; you pay me for it—not right. Me take medicine; me not take money."

Finally.

Jagg—How did Judge Duffy attain to such an eminent judical position?

Snagg—Why, he is nothing but a police justice.

"Well, last Monday he came into court in a crusty humor and I noticed that no one who was brought before him escaped without a fine."

"What's that to do with his judicial rank?"

"It proves that he presides over a court of fine-all resort."

THE proprietor of a gaming house should never abuse his betters.

THE AUBURN COURIER,

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..........MARCH 6, 1890.

INDIANA has now a base ball league of her own, several of her cities having joined to it.

THE district judge of the second Montana district has decided that the vote in the election precinct that was thrown out, was legal.

THE BODY of Ex-Minister, Geo. H. Pendleton, who died in Europe last summer, has been brought home for burial at Columbus, Ohio. He was Cleveland's minister to Germany, and one of the best known statesmen in the west.

PIG iron was sent from this country to England before we became a nation, and of course there was no tariff. But it was found it could be produced here cheaper. Capitalists were then satisfied with fair profits. Now, they want the earth.

THERE is now talk that the great exposition at Chicago will be located on the lake front, just this side of the old exposition buildings. They will increase the area by filling out into the lake. There is nothing that Chicago won't undertake.

ALEX. COQUILLARD, one of the wealthiest and best known of South Bend's early citizens died last week at the Battle Creek Sanitarium. He was a heavy real estate owner, and since 1865 had been in the manufacture of buggies and wagons.

CLARKSON, assistant postmaster-general, says he has turned out 41,000 of the 55,000 fourth-class postmasters and wants to put out 10,000 more before he goes out. And the platform on which he went into power, distinctly pledged its officers not to do this very thing. Hypocrisy seems to be above par with the party in power.

IDAHO wants to be a state. As many of its few people are Mormons, Chinese, Indians and cowboys without a residence, it is believed there will not be as many voters in the state, as can be found in an average county in other states. It will prove about such a state as Nevada, with its two Senators and one representative.

THERE is a big school book trust, that has just been organized, all the old school book houses but the Harpers going into it. To the credit of the Harpers, be it said, they refused. But Indiana is safe, anyway, thanks to the public spirited men who have been fighting to get our schools into a state of independence. The Appletons are into the trust, also VanAntverp, Bragg & Co., A. S. Barnes & Co., Ivison, Blakeman & Co., these houses furnishing the officers of the trust.

REPUBLICAN papers are endeavoring to make people believe the addition of a tariff tax does not increase the cost of an article. They try to show this by saying that we last year imported iron and steel from Great Britain valued at 20 millions, and admit that the average duty on it was 40 per cent. Somebody had to pay to our government, this 40 per cent on 20 millions, which would be 8 millions. So the goods would cost 20 millions plus 8 millions, or 28 millions. Now what we would like to have answered is: "Is not the sum, 28 millions greater than the 20 millions?" If it is, then the tariff is added to the cost. But if 28 is just the same as 20, then we would like to have it explained. Also, who paid the 8 millions of duty?

FOSTER, the cocoanut importer in New York, lately had one of his vessels seized by the authorities of Columbia, in South America. He made a big fuss, and hurried to Secretary Blaine, to get his satisfaction out of those blamed South Americans. The matter has been investigated, and it turns out that Foster had sailed his vessel under the flag of the Dominican republic. So he will probably have to look to the Dominican government for redress. It has come to a fine pass, when a citizen of America, builds a vessel in Massachusetts, but must look to the negro republic of San Domingo for a flag. "But," say republicans, "let us put flags on all our country school houses; that is so patriotic, you know. But way off on the ocean, and down among the natives of South America, there is danger, you see, and then we will take down the American flag, and borrow one from the negroes of San Domingo. We are such patriotic people, don't you see?

THE Butler Record of last week devotes a great part of its space to fighting the prohibitionists. It is but a few years since these same papers were abusing the democrats because they would not unite with the republicans and put through a prohibitory amendment to the Indiana constitution. Hon. D. D. Moody, when in the legislature, was subjected to no end of tongue lashing because he did not shout for prohibition. All the republican editors within a hundred miles of here went for him. Now everyone of them is fighting the prohibitionists furiously. Why can't these good editors take the moral side of these questions and unite with the prohibitionists and democrats in putting a stop to the evils of intemperance? Let's all unite and help Brother Morton to kick that "buffet" out of his boarding house in Washington, coax Harrison to stop using wine at his table, get the republican party to abandon its free whisky plank, and do many other good things. Come over, gentlemen, onto the moral side of politics, and we will do you good.

Court.

Work began Monday when Judge Powers came down on the 10 a. m. train, and the court was lively getting cases ready till noon, when they adjourned till Tuesday at 10 a. m. Jerry Plum was made grand jury bailiff, and J. J. Latson is bailiff of the court room. Business is brisk and considerable has been done. Two changes were made in the grand jury. Mike Long and Jonathan Haverstock getting off, leaving the list now, J. A. S. Hamman, G. W. Coats, Albert Spurgeon, Isaac Ober, W. L. Meese, and G. W. Link; Meese and Link being the new members. The trial jury as selected, stands: A. McClish, Joseph McKay, A. Kester, Elisha Hallet, G. O. Denison, Wm. Kruse, Chas. Oster, Elmer Haines, Chas. Bassett, Chris. Brechbill, Abram Furnish and David Hough. They do not get to work till next week. Christian Conners was sent to the reform school till he is 21. Sheriff Plum had been trying him, since last term to see if he could reform him. But he was likely to steal the entire jail, having already got away with most of its contents. So he was sent off. The state case against John Smurr for cruelty to animals, Gen Blair was assigned as counsel for defendant. In the case of James Howey vs Rachel Howey, to secure an entry of "nunc pro tunc" this was granted, and we suppose that is "al hunc." Paul Preston vs B. & G. road for account was dismissed at his cost. P. J. Lockwood vs J. L. Davis and Salinda Eldridge for partition, Isaac Hague, Jas. Griswold and L. Bowers were appointed commissioners, to report at this term. Weamer vs Martin, Rudolph and others for damages, judgment of $15 again at Gary Rudolph, Chas. Martin and Winfield Rinehart, the other defendants getting off. This is the Fairfield case. Aldara Lower was divorced from Levi Lower.

Obituary.

Elmer Bowman Cutter was born, Oct. 12, 1831, in Headley, Mass., where he resided until May 1856. When at the age of 25 he came to Steuben Co., Ind., when and where he was united in marriage to Miss Ella Vinton—with whom an engagement had existed for some time. They were married at Jamestown. The following May, 1857, they removed to Waterloo, where they have resided ever since, until the recent removal to Evansville, Ind. As a result of their marriage, six children have been born to them; five of whom are now living. Carrie, Charlie, George, Fred and Earl; upon whom the bereaved widow and mother may lean for support and comfort. His last illness was of a protacted and dreadful character, being the result of a distressing disease contracted in the army—known as chronic, or camp rheumatism. This at last so weakened his splendid phyical powers that on Feb. 26, 1890, he succumbed to death, aged 58 years 4 months and 14 days.

The Queen of Fame.

Altogether new, and pleasing, was the entertainment given by the ladies of the Presbyterian church, at the Opera House Tuesday evening. There was no breath of failure about it. All the preparations had been completed. The dresses were in perfect taste and altogether appropriate to the character represented. Indeed, many of them were very striking, making a resemblance that startled the audience. Among these were the "Martha Washington" of Mrs. Ensley, the "Sister of Charity" of Miss Hattie Baker. Mrs. Sawyers had the most difficult part, as goddess of fame, but carried it out to perfection. She spoke her lines with correctness, ease and dignity, and looked the part well. The throne was a thing of beauty, and with the two pretty little girls, Roe Tefft and Gertie Carruth, as maids of honor, seated on either side formed a lovely picture. The page, Ott. Baxter, son of A. J. Baxter of Butler, was very graceful, and never made a mistake throughout the long program. The first to make a plea that the good she had done should give her the crown, was Mrs wash Askew, as Queen Isabella of Spain. She spoke well and was very graceful. Mrs. Lizzie Kelley, as Ruth, looked her part well, as she came forward with her sheaf of wheat and with her eastern costume. Mrs. Ross, as Fanny Fern, gave an excellent plea in favor of that popular author's claim to the prize. Mrs. H. E. Little, as Biddy O'Flanagan, called down the house. She is a natural mimic of Irish character, and her general make-up carried out the idea to perfection. Mrs. Barns represented Harriett Newell, the missionary, and plead that her good works and many sacrifices should give her the first place in the temple of fame. Miriam, by Miss Flora Hoffman, was a very fine rendering, both in speech and costume, and the climax was reached when she sang most sweetly a real "Egyptian Cradle Song," such as may be heard on the banks of the Nile. It was a pleasant surprise. Florence Nightingale, by Mrs. Forkner, was fine, and her allusions to the great services she had rendered humanity during the great Russian war, plead eloquently for her cause. Queen Elizabeth, by Laura Ober, gave one an idea of the style of that great ruler. She did the part well. Belva Lockwood, by Mrs. Emily Dills, was as natural a piece of acting as was given, and she was heartily applauded. Hortie Culbertson represented Madame Sontag and sang sweetly a fine piece of music appropriate to her character. Ina Tefft, as Pocahontas, was the ideal Indian maiden. Her dress and its ornaments and her long black hair were all very natural. Nellie Barns, as the little German peasant girl, was quite successful, the costume being in excellent keeping with the character. Her part was quite natural in manner and well spoken. Mrs. N. Ensley was a perfect image of the familiar Martha Washington, even to the beautiful white hair. She spoke well and created a pleasant impression. Lila Baker, as Sappho, made an eloquent plea for the crown. Her dress was a fine example of the ancient costume and her plea was earnest and eloquent. Alza Ralston, as Mary, Queen of Scots, had a lovely character, and with a dress that would become a queen, she pleaded her cause in a way almost irresistible, falling finally on her knees before the throne and keeping up the character of a high born lady of those days by giving her prayer or petition in Latin. This, while not understood generally, always impresses the hearer by its sweetness of tone when well given. This, too, was a surprise. Miss Hattie Baker, as a sister of charity, could not have looked the character better had she really been one who had taken the vows. It was a perfect make up. Clara Otto, as Joan D'Arc, looked the warlike maid she represented, with her armour and bright sword. She sang also, and showed that she possesses a voice of great beauty and power. Mother Goose, by Reba Houser, was cute, and called up to the hearers, many of the old half-forgotten jingles of that popular old dame. Samantha Allen, the ever droll and popular, was given by Mrs A. J. Ralston, greatly to the amusement of the audience. She is always a good speaker no matter what she takes. Mrs. Phil Plum carried the audience by storm as Mrs. Partington. Her allusions to the other "extinguished ladies" was very felicitous. Mrs. T. P. Scott was one of the very best, as Frances Willard. The reasons she gave were the very best and but for the fact that the piece arranged it otherwise, the merits of her case would have secured her the crown. She speaks well. Minnie McDowell gave her part, Elizabeth Fry, very nicely. Mrs. Sadie Yesbera was Jenny Lind, and after a speech of great feeling, she gave one an idea of the great singer's power, by singing a very difficult piece. Of course she succeeded, and the audience were charmed. Edna Davis had a most beautiful costume as Queen Victoria. She looked the part well, and spoke with ease. Mrs. Crane, of Butler, was rapturously applauded as Tabitha Primrose. She is a splendid delineator and rather carried off the honors in that line. Then followed the closing part, when Martha Washington received the crown. The entertainment then closed with a splendid spectacle, the grand march, in which the fine costumes of good looking ladies and the precision of the marching, all added to the success of the meeting. In fact, if the ladies should ever be so rash as to choose the COURIER editor to be their queen of fame, he would provide a large and extensive assortment of crowns and each should have one when she made a plea so eloquent. The house was well filled and they will make about $50. The piano used was a Haines, and was one of unusual power and beauty of tone. It was loaned to the ladies by D. H. Baldwin & Co., of Fort Wayne, and for this they desire to give earnest thanks.

Commissioner's Court.

The board has been very busy, but the nature of the work brought up is such that but little was completed. There were some remonstrances on ditches, especially the big Bubb ditch in Wilmington and Stafford, which is still under consideration. A remonstrance filed against the Barbara Baker ditch in Concord, and reviewers appointed. A. D. Moore, H. Gunsenhouser and A. Hablawetz, meet at source March 10. Yesterday was the day to consider applications for license. The term will likely be a long and busy one.

NEAR Ogden, Utah, last week, the engineer of a mail train discovered the mail coach was on fire. He was in a section that had no water, and the only way he saw was to run for a tank six miles ahead. This he did, but the mail in the car was nearly destroyed. There was of course, a big panic in the passenger coaches while the train was running for the tank. No one hurt.

The queen regent of Spain has "a bad cold"—not a good one, mind you, but a bad one. This information is valuable because it cost 25 cents a word to cable it to America.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

Nature is crying for Loose's Extract of Red Clover, Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

It is really entertaining to see how much more one man who runs a paper, but who never had anything to do with electric lighting, knows about where street lights should be placed, than the whole town board does. Suppose we turn off our five councilmen and let the editor of the Dispatch run the town. It would save a few dollars on the other four men, and then everything would be run as it ought to be.

J. D. McAnally, of Waterloo, was here Monday. He is still inventing. His latest is a device for cutting out pieces of wood to fill up the holes left by the screws in making such things as buggy boxes. It works like a charm and will prove a great thing for such purposes. Our fruit growers and gardeners will be interested in knowing that his sprayer for killing insects on trees, bushes, cabbage, etc., is a grand success. The fluid he uses, is not poisonous, and he has saved cabbage, plums, currants, and everything of that sort, with but small trouble or expense.

Remember that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has no equal as a specific for colds, coughs, and all affections of the throat and lungs. For nearly half a century it has been in greater demand than any other remedy for pulmonary complaints. All druggists have it for sale.

Avoid appearances.—A worthy gentleman, having an unusually red nose, was long suspected of being a tippler on the sly, by those not well acquainted with his strictly temperate habits. His unfortunate disfigurement was readily cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

The Rev. Dr. Deems will contribute an article entitled "Discoursing on the Humanities" to the number of Harper's Bazar, published February 28th. The same number will contain a story by Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, and a poem by the Virginian poet, Charles Washington Coleman.

W. J. Wilcox called up Thursday and had quite a chat with the COURIER folks. He says he has not been able to do a days work since he was so seriously trampled by a horse a year ago. He has also a large tumor on his breast caused from a wound in the war, and the two afflictions together keep him from work.

A sudden change in habits—a cessation of an active life, and leading one of a sedentary character, has always a tendency to affect the health of man in some manner, among which, affections of the bowels are perhaps the most prominent. To all such we would say, get a bottle of Johnston's Compound Sarsaparilla. It is pleasant to the taste, and, unlike most medicines which do not nauseate, it completely cures.

Albert Gall, of Indianapolis, made us a brief call last Wednesday in company with Hon. D. D. Moody. He is a candidate for the nomination for state treasurer on the democratic ticket, and has the appearance of being a thoroughly honest and substantial man. While this part of the state, will likely support Henry C. Berghoff, of Ft. Wayne, in the convention, we feel that Mr. Gall is a most worthy man and should he succeed in getting the nomination will receive a hearty support from all over the state.

"Judge McClellan voted for Chicago every time. There's nothing the matter with Judge McClellan" says the Lagrange Democrat. Certainly not. The Judge was in favor of Chicago from the first and knew his people were, also. Yet to our surprise last week, the Chicago Tribune told its readers that Judge McClellan, of the Twelfth Indiana district had voted against Chicago. A paper no better posted on current news than that, should have been published in Noah's ark.

Great New York Concert Co. of C. F. Higgins, will be at the Opera House, March 22. Full notice next week.

By the New Era we see that one of Albion's druggists is still advertising his Christmas goods. Must have been bad weather up there about the holidays.

The Butler Record, of Feb. 21, and the Lexington, Mo., Herald, of Feb. 22, have the same "original" editorial, "Protection cheapens Prices." Strange how men 600 miles apart would get up the same editorial on the same day, but one! And now comes the Albion New Era, four days later, with the familiar headlines, "Protection cheapens Prices." All these papers put it in as original. And there are several hundred able editors to hear from.

The protracted meetings which have been going on at the Church of God for nearly four weeks past, closed Sunday evening. The result of the efforts put forth by this meeting has been the means of several conversions. After the morning service, the congregation repaired to the creek at 7th street bridge to witness the baptizing of four young men. In the evening after an able sermon, delivered by Rev. Lovett, the ordinances of the church were observed.

The South Bend Times, in its Indiana items has this strange one. "By the recent death of a very wealthy man in Hanover, Germany, named Kocshner, parties in the eastern part of DeKalb county fall heir to an immense fortune, estimated at $30,000,000. All they are required to do is to prove their heirship." We think this means some other DeKalb county, or that it is one of those big fortunes that we so often hear about, but which never materialize.

The C. F. Higgins Concert Company, that is to be at the Opera House, March 22, has the most complete recommend we ever saw. It consists in a list of names and residences of those who heard them in Buffalo, N. Y. when they gave the entertainment for the Young Men's Christian Association in that city. After each name we see the individual remarks made by each. All are highly commendatory, and the company may well feel proud of such a testimonial. We believe our people will have an excellent musical entertainment from this company.

Steuben Republican: John Gantt, the veteran tramp printer, was in town over Sunday. John is now 65 years old, he served four years in the late unpleasantness, and has been on the road twenty-one years. He is an oddity among tramps as he is never without some money, which he rakes in by means of a little paper he issues on the road, called "Gantt's Typographical Tourist," and which circulates quite extensively among the craft. The old man is nearing the end and before long his form will be locked in a chase that only the Father of the chapel above can unlock.

In a new mining town, Elkins, in West Virginia, one day last week, two miners, about such chaps as our own "McGinty," got drunk, cleaned out a saloon, and in the racket one ran against the other, and though they were good friends, they had to get mad at the collision. They at once agreed to fight a duel. There was but one revolver between them, so they agreed to take it "turn about." One leaned up against the other side of the room and the other fired at him. Then the latter gave the former the revolver, and himself leaned up and was shot at, so they had it for two rounds each, when some thoughtless people stopped them. Both were slightly wounded.

Sherman Hollister returned from Indianapolis last week leaving his daughter, Mrs. Cobb, still improving. He has high hopes that she will be perfectly cured in time. We all hope this will prove true. While Mr. Hollister was there, the strange cure of Mrs. Suydam a patient in the same institution occurred. She had been troubled with hip disease, and was being treated. But she suddenly got up and walked about. Even her eyes, which had been affected were at once made well. She threw away her crutches, and her spectacles, and went about like a sound person. She declares it to be the result of prayer. She says that devout friends at her home, as well as herself, have been praying for her recovery. The doctors of the institution, while they have no faith in the cure by prayer, do not seem to be able to give any better account of the strange occurrence.

The Press has an item agreeing with speaker Reed, in his outrageous ruling, that members may be counted if needed to make a quorum whether they vote or not. But Blaine, Garfield, Hawley and Conger, all good republicans, denied a speaker's right to do this, and it has never been done before in the hundred years Congress has been in existence. And even Speaker Reed, in 1875 opposed his present views, and in a debate in congress on this very question said: "The constitutional idea of a quorum is not the presence of a majority of all the members of the House, but a majority of the members present and participating in the business of the House. It is not the visible presence of members, but their judgment and their votes the constitution calls for." Can a man tell two opposite stories without lying? If not, how does the Press like a man who in a public office, will take such a course?

C. F. Higgins Concert Co.

About two inches of snow fell Tuesday morning.

E. Shipe near Hudson has a big sale of personal property, March 27.

Ladies one and all don't fail to see the new millinery at Cowan Sisters'.

March 22, for the greatest and most popular concert company, at the Opera House.

Ada Spake who has been sick so long remains about the same, being very poorly.

Miss Myrtle Dills is organist at the Lutheran church, and does her work with grace and dignity.

Rainier & Headley bought a carload of fine fat cattle in Lagrange county which will be shipped here to-day.

March came in like a lion, and now many are anxious to see the lamb gamboling over the green pastures.

Perry Blodgett has a fine new house under way near the west end of Seventh street and will make him a nice home.

MARRIED: At the residence, and by Rev. W. O. Butler, March 1, 1890, Miss Emma Chapman and Marshall Lewis.

Violin, cornet, clarionet and piano played by artists of the highest order. Opera House, Saturday evening, March 22.

Thomas Rickett and J. D. Smith, of Concord, were here Saturday soliciting aid to build a church at Joe Koch's corners. It will be on Wm. Knight's land and be called the Fairview M. P. church. They are succeeding finely.

J. P. Ensley has thanks for a copy of the Ontario Record. It shows a fine view of the main street of his California home, and looks quite refreshing with its tropical trees and flowers, while we here, have or should have cold weather.

We note elsewhere, the marriage of Miss Emma Chapman to Mr. Marshall Lewis, which took place at Waterloo. We have not yet learned where they will settle down to housekeeping, but they have the COURIER's best wishes.

Rev. Mr. Boggs, of Ft. Wayne, preached at the Presbyterian church Sunday evening. A good congregation was present, and all were highly pleased. He is a minister of excellent ability. Mr Sawyers occupied Mr. Boggs' pulpit that day, returning here on Monday.

Rev. D. F. Kain preached a strong sermon at the Lutheran church Sunday. He preaches there also next Sunday, morning and evening. Looking over the field, we believe we have a little abler corps of ministers than any other town of Auburn's size can boast.

W. H. Fosmer representing Davis & Rankin, of Chicago, was here yesterday to interest our people in a combined butter and cheese factory. Let our people talk it up. He has just started a good joint stock company in Columbia City, and they are now putting up the building.

Mrs. Leas, of Cowan Sisters', is in Cleveland where she will remain several days in the trimming room of the firm of Toole, Reede & Co. She will also attend the openings of four large wholesale millinery houses where she will be able to get the very latest ideas in both New York and Paris patterns.

MARRIED: At the bride's home, by Rev. Pierce of Corunna, at 7 o'clock p. m. Feb. 20, 1890, Miss Blanche Britton to George E. Cox. About twenty invited guests were present. Among those from a distance were, Mr. and Mrs. Osburn, of Kendallville, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace, of Auburn, and Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Smith, of Angola. Many useful and valuable presents were received.

At the baptismal ceremonies at the Seventh street bridge Sunday, some bad boys were shooting mullein stalks and sticks across the creek into the crowd on the opposite bank, one of which struck James McDowell near the eye, giving him a painful wound. Had it struck him in the eye no doubt his eyesight would have been destroyed. Such boys should be sent to the house of correction.

A number of our young men are organizing an independent military company, and expect soon to have everything in working order. They do not join the state organization as the state regiments are all full. So they get their own arms and uniforms. Their guns are to be breech loading, Springfield rifles, and of a late pattern, and will be here this week. We predict the boys will have things in good shape. Lin Kuhlman is one of the leading spirits in the movement.

The Dispatch quotes with approval, from the Columbus Republican that "the democratic party of this state is opposed to restricting the liquor traffic in any manner whatever. We presume the editor of the Republican is himself a man who drinks. He is just as likely to be one of that kind, as to be a temperate man. A republican editor in his ignorance and self-glorification will talk that way even when his hide is full of cheap whisky. We know of some who do this very thing. Such men should not be so quoted, by the Dispatch at least, for we believe its editor is a strictly temperate man. But it shows the disposition to misrepresent and vilify the democracy, that is so prevalent in republican circles. As we have often said, the democrats are as free from intemperance as the republicans. Both parties have temperate men and both parties have drinking men, and it shows a very narrow-minded and bigoted view to say otherwise. Democrats have not perhaps, done as much windy talk over the subject, as republicans have, but they have done more effective work. We have had few laws to "restrict the liquor traffic" but have been the work of democrats. We now have very many and carefully prepared restrictions on the liquor traffic, the work chiefly of democrats. In fact, about all the laws on this subject we have is the work of democrats. How vainglorious, then, is such a statement as that the Dispatch quotes!

Miss Ina Tefft made a business trip to Waterloo, Tuesday.

Louis Laemle, of the Famous, has a new clerk Mr. Theodore Baker, of Plymouth, Ind.

George Patterson sold 115 tickets to the Queen of Fame entertainment within twenty four hours. There's business.

Morris Eckhart has returned from Toledo where he has been attending commercial college. He will return in the fall and finish his course.

Jacob McDonald, of Troy, was over here Tuesday and settled for the COURIER.

J. R. Steves sold his property on West Seventh street last week to Thos. H. Sprott. Consideration $1,200.

Look out for "Big Eliza" next Saturday, at J. E. Beugnot's Sample Room. Admission 5c. to see "Big Eliza." 10-10

Chas. Schaab is in Philadelphia and New York city this week buying a new stock of goods which will be here next week.

G. W. Craig was very sick last week, at one time his life being despaired of. We are happy to say he is now reported better.

We see that our friend Geo. S. Earlston, of Garrett, has been called to Chicago Junction, Ohio, and we gladly forward the COURIER to him, and hope his new location may prove everyway pleasant.

Peter B. Stroh, who raises fine Berkshire hogs will sell a lot of these and other fine stock at his Waterloo home, March 20. There will be also a horse, cows, a fine lot of Italian bees, etc. disposed of. All who want fine stock should be on hand.

Marcus Culver, of St. Joe, Missouri, came back Thursday for a brief visit with his old friends in and around Auburn. He leaves his folks all well and prospering in the west. He left here about two years ago, and has been employed in the stock yards at St. Joe.

The lakes at Syracuse and Cedar Beach will not be lowered, as was proposed. The supreme court has decided against it. This is as should be. These lakes are the largest and best in the state and should be kept as they are for the use of the people of the state.

Huntington county offers James R. Slack as a candidate for treasurer of the state on the democratic ticket. He is a son of the late Gen. James R. Slack and certainly comes of good stock. So far, only most excellent timber has been offered for this place by the democrats.

Wm. Reed and wife, of Red Wing, Minnesota, are here visiting his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Reed, and his sister, Mrs. Moss. He formerly resided this county and at Edgerton, Ohio. He says they have ice in southern Minnesota 22 inches thick, and a foot of snow when he left.

Trustee James Blake and Squire A. M. Barnes, of Smithfield, were down here Tuesday. Mr. Blake bought a horse of T. H. Sprott, and the two were figuring on how to get it home over the bad roads, and which would be better, to borrow a buggy and try to ride, go home afoot and lead the horse, or have the horse lead them. It was a serious question.

The brethren of the U. B. church, will commence a series of meetings in the German Methodist church in this place on Sunday evening, March, 9, and will continue during the week. The meetings will be in charge of Rev. A. J. Coder of Mayville, and he will be assisted by Rev E. A. Griffin of Auburn. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these meetings.

Grandma Weaver, living on south Main street, celebrated her 90th anniversary last Monday. Quite a company of her children, grand-children and other relatives assembled at her spacious residence to remind this good-natured lady of this great event, and from all appearance it was an enjoyable affair. It may be said that she is extraordinarily spry for a person of her age and is enjoying a reasonable degree of good health. May she live to enjoy many more such happy events. And when her pilgrimage on earth is drawn to a close, may the memory left behind give evidence of a long, well spent life.

Mrs. Lackey, wife of G. W. Lackey, of Garrett, was buried here last Friday. The interment was in Evergreen Cemetery instead of Woodlawn, as we had announced. Many friends of the deceased came over to accompany her remains to their last resting place, and more would have come but for the difficulty of getting conveyance. There would also have been many of our people who would have gone over to Garrett to attend the funeral, but the bad roads and absence of trains prevented. Frank Sembower had intended to have an extra come over here to take the friends over to Garrett, but he could get no coach. They had to send to Chicago to get the one in which they finally came to Auburn with the deceased. Our people, and the people of Garrett would be pleased to have some arrangements by which the citizens of both towns could get back and forth.

The Dispatch strains a point to find fault with the revenue plank in the prohibition platform. But there is no mistaking the meaning of the plank. It is simple and full of good sense and sound patriotism. It does not advocate the taxing of the necessaries of life, and putting the luxuries on the free list. That is the substance, and it hurts a republican to hear any set of men go back on these twin relics of republican barbarism, "High priced necessaries and free whisky and tobacco." The funniest part of all, however, is to hear these same republican papers, accuse the democrats of being in favor of intemperance. One thing, we are glad to believe, is, that democrats are not hypocritical. Some of them drink whisky and don't try to lie out of it or play the hypocrite. But as many republicans drink as much whisky, and then go about the country posing as the only and original "simon pure" temperance people.

Since writing our denunciation of the Clipper editors last week we have talked with every member of the city government and they agree it was just what ought to have been said. The Clipper has week after week been accusing them of mismanagement and corrupt practices and has in numerous instances laid itself liable to an action for damages. Some have suggested that an action be begun against them and the only reason we have heard, that was against such a course, is, that they have little or nothing that could be reached. How this may be, we can't say, for we are told the tax list don't show up much for either of them. But we think it a pretty state of things when such men as councilmen Heberling, Potter, Matheny, Lanning and Sebring can be accused of corrupt mismanagement of the city's business, and yet have no recourse in the courts. The same may be said of Marshal Picker and Clerk Aber. All of these now feel that they have been criminally misrepresented, and have so expressed themselves to us. The same may be said of Joseph Pfefferl, who is known everywhere as an honest man, one who earns his livlihood by honest labor, and wrongs no man. He should take active means of redress. No one's good name is safe in range of such a characterless sheet run by such an irresponsible pair of public nuisances.

We are pleased to see what Frank Seiler, of Fairfield, says about the new text books, in his school report which we publish this week. "The new school books" he says, "seemed to put a new impetus into the minds of the pupils. We were especially delighted with the readers and geography." Mr. Seiler is a teacher of experience and ability, and above all, thoroughly honest. We have felt all along, that an earnest, painstaking, and well posted teacher, would find the new books a great help. They will not only awaken a new interest in the pupils, but in the teacher as well. What teacher is there but would gladly be rid of the readers he has been familiar with from his earliest school days? We have nothing to say against McGuffey's readers, as such. They are good, in fact, are excellent. But they are old, oh, so very, very old. Our people can remember them back for forty years. Teachers who have been in the work for ten, fifteen, and as some can say, twenty years, must certainly be tired of them. When a lesson is to be heard, how familiar every word sounds! He can shut his eyes and repeat the whole of it. The pupils, too, have read it, till they have adopted a certain style, possibly an incorrect style, and no amount of patience and skill on the part of the teacher, may avail to get them out of the rut. But now, here come up a class with a new reader. The pieces to be read and studied are new. New thoughts are opened up, new ideas follow the new thoughts, and new methods in reading follow both. How the pupils are delighted! With what new zest do they enter on the recitation. And the teacher—who shall know the pleasure with which he hails the new fields into which he may lead his little flock? Give us live teachers and live school officers and there will be little trouble with the parents, and none whatever with the pupils. The fault is not in the new books. It must be looked for elsewhere. We extend to Mr. Seiler the right hand of fellowship.

C. LONGFELLOW, druggist at Machias, Me., inserted an advertisement of his business in the first issue of the local paper forty years ago and has kept it in ever since.

A CITIZEN of Taunton, Mass., says that he knows a woman who, for several years, made from 1,000 to 1,200 pies a year for a family of three persons, and one member has eaten more than two-thirds of them.

COLONEL NORTH's dog-house, at London, is a perfect canine palace, filled with costly animals. The best dog cost $5,250. There is a dressing-room, and a cloak-room filled with dog's coats, and fresh shoulders of mutton make the dogs' daily dinner.

FIFTEEN years ago Henry Hill, of Council Bluffs, swore that he would not shave until Susan B. Anthony was elected President. The other day his whiskers, which were three feet long, became entangled in some machinery and were mostly pulled out by the roots, and he is probably pretty well cured of his foolishness.

IT is becoming the custom for busy and wealthy women to have young ladies for private secretaries. The feminine private secretary keeps the run of the visiting list, answers notes, and makes engagements and excuses. Her duties require an excellent education, high bred manners, and the greatest tact and delicacy.

THE hangman in New South Wales is looked upon with such horror that he recently found himself completely boycotted on reaching Wagga-Wagga to perform an execution. The cabmen refused unanimously to drive him from the railway station, the porters also declined to carry his luggage, and the unlucky executioner was obliged to trudge off on foot, struggling with his various traps.

HERE is something new in journalism. A New York paper offers a prize of $250 for every person found dead with a copy of the latest issue of the paper on his person, thus guaranteeing to amuse and instruct a man while he lives and provide for his family when he is taken away. For novelty and originality in schemes to build up a circulation this one seems to deserve early recognition.

FRED HAUN, a Collinwood (Ohio) man, was taken prisoner at Kingston, Ga., in '64, and was stripped of accouterments, among which was a cap box with his name stenciled upon it. He escaped and thought no more of the cap box until it was found by a Miss Kerns in a coal shed near Collinwood last week. How it gravitated to its owner during twenty-five years' wandering is a mystery.

SAN PEDRO MARTIN, in Lower California, it has been ascertained, is not as has been generally supposed a chain of mountains, but a single one. It is about 100 miles in length and from ten to thirty in width, containing about 1,000,000 acres of land, one-half of which is covered with fine timber. Many of the trees are giants. The scenery in the mountain is grand. Its average hight is 12,800 feet.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS pleasantly related this one on himself the other day in an address: "I was making a public speech some little time ago, and one of my hearers remarked to his neighbor, who happened to be a personal friend of mine, 'What a pity! What a pity!' 'Why, what is the pity?' said my friend. 'Well, it is a great pity that a man with such white whiskers should wear such a very brown wig.'"

BOSWORTH SMITH, in a report on the Kolar gold field in Southern India, records some finds of old mining implements, old timbering, fragments of bones, an old oil lamp, and broken pieces of earthen ware, including a crucible, the remains of ancient mining operations. He expressed astonishment at the fact that the old miners were able to reach depths of 200 or 300 feet through hard rock with the simple appliances at their command.

JOHN CLINE, a Harrisburg bricklayer, has portions of a brick and mortar picked up in the ruins of the palace of the Cæsar's Palatine Hall, at Rome, Italy, by a son of the late Dr. O'Connor, who has just returned from a tour of Europe. The material of the brick is similar to that of which American fire brick is made, but this ancient brick is only an inch thick and it and the mortar are 1,800 years old. Mr. Cline prizes the relics of eighteen centuries as only an old bricklayer could such curiosities.

AN unexpected plunge in Swan Lake, Alabama, thoroughly aroused a sleepy railroad passenger. As the west-bound train was nearing Decatur, the brakeman shouted, "next stop is Decatur!" The passenger caught the last word, and, in his sleepy state, thinking the train had arrived, he rushed out on the platform and stepped off. He fell forty feet, alighting in the middle of the lake, which is twenty feet deep and two hundred and fifty feet wide. Although incumbered with boots and overcoat, he swam safely to the shore.

A MINER in Rhonoda named David Davis is just now an interesting subject for medical doctors and doctors of divinity. He was a victim of the terrible explosion of Pen-y-Craig in 1880. He was bed-ridden for four years, recovered sufficiently to be able to go about, but was completely deaf and dumb. His doctor hit upon a novel plan to restore his hearing. He was placed by the side of a big gun during target practice. After the sixth shot his hearing came suddenly back to him, but he remained dumb. The other day one of his companions said something to him that put him in a towering passion, and his speech returned in a flood of profanity.

HENRY WOOD, a farmer near Beach City, Stark County, Ohio, welcomed a plausible young stranger claiming to be a son of a deceased brother from California. The newcomer had the family history quite pat and was treated as one of the family, furnished good clothes, loaned a good deal of money, and obtained a lucrative situation. He courted and was engaged to a daughter of Wood, as he was supposed a cousin. The day before the marriage the chance arrival of an old friend of the California brother made known that his only son had died several years ago. The impostor fled, narrowly escaping arrest. A likeness to the Wood family had made his deception easy.

ADAM FOREPAUGH, it is said, never smoked nor chewed tobacco, nor drank intoxicating liquors. His success was due to thorough application to his business and to shrewd business methods. He was kind at heart—especially so to animals—rough in exterior, fond of a joke, haughty and brusque to his employes, except heads of departments, and he attended to the smallest details himself. When all went well he used to go to his bed in his private car every night at 10 o'clock; at home this was his invariable hour of retiring. He always sat at the main entrance of the show, and his face was more familiar to the great mass of people, rich and poor, and in every State, than probably any living American.

SOME time ago there appeared in a Washington paper the following advertisement:

WANTED—By a gentleman and wife, old residents of Washington, half a pew or two seats in St. John's Episcopal Church; best of social references given.

This willingness to give social references to secure the privilege of worshiping at St. John's Church reminds the Washington Post of a story of President Lincoln. One day during the war a young officer called upon him to secure an appointment in the army, and brought him letters of recommendation signed by all the F. F. V.'s in the District of Columbia. There had been no application for office before President Lincoln so strongly supported by the aristocracy, and, turning to the young man, he told him that he would give him the appointment, and handed him back the papers. "Don't you want to place the papers on file?" asked the officeseeker. "I supposed that was the custom." "Yes, that is the custom," said President Lincoln; "but you had better take them with you, as you might want to join St. John's Church."

A Georgia Federal Regiment.

Although not generally known, it is nevertheless true, that Georgia furnished one regiment of infantry to the Federal service during the civil war. It was not a full regiment, and somehow the officers and men were never paid for their services, although they did hard fighting, and a number of them were killed and wounded. This Georgia command was made up among the hard Unionists of Whitfield, Murray, Fannin, Dawson, and Pickens, the last two counties furnishing the majority of recruits. The raising of the corps was authorized by Gen. Thomas while commanding the Army of the Cumberland. After doing valuable service it was surprised and broken up by a Confederate force.

A REMARKABLE poised rock, famous throughout South America as "the moving stone," may be seen on Tandil mountain, in Buenos Ayers. It is twenty-four feet high, thirty feet long, and eighteen feet wide, containing over 5,000 cubic feet, and weighing some 25 tons. It is irregularly conical in shape, and rests upon a conical support with a bearing surface some ten inches in diameter. The power of a single man is sufficient to oscillate the enormous mass, which, indeed is often swayed by the wind.

AN anemometer 994 feet above the ground, on the Eiffel tower, has measured an average wind velocity of sixteen miles an hour, while a similar instrument at the height of sixty-six feet, near the base of the tower, showed an average of only five miles.

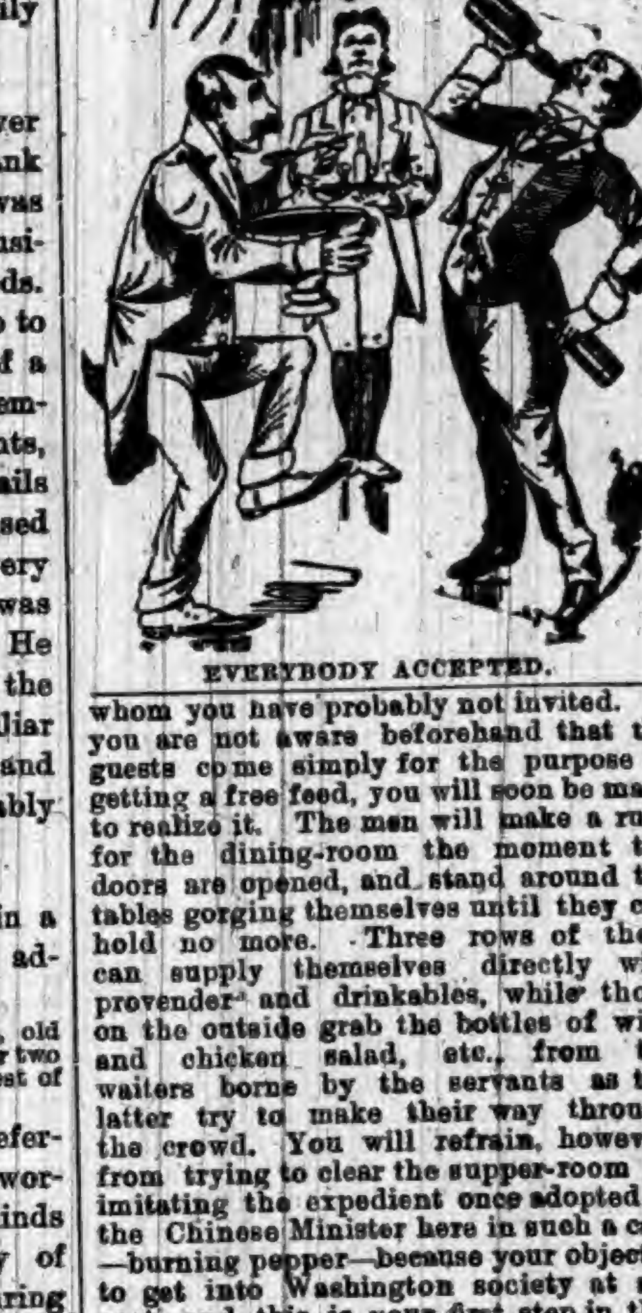
WASHINGTON SOCIETY.

GULFS BETWEEN THE DIFFERENT SOCIAL CLASSES.

Efforts Made by Parvenu Millionaires to Break Into Fashionable Circles—It May Be Done, but at the Expense of Much Good Food, Choice Wines, and Silverware.

FASHION at the national capital puts on her gayest toys in the winter season. Each year there are more rich people there, who go for the purpose of having a good time, and are willing to pay for it, they entertain lavishly, many of them with a very substantial object in view, namely, to get into society. Washington is, in fact, a sort of winter Newport. Money is no object to them, and their chief business in life is giving entertainments and going to other people's entertainments. The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times, referring to this matter, says: A general impression has gone abroad to the effect that anybody can obtain an entrance into Washington society, owing to the necessarily mixed character of the cosmopolite population here, but this is not really true, although there is a certain basis of fact for the statement. Undoubtedly many persons of large means do come hither, and, by the judicious use of cash, secure social position; but what city is there in this world to-day where the same thing may not be accomplished in the same manner? One thing only is necessary in such a case—that the wealthy parvenu should leave the town where he has made his money and go to another. In Washington at this very time there are people who have earned fortunes here in trade, and who are anxious to be received in the exclusive set, but they have not succeeded because the shop is too much in evidence, so to speak. In New York, or in any other large city, they would have a much better chance. Thus millionaire tradespeople from elsewhere migrate to the capital, and, by earnest effort and the employment of the mighty power that money signifies, find their way into the swim.

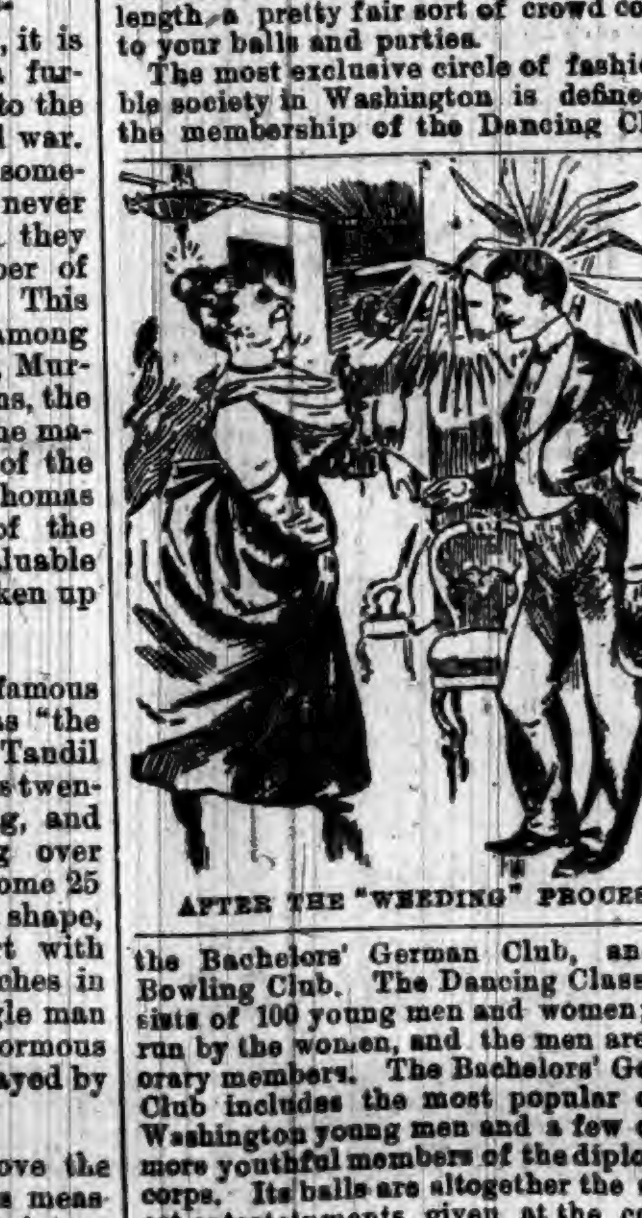
The proper thing to do, if you are a parvenu millionaire with social ambition—presumably your wife and children will have the ambition, and not yourself—is to come to Washington and begin operations by hiring a fine house in the midst of the most intensely fashionable quarter. Money, it must be remembered from the start, is no object; you are, of course, prepared to spend your hard-earned dollars like water in pursuit of the social ignis fatuus. Accordingly you proceed, after furnishing your house gorgeously, to give a series of public entertainments. You do not know anybody, and so you invite everybody. The people you are really anxious to get in with will not come; but plenty of others will, among them many whom you have probably not invited. If you are not aware beforehand that the guests come simply for the purpose of getting a free feed, you will soon be made to realize it. The men will make a rush for the dining-room the moment the doors are opened, and stand around the tables gorging themselves until they can hold no more. Three rows of them can supply themselves directly with provender and drinkables, while those on the outside grab the bottles of wine and chicken salad, etc., from the waiters borne by the servants as the latter try to make their way through the crowd. You will refrain, however, from trying to clear the supper-room by imitating the expedient once adopted by the Chinese Minister here in such a case—burning pepper—because your object is to get into Washington society at any cost, and this is your first step in that direction. It will not occasion you too much discomposure when you observe that your guests dispose of the soiled plates by throwing them under the tables, and your wife and daughter will merely smile graciously as hiccoughing good-nights are addressed to them by young men who have difficulty in concealing a quart bottle of extra-dry champagne under each arm, beneath their dress-coats; nor will you be otherwise than philosophical about it when you discover, after the final departure of the company, including the removal of a few gentlemen who have accidentally fallen asleep on the stairs, that many articles of silver, as well as the more readily portable of the parlor ornaments, have also disappeared. For this, you see, must all be gone through if you are to get into society at the national capital.



EVERYBODY ACCEPTED.

Far from being discouraged, you give other entertainments, each one a little more select than the last—your wife weeding her invitation list continually of the most undesirable people—until at length a pretty fair sort of crowd comes to your balls and parties.

The most exclusive circle of fashionable society in Washington is defined by the membership of the Dancing Class, the Bachelors' German Club, and the Bowling Club. The Dancing Class consists of 100 young men and women; it is run by the women, and the men are honorary members. The Bachelors' German Club includes the most popular of the Washington young men and a few of the more youthful members of the diplomatic corps. Its balls are altogether the swellest entertainments given at the capital; the girls all wear their very best gowns at them, and to be invited to receive for the club is the acme of a woman's ambition.



AFTER THE "WEEDING" PROCESS.

The third distinct branch of Washington society is the official. The President leads this, of course, with his formal entertainments to Congress, the diplomatic corps, the marine corps, the army, navy, judiciary, and the public at large. Cabinet officers entertain usually on the same principles; likewise, to a certain extent, Senators and Representatives, if they wish. No exclusive principle is exercised. Any one may leave cards on the wives of the highest public officials and receive cards and invitations to receptions in return. It is this fact, presumably, that has given rise to the notion that anybody may get into Washington society; but the fact is that this official society is as distinct from fashionable society as it is from the old Washingtonian crowd. Official rank in fashionable society here is only valuable to a modified extent. If a high official is also a fashionable man his place lends him prestige; but, if he isn't a fashionable man, he won't be in that sort of society at all. Cabinet officers are necessarily exceptions to this rule. It is a rare thing to meet a member of Congress, even a Senator, in fashionable society; if a Senator or Representative entertains at all, he is more apt to be a diner-out and a giver of dinners than to go in any especial set. The army and navy, taking them at large, are within the lines of official society, but being in the army and navy does not give a man fashionable position. The navy men are much more apt to be socially available than those of the army, who spend so much of their lives on frontier posts. Emerson says that life on the sea polishes men. So it does, and, besides, naval officers see a great deal of the best society in all parts of the world while in port. One of the gay boys who sail the ocean blue, now in Washington, is said to have led germans in every port of the civilized world.

EVOLUTION OF STYLISH HATS.

Some of the Secrets of a Fashionable Milliner.

THE famous insensibility of an Oriental priest in an ecstatic trance is nowhere in comparison with the indifference shown by a fashionable woman engaged in trying on a new hat before the glass, and I would stake a large sum that none of the clients of a certain famous New York establishment perceived me as I sat chatting with—well, call her the bossine. I had asked her to describe to me the complete genesis of a fashionable hat.

"Do you wish," she replied, "to hear the history of the hat I made for Mrs. James Brown-Potter? It is a typical case." And thereupon she narrated the following: "When the rehearsals of 'Camille' were begun, Mrs. Potter came to me to order a hat. Now, Camille is a nervous woman, fashionable as to clothes, and, above all, eccentric. Eccentricity, then, must be the dominant trait of the hat. But it must also partake of the individual taste—the caprice of the actress. Now, Mrs. Potter knows very well that one of her principal charms is her wavy, fluffy, reddish hair, which seems always on the point of escaping from its pins and of rolling down her shoulders. She therefore wished to have her hair show both in front and behind. Having expressed this desire, she seated herself before the large mirror, and I placed upon her bright auburn locks the frame of the longed-for hat. It was at this moment only an unpromising compound of crinoline and wire; but patiently and carefully, with many changes and the most minute alterations, often stepping back to study the effect, I did my best to adapt the eccentric head-dress to the actress' striking face. In two sittings the frame was outlined. It was then given to the straw-sewer, who at once copied the model. Then we began to look for trimmings that would make the hat harmonize with the gown. There was really an embarrassment of choice, for you know how inexhaustible the milliner's palette always is, with its flowers, fruits, feathers, birds, insects, furs, ribbons, velvet, lace, pearls, steel, jet; the entire fauna and flora of creation agree in trying to lend luster to our works of art. Such is the usual history of stage hats. Ladies see them at the first representation of the play, and if the model meets with success, every one wants a copy of it. But there are many hats, too, which are introduced by society-leaders. People see them at some public gathering, at church, or on the drive, and our customers begin to call for duplicates of them. There are fashionable women who are quite proud to know that a hat christened with their name has gained a vogue."

When a hat has once been carefully elaborated, and is favorably received by the public, it becomes forthwith a type, subject to all sorts of modifications. Thus the primitive model gives rise to hats as numerous as sands of the sea or stars of night.—New York letter to Chicago Ledger.

Not Tall Enough.

History has recorded that a foreign princess to whom Henry VIII. of England offered his hand in marriage sent back the pointed answer that "if she had two heads she would gladly have placed one of them at his Majesty's disposal." This allusion to the fate of Anne Boleyn and Katherine Howard was a good specimen of epigrammatic smartness of that period; but, says Mr. David Ker, an equally creditable performance has been furnished by our own age.

Just at the time when vague reports were beginning to creep abroad that Germany was meditating a fresh extension of her frontier at the expense of Holland, a Dutch official of high rank happened to be visiting the court of Berlin, where he was handsomely entertained. Among other spectacles got up to amuse him, a review was organized at Potsdam.

"What does your excellency think of our soldiers?" asked Prince Bismarck, as one of the regiments came marching past in admirable order.

"They look as if they knew how to fight," replied the visitor, gravely; "but they are not quite tall enough."

The Prince looked rather surprised at this disparaging criticism. He made no answer, however, and several other regiments filed past in succession; but the Dutchman's verdict upon each and all was still the same: "Not tall enough."

At length the Grenadiers of the Guard made their appearance—a magnificent body of veterans, big and stalwart enough to have satisfied even the giant-loving father of Frederick the Great; but the inexorable critic merely said, "Fine soldiers, but not tall enough."

Then Prince Bismarck fairly lost patience, and rejoined, somewhat sharply, "These grenadiers are the finest men in our whole army; may I ask what your excellency is pleased to mean by saying that they are not tall enough?"

The Dutchman looked him full in the face, and replied, with emphasis, "I mean that we can flood our country twelve feet deep."

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE TONIC
—AND—
Stomach AND Liver Cure
The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.
It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.
As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.
CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic
Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

THE LOST CHILD.

BY MRS. NAPOLEON B. MORANGE.

Lost! Lost! in the bewildering throng,
Baffled by the human current, surging strong;
Amid the savage roar its voice is drowned,
No ear has caught the feeble, plaintive sound;
"Mamma! mamma!" it calls, then glances shy,
Betraying dread of every passer-by.

Its eyes are tear-blind, and its feet
Are, O, so weary, wandering the street;
"Mamma! mamma!" it calls, and calls again,
Adding each time a keener note of pain;
It runs, then pauses, overwhelmed with fears,
For only strangers cross its mist of tears.

The traces of a mother's care
Still linger in the curled and sunny hair;
The playing children tempt it not to stop,
Though in its hand is clutched a striped top,
And as it hurries through the alien town,
One little stocking slips unheeded down.

At last the faint appeal is heard,
And sleeping hearts of sympathy are stirred;
Some bend to ask its name—its mother's name—
On all the world it seems to have no claim.
It stares at every one in blank amaze,
While o'er its face a tangled ringlet strays.

Arrested on its errant course,
The very tears are scared back to their source;
One chubby hand is lifted to its brow,
Its head droops like a broken flower now;
To ask, suggest, or coax, alike are vain,
No hint of home or mother can they gain.

But suddenly from out the crowd
A presence dawns, like sunshine from a cloud,
A sob of gladness heaves the little breast!
Bystanders need no more, they know the rest.
"Mamma! mamma!" it shouts with ringing joy,
And to her heart the mother clasps her boy.

NEW YORK CITY.

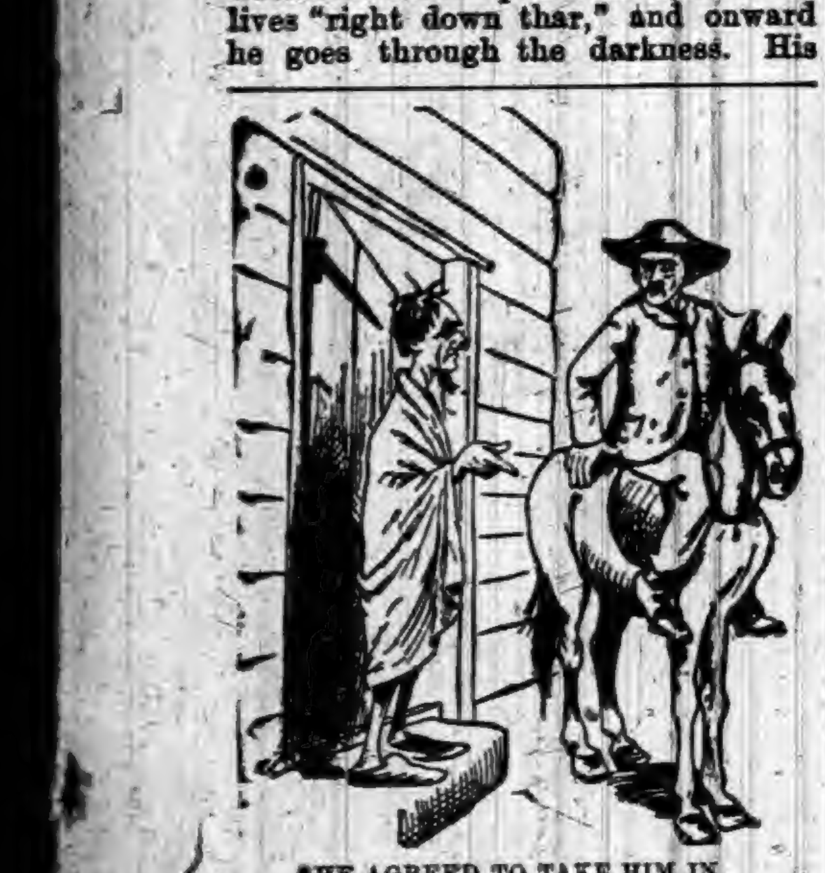
THEY TOOK HIM IN.

To be overtaken by night in the loneliest part of East Tennessee is to the traveler a condition to be lamented, writes Opie P. Read, in the Chicago Times. The road is rough and the deep valleys have gathered a darkness so dense that they seem the very bottomless pits of blackness. A ray of yellowish light, trembling its way through the gloom, comes down from a hill where dogs are barking. The traveler is gladdened and, riding up to a log cabin, shouts: "Halloa!" Some one opens the door.

"I would like to stay over night with you. I am cold, hungry, and tired, and don't believe I can go another step."

"Wall, we kain't take in no pusson, caze we an't got no place for a pusson ter sleep; but ef you'll go right down yan ter Jim Mason's he'll keep you in the finest sorter shape. Lives right down thar at the foot of the hill."

The traveler turns away disappointed, of course, but he has placed a wreath of faith upon Jim Mason who lives "right down thar," and onward he goes through the darkness. His horse stumbles, and sometimes he has to stop and feel his way. Mile after mile is passed, it seems, but no beam of light comes trembling out to meet him. He curses the man who has lied to him, and in his anger he thinks of finding his way back and choking the scoundrel, when suddenly a light down the valley warms his heart. He rides up to a cabin. "Halloa!" Door is opened; man pokes his head out.



"HE AGREED TO TAKE HIM IN.

"Jim Mason live here?"

"What do you want with him?"

"I want to stay all night."

"Oh, 'lowed mebbe yer wanted ter snatch him up befo' the Gran' Jury. Yes, I live here."

"Well, I was told away back yonder, I don't know how far, that you would accommodate me for the night."

"Red-headed feller was it that told you?" he asked, still standing with his head poked out.

"I don't know; it was too dark to see."

"Wall, if it was a red-headed feller it was my son-in-law, an' I reckon he's the biggest liar in East Tennessy."

"I don't know who it was, but the question is, can I stay?"

"Question's mighty easy answered. You kain't."

"But, my dear sir, I can not go any further."

"Bleeged to you for callin' me a dear sar, but I reckon you'll hafter go furder. Sam Mayhew lives right down thar, an' I think he'd be glad to take you. Jest tell Sam that you air from Texas an' know his folks that went out thar three years ago. Tell him you knowd Alf, and Tobe, and the rest of 'em. My brother Pete went out thar with them. Community lost a good man when Pete left, I tell you. Tall, rawboned feller that could lift one side of a steer."

I was the traveler, and I saw my chance. No casuistry could stand up against such inducements to tell a lie—yea, so great a necessity of it. I would deceive him.

"My dear sir. I am from Texas, sure enough, and I do know his people, though, of course, not intimately."

"Know Alf?"

"Yes."

"An' Tobe?"

"I do."

"Look here, you mout know my brother Pete, that lives out there in Calhoon County."

"I am acquainted with him. Out there he is known as Long Pete."

"Wall, I declar, stranger, you air gettin' interestin'."

"Shall I get down and come in?"

"Yes, but wait a minit. Now you air a truthful man, air you?"

"I have always been regarded as such."

"Ah, bah, an' I don't like ter doubt you, but thar's just one thing, an' only one, that looks a little suspicious."

"Tell me what it is, and I will endeavor to explain."

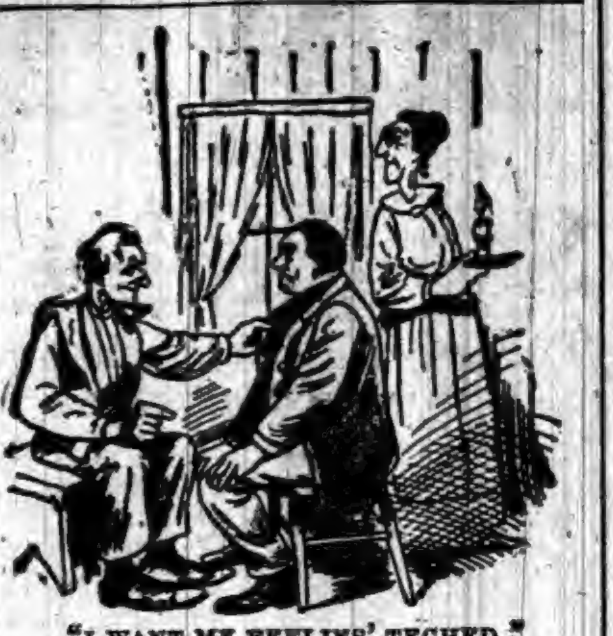
"Wush you would explain. You see, I an't got no brother Pete an' never did have none. I'm Pete myse'f. Knowd you was a rascal soon as I heard you speak. Good-night."

He shut the door and I turned away. My horse stumbled, so rough was the way, and at one time fell to his knees. It must have been twelve o'clock when I saw another light. When I yelled a man opened the door.

"Who's that?"

Another lie might be successful. I would take a desperate chance.

"I am a preacher," I answered, "cold, hungry, tired, and lost in this awful night of darkness. Can you take me in?"



"I WANT MY FEELINS' TECHED."

"What sort of a preacher?"

"Methodist."

"Wall, I reckon he ken," a woman's voice answered. "Jest get right down an' come in, an' Dick, you take the brother's hoss. Bless my life; the idea of a preacher bein' lost sich a night as this. Walk right in, brother."

They had been to bed, but a great log-fire burned in the immense fireplace. The man took my horse and the woman busied herself with putting her house in order, and, during the time, deplored the hardships to which I had been subjected. The man, a comical old fellow with dead-grass whiskers, soon returned and shook hands with me time and again.

"Mighty glad ter see you, brother. Han't been a preacher at my house fur a powerful long time. Powerful glad ter see you. Stranger come along in the arly part of the night an' wanted to stay with us, an' although we've got a first-rate bed up-stairs I sent him on down ter Sam Mason's, 'cause I 'lowed suthin' mout happen. Powerful glad ter see you."

He leaned over, and, placing his hand on my knee, gazed affectionately into my face.

"Dick," exclaimed his wife, "don't eat the brother up, fur mussy sake."

"No, Puss," he rejoined, "I love you too well ter deprive you of that air pleasure. Brother, what is yo' name?"

"Sanderson," I answered.

"Wall, I am powerful glad to see you. Puss, slip out thar an' snatch the feathers offen the Dominecker hen and cook her fur Brother Sanderson. Wake up Sim an' tell him thar's er preacher in the house. Wush you could a met my daughter Polly, but she married Nat Buckley last week. As good a worker at the mourner's bench as you ever seed. Drawed the Pettygast boys in when nobody else could teach 'em. I'm powerful glad ter see you. What sort of a hoss air you ridin'?"

"A pretty fair animal."

"Wall, I reckon we ken strike up a trade termorrow before church time."

"Before church time?"

"Yis; the meetin' house is right down thar in the holler; so you didn't miss it so mighty fur atter all. Don't pay no 'tention to that noise. It's only the Dominecker hen a squawlin'. Better squawl, too, fur when that wife of mine spreads the palms of her hands out on a hen, why the hen's life ends pretty soon afterwards, if not right thar. Mighty good thing they sent you, fur our regular preacher is sick an' kain't fill the pulpit, an' the folks don't know it, but I reckon you hearn of it an' come to take his place. Wall, I'll git up arly an' build a fire in the meetin' house, an' my boy ken ride all aroun' an' tell the folks that have hearn of Brother Rice's sickness that Brother Sanderson will preach. Powerful glad to see you. Why, brother, I hope you an't sick, air you?"

I must have looked bad at that moment; indeed my hair must have begun to rise on the top of my head. Preach—I couldn't have said six words. Would it do to undeceive the old fellow? No. He was comical in some respects, but his eyes said "Don't you fool with me."

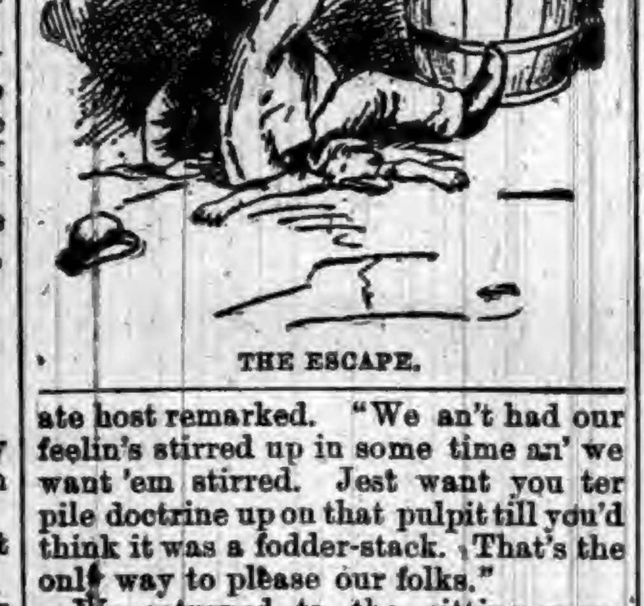
The woman entered: "Fur pity sake, Dick, air you still trying ter eat the brother up? A pusson would think that you never hurt nobody in your life, you air so lovin', but Sam Bettis wouldn't think so."

"Wall, he told me a lie, Puss, an' I won't stand that frum nobody. I don't mind a man cheatin' me outen a dime once in a while, but it won't do fur a pusson ter lie ter me about nothin' a tall."

"Come on, brother, an' eat a bite," said the woman.

I had been exceedingly hungry, but my appetite was gone. The life of the Dominecker hen might have been spared.

"I expect a powerful sermon from you termorrer, brother," my affectionate host remarked. "We an't had our feelin's stirred up in some time an' we want 'em stirred. Jest want you ter pile doctrine up on that pulpit till you'd think it was a fodder-stack. That's the only way to please our folks."



THE ESCAPE.

We returned to the sitting-room. Something had to be done.

"Now, brother," said the host, "jest step right up thar and go to bed, fur you'll need a little sleep."

"Thank you, but let me go out and see about my horse."

"Oh, no; I've fixed him all right."

"But I'd rather look after him again."

"Wall, I'll go out and see to him. You jist must sleep, fur we want a powerful sermon termorrer. Take off yo' shoes right down here by the fire."

"No, I'll take them off up-stairs."

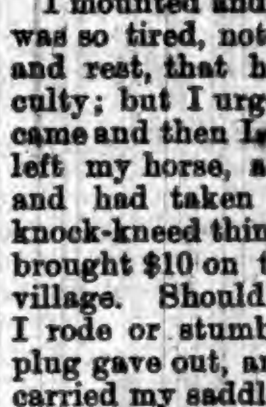
The room above was reached by means of a ladder. I bade them good-night and climbed up. My intention was to escape before daylight. I could not help but groan when I glanced about the room. There was no window and I could not escape through the room below. "I must make a hole through the roof," I mused.

Would they never stop talking? At last they were quiet. The clapboards must have been held down with spikes. It was awful work, but at last I succeeded in making an opening large enough. To get out on the roof was an easy matter, but how was I to get down? I crawled to one corner and in trying to climb down slipped and fell off. I fell on a dog. It must have killed him, for nothing far removed from the grave could have sounded such a note of despair. The old man did not awake. I roamed round and round trying to find the stable. Found it at last. Went into the wrong stall and was kicked by a colt.

I mounted and rode away. My horse was so tired, notwithstanding his food and rest, that he traveled with difficulty; but I urged him on. Daylight came and then I cursed myself. I had left my horse, a magnificent animal, and had taken an old stiff-jointed, knock-kneed thing that would not have brought $10 on the public square of a village. Should I go back? Oh, no. I rode or stumbled on until the old plug gave out, and then I walked and carried my saddle.

PRESERVATION OF BEAUTY.

Hints to Women Regarding the Care of the Hair—The Fine-Toothed Comb Condemned—Cleanliness the First Requisite.



Many ladies wash their heads with preparations of alkalies, ammonia, borax, and even baking soda, and sometimes washing soda, but these are each and all hurtful both to hair and scalp, for the life and vigor of hair comes from the little fat glands which nourish the roots, and render it glossy, soft and thick. These alkalies dissolve the fat, and soon the lady is distressed to find that her hair is breaking off or falling out. Alcohol, whether in form of the various hair tonics, or bay rum, is equally injurious, and to its use in barber shops are the most of the bald heads due.

When one feels that the head needs a "good shampoo," the yelks of eggs alone should be employed, with plenty of water. The yelk of an egg is almost all oil, and for that reason an emollient, but no alkali nor soap should be used if it is desired to preserve the hair at its best.

Dandruff is a great injury to the hair, and it has never yet been understood, though some have pretended to have discovered its cause and cure. But this we have noticed and proved, those who wash their heads in cold water daily never have it. Brushes and combs should be kept very clean, and no one should use those of another. When there is dandruff, cleanliness, washing in cold water, and sometimes a little brandy will remove it.

The use of fine combs, unless when absolutely necessary, is greatly to be condemned, and it is far better to discard them entirely. Many ladies find it inconvenient to wash their heads daily, on account of their bangs, and such depend upon the fine comb for cleansing the scalp, with an occasional shampoo. There are more exudations from the scalp than from the clear skin, and the pores need a clearer field, so to speak, than they have with the accumulations which catch to the hairs and mat down tightly until they form little scales, which being of refuse matter turn sour and acrid, and finally contaminate and heat the little fat cells which nourish the hair. These scales accumulate until they keep up a sort of irritation and itching of the scalp, and finger nails poison it, and before one knows it the head is one mass of scaly dandruff, and before long the head is sore in spots and the hair begins falling.

Ladies whose neatness in other respects is proverbial, will not wash their hair daily—because—because—well, they can give no reason, only that they were taught that it was not at all necessary. And when the scalp is not kept cool and free of dandruff, and the secretions which cause it, the hair often loses its coloring matter. The heat in the cells destroys it, and young persons turn gray who ought not wear that token of age for many years yet.

The writer of this is forty-three, and has not one gray hair yet, and thinks, with some reason, that the regular washing of her head in cold water every morning since she was a child, is the cause, and her hair is soft and silky, and quite abundant for that age. Her brothers and relatives younger than herself are bald and gray, because they "don't think cold water good for the scalp." EMMA VILO.

Poisonous Yellow Dyes.

The investigation which has followed the epidemic which occurred at Lyons, France, among female spoolers working a particular yellow cotton yarn used for gold-lace making is regarded as confirming MM. Arloing and Cazeneuve's conclusions respecting the poisonous character of some aniline dyes and the harmlessness of others. There were exhibited in these cases weakness, dyspepsia and vomitings, coupled with a bluish-gray coloration of the gums. The yarn, on winding, emitted considerable dust, and medical examination showed that, while the ailments were caused by the dye, some yellows were very poisonous, others less so, and some quite harmless, but no trouble arose during summer when the windows were open. Three different specimens of the dust were subjected to analysis by Professor Pouchot, who found that, though lead was absent, there were traces of antimony used as a mordant. The first specimen, the most poisonous, was found to have been dyed with sodium binitronaphthol, generally known as Martin's yellow; the second, less poisonous, with Poirier's light binitronaphthol; and the third, quite harmless, with sodic sulpho-conjugated binitronaphthol. It does not appear that goods thus dyed are dangerous to the wearers, though certainly so to the weavers, a fact necessitating the substitution of another and harmless yellow, or else thorough ventilation of the working-rooms.

M. Mosso, of Turin, has found that the fresh blood of fishes acts as a powerful poison when injected into the circulation of mammals. The venomous property exists in the serum, is destroyed by the putrefying process, by heating to some 1,200 degrees Fahrenheit, by alkalies, and by mineral and organic acids, except carbonic acid.

"PUSH" on one side and "pull" on the other are labels on some doors which lead to certain kinds of success.

Deserted Farm Lands.

The farms in Massachusetts, as well as in other New England States, are fast becoming depopulated. Another movement has been put on foot in Pittsfield, the capital of Berkshire County, Massachusetts, at the head of which is Rollin H. Cook, to see what can be done to reclaim deserted farms. There are many unoccupied farms in Berkshire County, that with a little care could be made very productive. An idea of how much property is depreciated in that county may be gathered from the fact that a farm of land that cost $6,500 some years ago would sell now at $1,000. In Washington there are fifteen unoccupied farms; in Peru, thirteen; in Savoy, twelve; in Windsor, ten; many of which can be bought at from $2 to $4 an acre. There are numerous other farms scattered over the Berkshire hills that are deserted.

The Board of Trade of Pittsfield have plans now in consideration, one of which is to colonize these vacant farms with Swedes. Another plan is to form a company and buy up large tracts of land, put flocks of sheep and herds of cattle upon them with necessary people to look after them and have them conducted something as the ranches are run in the West. How either of these schemes may work is of course problematical, but a trial should at least be given them. The land is good. For many years grass has been allowed to grow and die upon it thereby enriching the soil.

Vain Regrets.

"Say, Mose," said an Austin colored dude to an old darky more famous for his ability to punish whisky than to irritate work of any discription, "didn't Miss Car'line useter be an old flame ob yourn?"

"Yes, Rube," replied old Mose, "I dun 'spec's Car'line and I useter be mighty thick, I tell yer. She jilted me onct."

"Dat's what I tho't. Car'line was married las' ebenin'."

"Who married her?"

"Peg-legged Jake."

Shaken Out of Gear,

By malarial disease, the human machinery can not half perform its office. Digestion, secretion, evacuation are disordered, the blood becomes watery, the nerves feeble, the countenance ghastly, sleep disturbed, and appetite capricious. Terrible is this disease, fell its consequences. There is, however, a known antidote to the miasmatic poison, and a certain safeguard against it. In malarious regions of our South and West, in South America, Guatemala and on the Isthmus of Panama, as well as in transmarine countries where the scourge exists, this inimitable preventive and remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, has, during the last thirty-five years, been constantly widening the area of its usefulness, and demonstrating its sovereign value. Liver complaint, dyspepsia, constipation, kidney trouble, rheumatism, and debility are all remedied by it.

"Good-morning, Mrs. Murphy; have you——"

"Stop right where you are, Mrs. Burns! I am onto you wid a smile. You never lived near enough to the 'arth to spring the likes of that on me. I don't use soap in the morning, Mrs. Burns; nor do I save me wrappers; or wear the three-dollar shoe; or eat A. B. C.; or take a hundred doses for a dollar; but when the likes of you tries to guy me so early in the morning, you had better drink 'cookoo' for your supper!"—Puck.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years Doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucus surface of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. A New Mother-in-Law Joke.

Mother-in-Law—So, your husband wants to get a divorce?

Daughter-in-Law—Yes, he wants a divorce.

"Who is the cause of it—a woman?"

"Yes, and I think you are the woman."

"Well, I declare! If he supposes I'd marry him in case he got a divorce from you he is very much mistaken. I am sure I never gave him any encouragement!"—Texas Siftings.

The Wrong Boy.

"Children," said the visitor at the Sunday-school, "I have talked about long enough, but before I take my seat I will ask this bright faced little boy I see in front of me to tell me, if he can, who founded the glorious institution of the Sunday-sch——"

"McGinty," yelled the urchin.

Self-Devouring.

A strange and really dramatic situation is one described by the author of "Obeah," a little book which treats of West Indian life. Insects and reptiles are abundant in the West Indies, and one soon gets well acquainted with certain small, bright-green lizards, which are perfectly harmless and very lively. These little creatures are quite tame, and when caught by the tail they slip away, leaving that appendage behind them.

I was once sitting in the veranda, watching a little green lizard darting about after the flies. It became bold, and in one of its quick movements jumped on my foot. I made a sudden snatch, and caught the little fellow by the tail. Giving a wriggle, he darted off, leaving that portion of his property in my hands, and, having no use for it, I dropped it on the floor and resumed my book.

Presently I looked down, and saw that a lot of ants had found the piece of tail, and were hurrying off with their treasure as fast as they could. When they had dragged it almost to their hole, I noticed my little green friend, a few inches away, intently eying his missing property. The ants were just giving a final pull toward their rest, when the lizard suddenly made a dart upon them, seized his bit of tail, and swallowed it with evident gusto.

The Ladies Delighted.

The pleasant effect and the perfect safety with which ladies may use the liquid fruit laxative, Syrup of Figs, under all conditions make it their favorite remedy. It is pleasing to the eye and to the taste, gentle, yet effectual in acting on the kidneys, liver and bowels.

A Bad Choice of Mothers.

The small boy had had a fight with another small boy. In youth we make up our quarrels easily, and a blow on the nose heals much more easily than a stinging word in later years. Quick to enjoy, quick to injure, quick to forget pleasures, quick to forget injuries, in our childhood, we grow slower in all with age, yet perhaps the value of everything does not really change, only our capacity to retain feeling. This small boy had had a fight and his mother punished him. He was a boy; his mother was only a kind of grown-up girl and could not be expected to understand or sympathize with the manly art of self-defense. But he got it all the same and when the round was over stood up in the corner with his knuckles stuck in his tear-filled eyes. "Well," he said, between some severe sobs, "well, I was a fool to get you for a mother when I was born."—San Francisco Chronicle.

To Those Interested.

HASTINGS, Mich., April 22, 1889.

Rheumatic Syrup Co., Jackson, Mich:

GENTS—This is to certify that I had been troubled with rheumatism in all its forms for the past twelve years, and was confined to my bed at various periods from three to six months at a time, and I could get about only by the aid of crutches. I employed several first-class physicians of this city, none of whom effected a cure or gave temporary relief even.

About two years ago I was induced to try Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, and, after taking a few bottles I experienced relief, and now consider myself cured. I unhesitatingly recommend this medicine for rheumatism. I know what it has done for me, what physicians could not do, i. e., cured me of rheumatism.

That Tired Feeling

Has never been more prevalent or more prostrating than now. The winter has been mild and unhealthful, influenza epidemic and fevers have visited nearly all our homes, leaving about everybody in a weak, tired-out, languid condition. The usefulness of Hood's Sarsaparilla is thus made greater than ever, for it is absolutely unequaled as a building-up, strengthening medicine. Try it and you will realize its recuperative powers.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has renewed my grip. I am 85 years of age and was all run down and discouraged. I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla and on looking myself over find that I am much better, in fact quite a chap. Of course the medicine will not discount my years, but it comes nearer to it than anything else." CHARLES B. LONG, Shrewsbury, Mass.

That Tired Feeling

"Last spring I was completely fagged out. My strength left me and I felt sick and miserable all the time, so that I could hardly attend to my business. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it cured me. There is nothing like it." R. C. BROOKE, Editor Enterprise, Belleville, Mich.

100 Doses One Dollar

The marked benefit which people in run down or weakened state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but possessing just those elements which the system needs and readily seizes.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Builds up in a perfectly natural way, all the weakened parts, acts upon the blood as a purifier and vitalizer, and assists to healthy action those important organs, the kidneys and liver.

"My daughter received much benefit from the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla as an excellent tonic after a protracted attack of bronchial pneumonia." REV F. H. ADAMS, New Hartford, Conn.

That Tired Feeling

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and find it the best medicine for the blood I ever tried. Large quantities of it are sold in this vicinity. As a blood medicine and spring tonic, it stands ahead of all others." H. N. PHILLIPS, Editor Sentinel-Advertiser, Hope Valley, R. I.

WHAT THE TOWN WANTED.

Citizen—So you think of locating here?

Physician—Yes. I thought some of practicing among you.

Citizen—See here, young man, there is a good opening here for a man as understands his biz, but we don't want no practicing, or experimenting—doctoring's what we want!

Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous exhaustion or prostration, another with pain here or there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent or over-busy doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some womb disorder. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, encourages his "practice" until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, but probably worse by reason of the delay, wrong treatment and consequent complications. A proper medicine, like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

It's the only medicine for the peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and painful derangements incident to women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee that it will give satisfaction in every case, or price ($1.00) paid for it will be promptly refunded.

Coughing

IS Nature's effort to expel foreign substances from the bronchial passages. Frequently, this causes inflammation and the need of an anodyne. No other expectorant or anodyne is equal to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It assists Nature in ejecting the mucus, allays irritation, induces repose, and is the most popular of all cough cures.

"Of the many preparations before the public for the cure of colds, coughs, bronchitis, and kindred diseases, there is none, within the range of my experience, so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For years I was subject to colds, followed by terrible coughs. About four years ago, when so afflicted, I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and to lay all other remedies aside. I did so, and within a week was well of my cold and cough. Since then I have always kept this preparation in the house, and feel comparatively secure." —Mrs. L. L. Brown, Denmark, Miss.

"A few years ago I took a severe cold which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continual use of the Pectoral, a permanent cure was effected."—Horace Fairbrother, Rockingham, Vt.

Fair Meeting.

The directors of the DeKalb County Fair met in Ensley's Hall last Saturday at 10:30 a. m., and were called to order by the president, J. L. Davis. Cal. Husselman, the secretary, was in his place, and took charge of the work in his line. Various bills were allowed, including one in favor of Mr. Matson, of Ft. Wayne, the architect employed to submit plans for the fair building. His bill was for two per cent on the estimated cost of the building, which would be $140, as the building was estimated to cost about $7,000. Some of the directors thought we should not pay the full bill yet, as the building might not cost that much. So, after full discussion, $75 was allowed on the bill now, with the understanding that the proper amount would be added when the contract was made. The bond of F. J. Yesbera, the new treasurer, was read by the secretary. It is for $15,000, and has the names of F. J. Yesbera, G. H. Yesbera, B. C. Zeigler, G. W. Weamer and A. J. Ralston. This was discussed by several directors; John Shugers making the most effective speech of any, and it was decided that the bond was perfectly satisfactory, and it was accepted. At the afternoon session, the report of the retiring treasurer, J. L. Davis, was read. This showed a cash balance in the treasury of $283.84. Reed and others discussed the election of superintendents of the various departments, and it was decided to have names announced in order as the offices came, and then vote on them by ballot. For superintendent of the horse department, the names of John Shugers, S. M. Knott, A. J. Ralston and S. Rogers, were announced. But Rogers and Ralston declined, and the ballot showed Shugers 6 and Knott 7 votes, giving the place to Knott. For superintendent of the speed department, S. Rogers was chosen unanimously. For cattle department, James Provines, received 7 votes to 4 for John S. Boots. For sheep department there were two ballots, J. S. Boots received 5 votes, A. B. Walsworth 6, and A. D. Moore, 2. On the second ballot, Walsworth had 8 and Boots 5

Swine department, J. D. Rowley had 6 votes and H. P. Stroh 7, the latter being declared elected.

Poultry: A. Lewis and C. C. Shaffer were announced. Shaffer declined, and Lewis was elected unanimously.

Machinery: H. R. Culbertson received 8 votes to 4 for S. R. Heberling.

Agricultural department: J. S. Boots, was elected unanimously.

In Floral Hall, Annice Less was elected unanimously. It was not certain she would serve, but they were determined to compliment her at least, as she is the only lady who owns stock in the association thus far. She will make an excellent superintendent in that department, and it is to be hoped her business will not prevent her accepting the place.

The only real struggle took place in selecting the superintendent of the art department. For this, 6 names were announced, Mrs. A. J. Ralston, Mrs. Geo. Schaab, Mrs. Dr. Sebring, Mrs. Fred. Yesbera, Mrs. W. H. McQuiston, and Mrs. Frank Hogue. Five ballots were taken. The first ballot stood: Mrs. Ralston, 4; Mrs. Schaab, 2; Mrs. Sebring, 3; Mrs. Yesbera, 3 and Mrs. Hogue, 1. Mrs. McQuiston being withdrawn. Second ballot: Mrs. Ralston, 4; Mrs Schaab, 1; Mrs. Sebring, 3; Mrs. Yesbera 4; Mrs. Hogue being withdrawn. The third ballot: Mrs. Ralston, 5; Mrs. Sebring, 3; Mrs. Yesbera, 5. The fourth ballot stood: Mrs. Ralston, 4; Mrs. Sebring, 2; Mrs. Yesbera, 6. On the fifth ballot, Mrs. Sebring's name was withdrawn, and the decisive vote showed, Mrs. Ralston, 5 and Mrs. Yesbera, 7. So the latter was declared elected.

For superintendent of police: J. J. VanAuken, 8 votes and G. C. Ralston, 4.

For Music Hall, W. B. Brown was elected without opposition.

A talk was then had about the premium list. The secretary said he had it about completed. The total ordinary premiums to be offered were $2,385, and a vote was taken limiting the speed department to $1,500. The final arrangements for this department were left to the executive committee. It was decided that entries should close by Tuesday noon, and that the regular ten-per cent entrance fee would be charged. A walking race for Tuesday was prepared, but no other races will be put on the track on that day.

Voorhees [illegible] Harmony.

Mr. O. O. Stealey, the Washington correspondent of the Courier Journal, sent to his paper last week the following statement by Senator Voorhees. "There is no necessity for much talk about personal affairs in the Democratic party in Indiana. I have spent all my political life in promoting harmony within the party, without which success is impossible. I have never taken part in a personal or factional contest for myself or any one else, and I never shall. My relations with Gov. Gray and Senator McDonald are of the kindest, most agreeable character and always have been. I have supported Mr. McDonald for the presidential nomination and for every office he wanted, and I earnestly and industriously supported Gov. Gray two years ago for the vice-presidency at St Louis, and shall support him again in the same way in 1892 for that or any other position to which he may aspire. I fully recognize his services and his ability, and it was a piece of great folly at St Louis not to nominate him. Of course, I regret, in common with all other good Democrats in Indiana, that there are any personal differences between him and Mr. McDonald; but personal likes and dislikes cannot be settled by the party, nor must they be allowed to control its action or its result. It is very apparent to my mind that a bitter and thoroughly unscrupulous effort is to be made by the Republican party this year to secure a victory in Indiana, and it will require the united and harmonious efforts of every Democrat in the State to prevent that disastrous result. Harrison's administration is on trial, and together with Quay and the national Republican committee is deeply incensed at the exposure which has overtaken their dishonest 'blocks-of-five' campaign of 1888. I am constantly advised that I'm particularly marked out this year for political destruction. I have no other ambition than to be instrumental in retaining Democratic ascendancy in our State, and when that is done the Democracy of Indiana may dispose of me and of all my political aspirations as they shall deem wisest and best. My heart is full of gratitude for all the past, and nothing in the future will bring dissapointment or discontent on my part. I know we can carry Indiana and her legislature in this year of 1890, if, shoulder to shoulder, with hearts and hands together, the democracy, old and young, make one of their great and splendid efforts. We have everything to incite us to unusual exertion. The present is a most perilous crisis in the affairs of the entire country, and the loss of Indiana at this time would be the overthrow of the democratic party in 1890.

To Purchasers of Carpets.

Good dyes and good wools make good carpets. Poor dyes and shoddy wools make carpets which fade and soon wear out. Very frequently the heaviest feeling carpets are made from short, poor wool, and will not wear half as long as lighter feeling carpets made from long, new wool. The Foster Carpet and Furniture Co., of Fort Wayne, LaFayette and Terre Haute are the largest dealers in carpets in the state. They have built up their immense trade by positively refusing to handle unknown makes of carpets, which might hold their colors and wear well, and might not. They are not trying any experiments at the probable expense of their customers. They are willing to pay the price demanded for a good article and will offer their customers no other. They have just received a magnificent new spring stock of such well known makes as Bigelow's, Lowell's, Roxbury's, Brownley's, Dornan Brothers', Stinson's, Smith's, Tremont's, and Ivins, Dietz & Magee's.

School Report.

Maple Hill school, district No. 10, in Fairfield township, commenced Oct. 28, and closed Feb. 20. Number enrolled, 30; average daily attendance, 26. The following are the names of those who were present every day: Josie Vogtman, Tip. Ling. Wheeler Ling, Annie Etter, and Dessie Shipe. In the afternoon the room was crowded with visitors from the neighborhood. We spent most of the time in literary exercises. All seemed to be well pleased, and to enjoy the fun hugely. Thus closed the first term at Maple Hill, and my eighteenth. I don't think I ever closed a term that was more satisfactory to myself and my pupils, and I hope to my patrons the same. The new books seemed to put a new impetus into the minds of the pupils. We were especially delighted with the readers and geography.

Effects of Modern Life.

Eminent authorities unanimously agree that the high pressure methods of modern life are rapidly making us a race of helpless invalids—subject to all manner of nervous affections, headache, insanity, dizziness, neuralgia, backache, hysteria, nervous troubles of the heart, stomach, kidneys, brain, etc. Ladies and gentlemen who are thus afflicted, or who are compelled to keep late hours, do much mental or physical work, who worry and fret about business or domestic troubles, should remember that no other remedy in the world will so speedily cure these diseases, remove worry and the blues, induce tranquil sleep, relieve pain, or build up the nervous systems, as Dr. Miles great discovery, Restorative Nervine. It contains no opium or morphine. Trial bottles free at Davenport's drug store. 2

It having come out that most of the survivors of Balaklava are now paupers a great benefit performance is being arranged in London for the purposes of getting them out of the workhouse.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

They go Back on Harrison.

The Civil Service Chronicle, at Indianapolis, whose publishers were foolish enough to support Harrison, instead of Cleveland, have found out, what other people always knew, that Harrison never was and never will be a civil service reformer. He is now seen to be the worst kind of a machine spoilsman. This is what the publishers say:

President Harrison closes his first year, leaving behind him some acts of which history will never be proud. He has a settled policy of keeping appointees after their unworthiness has become notorious. In this way he bids fair to make cases like those of McFarlane, Bagby and Chambers, in Indiana, rival those of Tompkins and Dowling under the late administration. His putting the federal patronage in Virginia into the hands of Mahone was an assault upon the rights of half of the people of that state, and its disastrous results do not seem to have taught him any lesson. His failure to dismiss the office-holders who attempted to collect money for Mahone does not indicate a determination to execute that part of the law. His removal of Pearson, Burt, Graves and Saltonstall indicate a spirit of putting his heel upon the neck of the reform sentiment of the country. His allowing the railway mail service to be looted while the eligible lists were being prepared, and the manner in which it was done were peculiarly in broken faith. His sweep of the fourth-class postmasters by Clarkson, his turning the census bureau over to be common spoils, his advance in the same direction with the Indian service, his subsidizing the press, his grudging retention of some democrats to the end of their terms, his greedy removal of others, like General Manson, his turning whole states over to men like Platt and Quay, his appointment of relatives to office, and his general use of the 100,000 places in the unclassified service to pay personal and party debts, unmistakably mark him as a man who believes in such use of a great public trust. That he has a constitutional right to so use it, he would not himself claim. Like other presidents, he has frittered away the golden opportunity of breaking up the spoils system. Yet he has not built himself up in other directions. He has refused to work in his own peculiar field, and no others are or will be open to him, except in a limited and routine extent. If he goes to the end as he has started, he will have been a common-place president whose term has had its full share of vicious administration.

The Tariff Don't Make Cheaper.

THE BUTLER RECORD has got it at last. We have been waiting several weeks for that able journal to publish the "patent original republican editorial," that has been coming nearer and nearer in our republican exchanges. It is headed "Protection Cheapens Prices." So it does, friend. It cheapens the price of about everything DeKalb farmers have to sell, till wheat, corn, oats, beef and pork are only about half what they used to be, and what they might be again if this blessed "protection" had not "protected" the farmer and all he owns, nearly out of existence. But the things, he has to buy if affected by the tariff at all, that effect is to make them higher in price. The Record is not cute enough to make the farmers believe that an article that is really "protected" is made cheaper by adding to its cost.

* * *

Then he goes on in this "patent original" way to say that "the cost of articles is not enhanced by the amount of tariff laid on the part sent hither by foreigners." But for the twentieth time we ask: If the price is not enhanced, how is the home manufacturer protected? How can he pay higher wages, or succeed against the "pauper labor of Europe, etc"? But he has just a few lines above stated that when goods made here have to be sold in competition with those of foreigners, the results will be that the home-made fabrics will disappear from our markets." In other words, if the tariff does not increase the price of foreign goods enough to prevent our people from buying them our own manufacturers will be ruined. But he says our own men, are saved and protected by this tariff. Therefore, he must admit that the tariff makes foreign goods so much higher, and enables home goods to be sold higher, so our men can have greater profits, and therefore pay their men good wages. This will give a flat contradiction to what the article says in another place. The Record ought to read these "original editorials" it is using, before sending them out, as they contain many conflicting statements. Or better still, send them over to the COURIER for revision.

* * *

We will again call attention to a fact: On certain grades of iron actually imported last year, the importers paid into the treasury of the United States, a duty of $17 a ton. Now, did this add anything to the original cost of the iron, or did it make the iron cheaper? Which is it?

* * *

In conclusion the Record said that "prices of manufactured articles are made lower to the consumer, and wages paid to employes made higher" by a protective tariff. Once more we ask: Are manufacturers wearing out their lungs crying for a tariff that will at the same time make them sell their goods lower, and pay their men higher wages? All of these questions, the Record will ignore as usual, simply because like other republican papers, it is not able to answer them.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Primaries and Caucuses.

We publish this week Chairman Brown's call for holding the township caucuses. We sincerely hope these meetings will call out every democrat in the townships and that the feeling with which they meet will be so full of harmony, and a laudable desire for party success, that there will be no jar all along the line. DeKalb county is democratic. A majority of the townships are democratic, and nothing but a disregard of party principles for the sake of some private end, can defeat us in the coming election. Experience has shown the common people that democratic township and county officers have been the best, the most careful, the most accommodating, the most conscientious, the most painstaking, and above all, the most careful of the public interests. There is therefore, no reason why any democrat should refuse to support his ticket. Nor is there any reason why he should weaken that ticket by helping to get weak or unpopular candidates. Nor is there any reason why he should be factious and over particular about getting a nomination for his especial friend. Let us all enter into this campaign with such a spirit that, if our special friend is not nominated, we may yet feel that some one else's friend is, and that it is our duty to support the one, as earnestly as the other. The county campaign is soon to follow, and the various aspirants for places on the county ticket, can do much to secure success in their own township laboring for the good of the party alone, remembering always, that what gives strength to the party will strengthen their own individual standing in the party. And very properly so. For a man who will permit dissensions in the party in his own locality, will not be considered as having the proper qualities for a leader in the wider campaign that is to follow. As to men, we shall get the best, of course. If we cannot get what we think the best, then let us get what others think the best. As to the caucuses, they are, we are pleased to know, generally conducted with fairness and honesty. Let this be our earnest aim now. Give every man a chance to vote freely. We had hoped that by this time the regular secret ballot, as in primary meetings, would be in use. We still hope it will soon come. But any fair, manly and satisfactory method of voting, by which the real will of the people will be ascertained, will do. Then let every democrat in DeKalb county resolve to take an active part in these caucuses and help to make the opening of the campaign a credit to the people and a grand success for the party.

Obituary.

Isaac N. Askew, was born in Richland, (now Ashland) county, Ohio, Feb. 19th 1824. He was reared on a farm, remaining there till 1847, when he came to Indiana and bought a tract of unimproved land in Allen county, residing there about six years. He then sold this land and moved to DeKalb county,—buying a farm east of Spencerville, on the St. Joe River, which he improved. He subsequently sold this farm and bought one west of Spencerville, where he lived until April, 1874. Then he again sold out moving this time to Keyser township, where he lived until Oct. 18th 1884, when he came to Auburn, where he departed this life at high twelve, March 6, 1890, aged 66 years and 17 days.

Mr. Askew was married Nov. 27, 1853, to Miss Rebecca H. Squires; to this union were given five children, Wm. F., Marion, Geo. W., Perry, who died in infancy, Nettie and Jennie. Mr. Askew was converted and united with the Protestant Methodist church, at the Bear Creek appointment, near Spencerville. When he came to Keyser township he united by letter with the U. B. church, but the society went down and he never identified himself with any other.

The family say that he never gave up his faith in Christ, but maintained his religious experience to the end. It is said that for the past year he has been more than ever attentive to his Bible; reading some portion every day. In the death of Mr. Askew, the community loses an excellent citizen, a kind and obliging neighbor, and the family a devoted husband and father.

We are again reminded of the fact that the early settlers of this country are passing away one by one. Soon they will have passed to the regions beyond. As Mrs. Turner has so beautifully said:

> One by one the leaves are falling,
> Falling on the ground,
> Methinks I hear the Savior calling,
> His call extends to all around.
>
> His voice is like the dew of Heaven,
> That lingers in the shade;
> All things on earth that God has given
> Will change their hue and fade.
>
> Then let us cast a wistful eye
> To God's beloved Son,
> And bid this lovely world good-bye
> To gain a brighter one.

Foster, being one of those who dug out of Libby prison, will no doubt make an interesting talk, as that is his subject. Mr. Provines has the "army mule" for his theme, and many others have suitable subjects. It is likely to be one of the best meetings the regiment ever had. J. N. Ohlwine, Cromwell, is secretary.

Reunion.

The Jackman family met at C. C. Boyer's on Friday, Feb. 7th 1890, in Franklin township, DeKalb county, Ind., and were entertained by Mrs. C. C. Boyer and Mrs. Alma Boyle, the family all being present that are now living, namely, Cyrus Jackman and wife, Wesley Jackman and wife, Edward Jackman and wife, Adam C. Jackman and wife, now residing in Grand Rapids, Mich., John Peterman and wife, Mrs. Sarah Boyer, Mrs. Lydia Jackman, Maria Jackman. Average age of the 5 now living is 62 years. After enjoying a most sumptous dinner and an afternoon of most enjoyable visit, talking over their pioneer lives and this brought to them very vividly the fact that one half of the family of ten had already passed over to the better world, they yet felt that God had been very kind to them, allowing them to enjoy such a happy reunion together.

Obituary.

Miss Ada E. Spake, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Spake was born Feb. 18, 1865, died at the home of her parents on Thursday March 6, 1890, aged 25 yrs. and 16 days.

Miss Ada was a sweet christian girl beloved by all who knew her. She has been a sufferer for the past three years, and during the last one, she was scarcely ever free from pain, but she bore it all patiently, never murmuring at her lot.

Her funeral Saturday, March 8, at 1 p. m. was held from the M. E. church, which was well filled with mourning friends. Her remains were tenderly borne to the grave in Evergreen cemetery by six of her lady friends. Peace to her ashes.

Tariff Debate.

On last Friday evening the tariff question was discussed by Frank Seiler and Edgar Buchanan, of Corunna, at the Fairfield Center school house. Question Resolved that the Tariff Plank in the St. Louis Platform is detrimental to the great mass of American people. Mr. B. had the affirmative and Mr. S. the negative. The question was handled with considerable enthusiasm, both men speaking forty minutes apiece. The aff. drifting into the old, old story and trying to convince the judges that a tariff for revenue only meant free trade and what a deplorable condition England was in since she had adopted that system and that the Democrats wanted to bring the U. S. to that state, and how this glorious tariff cheapens an article. The neg. by two problems from the board proved the absurdity of this cheapening scheme, also the idea that an average duty of 43 per cent. meaning Free Trade. Those questions the aff. failed to answer. There were four judges two republicans and two democrats. Three decided in favor of negative.

Mr. Werntz had been for some time more or less engaged in the business, but lacked the capital to to push the work as it should be. Parties with means and business experience have now taken hold of it and will build up a large industry. They are ex-Clerk D. Y. Husselman, ex-Surveyor J. J. Van-Auken, Treasurer Davis and O. W. Werntz. Mr. VanAuken is the president and Mr. Husselman is secretary and treasurer, and both will devote to the new enterprise all their time and energy. They will at once add new and improved machinery, and add to the plant so as to make it a first-class foundry establishment. They will do all kinds of casting in iron and brass, make stoves, kettles, sash weights, culverts for highways and railroads, make steel plows and all kinds of plow points, building columns and lintels, wheels for binder trucks, and everything in that line. They will also do a general blacksmithing and repair work. We hope to see the new company abundantly successful.

The Wanderer's Return.

Oshkosh (Wis.) special: Fritz Jabusch walked into the house of his relatives in this city the other day, after an absence of nearly thirty years. The story he told was a most romantic one, for he had long been mourned as dead. In 1862 Mr. Jabusch enlisted in the army and went to the front. His relatives heard from him regularly until in the summer of 1863, when his letters ceased, after a battle in which his regiment had been engaged. His parents, of course, supposed him dead. He now states that he was left for dead on the battle-field, was found by rebel troops, placed in a hospital, and when he recovered was imprisoned at Libby prison. Here he remained over a year, until exchanged, and he found himself on the Atlantic coast without money and hundreds of miles from home. He shipped on board a merchantman for the East Indies as a seaman, and has followed the sea ever since. He has acquired a competence, and decided to settle down in his old home.

Gas Well Beyond Control.

The Kiley gas well, west of Marion, Ind., has gotten beyond control. In drilling the well a great flow of water was encountered 300 feet down, which was eased off. An unusual flow of gas was developed at 900 feet, the force of which lifted out the casting and let in the water. This was in a fair way to be overcome, but the other morning George Jackson went into the derrick, which was filled with gas and struck a match to light his pipe. An explosion followed and Jackson and the well contractors were blown forty feet, and all were more or less seriously burned and injured. The derrick was destroyed. There is now rising from the pipe a volume of fire and water which defies all efforts to control it.

Sad End of a Minister.

Chicago special: Rev. George Spencer, of Boggstown, Ind., a Presbyterian minister, arrived here with $300 to buy Sunday-school books for his church, Feb. 20. He was under the influence of liquor and continued in that state till Feb. 27, when he died in the Washingtonian Home. It appears that he had family troubles, that he was formerly a lawyer at Attica, N. Y., that he bore also the names of Fletcher, Lawrence and Albert Spencer, that he has a daughter 18 years of age now living at Buffalo, N. Y., a 9-year-old son at 110 East Third street, Cincinnati, and a 12-year-old son at Lawrenceburg, Ind. James Spencer, of Duluth, Minn., took charge of the remains.

Disaster in a Mine.

A terrific explosion occurred in the Morsa colliery, in Glamorganshire, Wales, which, it is feared, will be attended with much loss of life. One hundred miners are entombed, and communication with them is impossible for the present. It is feared that all of them have perished. Late advice from the Morsa colliery explosion are that 300 miners were entombed, but that many have been rescued from the workings nearest the main shaft. Most of those taken out are unhurt, though several received fatal injuries. Heavy falls of rock prevent the explorers from reaching the remote workings. The latest estimate is 150 lives have been lost.

A Will Case Decided.

Sandusky (Ohio) special: Judge DeWitt, of the Common Pleas Court, has decided a case brought by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society against T. B. Taylor, executor of the will of James Banks, of this county. Banks left about sixty thousand dollars for missionary purposes to the M. E. Church, and his will did not make it clear to what branch of work it should go, the contestees being the Foreign Missionary Society, the Woman's Home Society, and the General Missionary Society. The decision was in favor of the latter and the Court ordered $5,000 to go to the church extension fund and the costs to be paid out of the estate.

Chicago Switchmen Win a Strike.

The switchmen's strike on the Northwestern road at Chicago, was settled by the company discharging Yardmaster Brooks. The men returned to work, but after working an hour discovered that they had another grievance and demanded the discharge of James McCarroll and Jessie Ogden, two switchmen who had sympathized with Brooks. The demand was also granted and the men went back to work. Brooks has been promised other work by the company and no further trouble is anticipated.

Murdered in Their Bed.

Charles Williams and his 12-year-old son, living in the suburbs of Galena, Kan., were found murdered in their bed. Williams was blind and had lost both arms in a mine accident. The supposed murderer was arrested at Prescott, Ark.

Mr. Lincoln Not to Resign.

Mr. Robert Lincoln, Minister to England, authorizes a denial of the report that he intends to resign his position in consequence of the death of his son.

Passed a Lottery Bill.

Atoka, (I. T.) special: While the attention of the public was directed to Louisiana and North Dakota the lottery people have been quietly at work in the Choctaw nation, so quietly that the fact was generally unknown until the laws of the Nation appeared in pamphlet form. The lottery scheme resembles the North Dakota proposition in outline and details, and the proposed inducements of the Louisiana Lottery Company to the Sugar-bowl State for an extension of its charter is conditioned upon the payment of an annual sum into the Choctaw Treasury.

Funeral of Edwin Cowles.

The funeral of Edwin Cowles, editor of the Cleveland Leader, was held at 2:30 Thursday afternoon from his late residence in Cass avenue. Leading citizens of Cleveland were present, and the house, although very large, was crowded. The hundred editors, reporters, clerks, and printers employed on the Leader, were in attendance. Rev. Dr. Charles S. Pomeroy, of the Second Presbyterian church, conducted the services and preached the funeral sermon. The remains were taken to Lake View cemetery and deposited in a vault.

DEATH IN A PULLMAN.

Terrible Wreck on the Lake Shore Road Near Buffalo.

A special from Buffalo, dated the 7th inst., says: Train 6 on the Lake Shore Railroad from the West, due at Buffalo at 9:15 p. m., and running very fast to make up lost time, broke in two one mile west of Hamburg about 8 o'clock. The front part, consisting of engine, tender, smoker and two day coaches, were brought to a standstill. The rear half, composed of five heavy Pullmans, came on down grade and crashed into the second day coach. The Pullman being heavier, lifted the day coach into the air and they now lie one on top of the other, and both having telescoped the first day coach. Both day coaches and the Pullman were full of passengers and the loss of life and limb is probably very high. Ten are reported killed outright and twenty-five injured. The wrecking train, with a relief party left for the scene of the accident. The forward portion of the train was stopped by Conductor Hougtaling, who pulled the bell rope. Most of those in the day coach were warned of their peril in time to leave the car, but those in the first Pullman car had no warning and were in the car when it telescoped one coach and was buried under another. J. E. Minnie, who had his arm cut off, was placed on the engine which started at once for Buffalo to bring relief. It was two hours and a half before physicians arrived, but a wrecking train came sooner and began the work of extricating the victims. The bodies taken out were placed in a baggage car. One of them was that of J. Swan, a colored porter.

Later special: The responsibility of the late railroad accident has not yet been definitely fixed. All accounts seem to agree that the air brakes were uncoupled when the train started after the first breaking in two at Dunkirk. The brakes were therefore useless. They work automatically, and if in proper condition would have set themselves on the sleepers when they broke away from the forward section of the train. Under those conditions the proper step was to stop the first section at once. The question that will be raised at the Coroner's inquest will be these: Did the conductor know that the air brakes on the detached sections were useless, if so why did he stop the first section?

Mr. Haupt, a well-known lawyer of this city, makes a very serious statement concerning the condition of the train. Mr. Haupt, who was found in bed at his residence suffering from cuts in the left arm and the nervous strain, said to a reporter: "I was sitting in the last day coach of the forward half of the parted train when I saw the conductor, John Houghtaling, rush through the car. In another instant I heard the bell rope pull and also the terrifying shout, 'My God, go ahead or we shall be smashed.' I sprang towards the partly opened door facing the coming section of the train, and as my hand grasped the knob the crash came and I knew nothing more till I found myself in the midst of a chaos of wreckage, from which I managed to extricate myself with a few cuts on the arm. How I escaped being smashed to pieces in such a tangle, God only knows."

"Can you tell me anything about the cause of the disaster?"

"Why, yes. The cold truth is, the train was not in a fit condition to carry human beings from the time it left Cleveland. The train parted once before leaving that city. I spoke to the conductor about it and he assured me everything was all right. At Dunkirk the train parted twice. The steam couplings were broken and the air brakes failed to act. A traveling companion and I discussed the question whether it would not be wise to get off there and take another train. We did not like the idea of traveling in such a broken down outfit. But we took the chances and here I am."

There were about ninety people on the ill-fated train which was wrecked, and among them were Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Stewart, of Rochester, who occupied a seat in a coach, and both were killed together. The had with them their little 18-months-old girl, who was thus orphaned at a single blow. The little thing escaped without a single hair of her head injured, and was found clasped in the arms of her mother, who, with the father, was lying upon the floor of the car crushed almost beyond recognition. As the little one was tenderly lifted by eager hands from her perilous position, it prattled "mamma," mamma," in a way that made strong men shed tears. It was a scene pathetic beyond description. Mr. Frank Conger, of Groton, N. Y., took charge of the baby and on arriving in Buffalo, went to the Continental Hotel.

Emperor William.

Berlin special: Speaking of the banquet of the provincial diet at Brandenburg, Emperor William said: "Whoever will help me is welcome; those who hinder me I will crush." The Emperor dwelt upon the remembrance that the people of Brandenburg had stood steadfastly by his house both in its troubled and its joyous days, and it was in the hour of need, he said, that one learned to know his true friends. He had been reproached for having indulged in too much travel, but he would advise his people to travel as much as possible and thereby learn to judge men and things. It is by travel, he said, that I have learned to judge politics from the outside, and have thereby been prevented from taking over-hasty steps. He intended to follow the traditions of his grandfather and complimented the gallant army that had ever stood by his side.

The Wabash Train Wrecker.

Wabash (Ind.) special: Last October the Atlantic express train, east bound, on the Wabash Railroad, was wrecked at Keller's Station, five miles west of this city, and 200 lives were imperiled, but no one was killed. Investigation showed that the switch-lock had been broken with a stone. The detectives of the company located the wrecker in the person of Willie Marquis, a Miami County youth, whose object in committing the crime was revenge, because the company's agent would not trade him a ticket to Peru for a silk handkerchief. Marquis has been on trial the past week and the jury brought in a verdict of one year in the County Jail and a nominal fine. The lightness of the verdict is severely commented upon.

A West Virginia Hanging.

Felix Kempf was hanged at Charleston, W. Va., for the murder of his two children on the night of Oct. 4, 1889. This is the first legal hanging in the State since 1858. There was quite a crowd of people present to see the execution. It took place in the Court House yard in full view of the public. The execution was perfect and Kempf died without a struggle. He was pronounced dead in nine minutes after the drop, but was not taken down for half an hour afterwards. The floor of the scaffold gave away in about ten minutes after the drop, precipitating several people to the ground, slightly injuring two persons.

A Heavy Sentence.

Graham, the embezzling Auditor of Warren County, Ohio, was sentenced to eighteen years in the Penitentiary, and in addition must work out a fine of $126,422.18. The sentence was somewhat of a surprise, as no one thought it would be for more than ten years. It is generally considered as very heavy. Graham was visibly affected, and wept like a child. He seemed to be completely unmanned. He was taken to the Penitentiary on Monday.

A Bold Robbery.

Wabash, (Ind.) special: One of the boldest robberies ever recorded here took place at noon the other day. During the absence at dinner of Hiram E. Coate, deputy County Treasurer, the office was entered and the money drawer, under the counter, forced open with a large pair of shears. Two hundred dollars in bills, a hundred in silver and two checks on local banks for $66.61 and 41.72 were taken besides a draft for $9.75 drawn by a Hamilton bank. The burglar choose a time for his work when no one was in the corridors of the court house, though the place was vacant but a few minutes. The Treasurer's office was entered by unlocking a door leading from the main corridor. There is no clue to the robbers.

Acid in Her Eyes.

Columbus special: Retta McGee, a one year prisoner sent up from Clinton County, Ohio, for grand larceny, and received at the Penitentiary June 24, 1889, made a mistake which will probably blind her for life. The physicians had given her a lotion with which to bathe her eyes, the lids having become granulated, and she picked up by mistake a bottle of the same appearance, but which contained carbolic acid and made a liberal application. Her screams apprised the guards of her mistake, and the physicians were hastily summoned, but while doing all in their power to relieve her intense agony, they have scant hope of saving her sight. Her face was also badly blistered by the fluid.

Riotous Long Island Strikers.

The strike at Sulzback, Weinige & Co.'s silk mills, at College Point, L. I., which began last Thursday, when over one hundred weavers quit work because the firm refused to reinstate a discharged weaver who would not pay for defective work, is assuming serious proportions. The strikers, after parading the streets, picketing the works and preventing new men from going to work, attacked the factory, breaking the windows with stones and with bricks. Sheriff Goldner was called upon for assistance, and a large force of deputies were sent to protect the factory. The strikers are mostly Bohemians, Swiss, and Germans, many having anarchistic proclivities.

Burned to Death.

An explosion occurred in the dust and shaving house of the Armstrong Furniture Company at Evansville, Ind. Three boys, John Sachs, Fred Crawford, white, and William Cheathan, colored, entered the house with a lantern to assist Charles Shelby, colored, fireman, in carrying some saw-dust and shavings to the furnace-room, which is used for fuel. When the dust was stirred up and came in contact with the light, the explosion occurred. The place immediately took fire and before aid could be rendered, the boys were caught under the debris and burned to death. Shelby was blown out of the house, and had both legs and an arm broken and his skull fractured.

Cause for a Sensation.

Philadelphia special: A great sensation has been caused in Bordentown, Allentown and the surrounding villages in Burlington County, New Jersey, on the discovery that the very pleasing female who measured all the ladies for corsets and underwear now turns out to be a man. The fellow had been driving a big trade, and had adopted the female costume because he could the better ply his avocation. He lived at Mrs. Vanduzen's house at Allentown for two weeks, and a couple of bright little boys ferreted out the mystery of the sex. The fellow beat a hasty retreat when the discovery was made. The females are very reticent about the affair.

Too Fast Driving.

A most distressing and possibly fatal accident occurred at Toledo. Al Baldwin and James Hickox were speeding their horses on Madison street, and on approaching Huron street a buggy, in which was Mr. and Mrs. Anson, of East Toledo, turned the corner, and the three buggies were brought together with great force. Mr. and Mrs. Anson were thrown out, as was also Baldwin. The lady suffered a terrible crushing. Her hip was dislocated, face smashed and ribs broken. She was taken up insensible and will probably die. Baldwin was unconscious for a long time, but was taken home after a time. Hickox escaped injury.

Mangled by the Cable.

A peculiar accident occurred at Denver which may cost a man his life. S. Eufftoffel, a laborer, while doing some repairs on one of the city cable lines, had his legs too close to the moving cable which caught one of them below the knee and literally ground it off before the cable could be stopped. The power-house was six blocks away, and during twenty minutes required to notify them to stop the engines the poor fellow's body was kept from being drawn in and ground up by a dozen bystanders taking hold of his arms and clothing, and with their united strength kept him from being torn to pieces.

The Rowdy Students.

The decision of the Kalamazoo (Mich.) College faculty as to the punishments of twenty-one students who kidnaped Prof. E. S. Frey and Instructor Trowbridge is given. One senior was expelled, another senior and a freshman were suspended one year, and the remaining eighteen students with one exception were suspended for the remainder of the school year. The exception is that of a student who is ill and has had no examination as yet. The punishment is generally considered much too severe, and indignation runs high among the students and many of the citizens.

Knifed His Mother-in-Law.

Frank Mingus stabbed and instantly killed his mother-in-law Mrs. Nehemiah Lounsberry, at La Grange, Ind. Mingus separated from his wife recently, and one of his children was placed in the care of his wife's parents. Becoming dissatisfied with this arrangement, he attempted to enter the Lounsberry residence and regain possession of his child, but Mrs. Lounsberry refused him admittance. This infuriated him, and he plunged a small penknife into Mrs. Lounsberry's neck. Only a small incision was made, but death was instantaneous.

Bringing in the Thieves.

Sheriff Ruff, of Pulaski County, has delivered Jerry Schofield over to the authorities of Peru, Ind. Some time ago Schofield, with James Dickey, a companion, victimized A. Pence and Swasee out of $1,300, including a $500 stallion, which he gave in exchange for territory for a patent gate which they falsely represented. Schofield was bound over. Dickey, who is now in jail at Winamac on another charge, will be taken to Peru as soon as his sentence has expired.

Rioters Seek Christ.

Baltimore special: The three Navassa rioters, Jones, Keys, and Smith, alias "The Devil," now under sentence of death, have realized their position and are seeking religious comfort. For a while the trio laughed at all efforts on the part of ministers The first to give up was "the devil." The other two studied over the matter, but both professed conversion. The men are to be hanged on the 28th inst.

A Big Blaze.

Fire broke out in the State National Bank building at Logansport, Ind., one of the finest buildings in the city. The flames spread rapidly and it was only by hard work that the fire was prevented from sweeping the entire block. Several occupants of the third floor narrowly escaped death. The loss is about $25,000, insurance $17,000. DeWenter & Co., gents' furnishing goods, lost $12,000, insured for $3,000; Bank building, loss $8,000, insurance, $12,000. Other losses covered by insurance.

The Ohio Gerrymander.

The Ohio Senate has passed the House bill radistricting the State for congressional purposes and it is now a law. No amendments to the original bill as introduced were made. All Democrats supported the measure. The Ryan bill, amending the Owen Sunday closing law so as to give the councils of cities and villages the right to decide whether the saloons shall be kept open on that day, passed the Senate. Senator Schneider, Republican, of Cincinnati, voted for the bill.

Why a Wife Is Angry.

Omaha special: Mrs. H. H. Cook, who buried a man she supposed to be her husband three months ago, is very angry. She identified the body of a man who committed suicide at the Millard as her husband, and had him duly interred. It is now learned that Cook is living near Kingfisher, Oklahoma with a woman named Nickerson, who formerly resided in Omaha. Mrs. Cook has laid aside her widow's weeds, and will sue for a divorce.

A Sadly Afflicted Family.

A special from Zanesville, Ohio, says: Hon. J. C. McGregor, reading clerk of the State House of Representatives, died of diphtheria. Mrs. McGregor died a few days before, immediately after the death of four children, making six deaths in the family in a little over two weeks. One of four small children remaining is now lying low with the disease, together with Mr. McGregor's aged father, for whom there is little hope of recovery.

Big Natural Gas Combine.

Kokomo special: About a dozen leading natural gas companies operating in the northern and eastern portions of Indiana within the last few days combined their interests, forming an immense trust, with an aggregate capital of $3,500,000. The trust will have control of nearly all the gas produced in the State, both developed and undeveloped. The amount of their leases at the present time is not far from 200,000 acres.

Brice's Personal Taxes.

The Circuit Court, which is in session at Van Wert, O., gave in their decision on the C. S. Brice case, which was recently tried before the court. They directed the Allen County Auditor to place Mr. Brice's personal taxes on the duplicate and collect the same. They held that the injunction granted by Judge Richey should not prevent the Auditor from proceeding in the case to do his duty as prescribed by law.

Better Than a Lottery.

A dispatch from Sioux Falls, S. D., says: Gold has been discovered in a gravel bank just east of the city, and the find has occasioned much excitement, as samples that have been assayed leave no doubt as to its quality. The discovery was purely accidental, but will be developed until the extent of the deposit is known.

A Victim of the Haymarket Trouble.

Daniel Daly, a Chicago policeman who was struck on the head with a piece of shell at the Haymarket anarchist riot, has within the past few months become insane from the effects of the wound. He was adjudged insane in the county court, and sent to a private insane asylum.

No Liberty in the Convict's Rope.

Frank William s, a colored convict sent to the Ohio penitentiary from Cleveland last October on a three-year sentence for receiving stolen property, attempted suicide by making a rope of his sheets and hanging himself to the the bars of his cell, but was discovered and cut down in time to save his life.

Ladies Can't Be Notaries.

Some time ago Miss Julia L. Eggleston applied to Gov. Campbell, of Ohio, for a commission as a Notary Public. The Governor referred the application to the Attorney General for an opinion, and that official rendered his decision that the applicant, not being an elector, was not eligible to appointment.

A Military Rumor.

A report comes from Leavenworth that it is stated in military circles that when the department of the Missouri headquarters is moved to St. Louis the United States arsenal at Rock Island will be transferred to Fort Leavenworth.

A Publishing House Fails.

R. R. Donnelly & Sons, one of the oldest printing and publishing houses in Chicago, has failed. Liabilities about $100,000; the total assets, if placed in the Sheriff's hands, will hardly reach $50,000.

INDIANA HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crime, Casualties and General News Notes.

Land Suit That Will Test the Legality of Marriage Between Slaves.

Back of the simple title of a case filed as Thomas vs. Thomas, in the Daviess Circuit Court, which will come up for trial at Washington soon, lies an interesting and romantic history. Joseph and Pleasant Thomas have brought suit against Sylvia Thomas, their stepmother, to quiet the title of a tract of land near that city. The plaintiffs aver that they are the only legitimate heirs of John M. Thomas, deceased, being the sons of his first wife. The defendant claims that they are not legitimate children, but that she is the legal owner of the land because of her being his widow. All parties involved are prominent colored people. The plaintiffs are the sons of a colored woman whom their father married in slavery in South Carolina fifty years ago. Shortly after the children were born the owner of John M. Thomas moved to Mississippi, tearing the father from his children and wife, who were owned by a neighbor slave-owner named Major James Thompson. Shortly afterward Thomas escaped and returned to his family, but was captured and returned to Mississippi. He escaped again and came to Indiana, where he married the defendant in this case, believing his first wife to be dead. After the war wife No. 1 heard of her husband and came to Daviess County to see him. He refused to recognize her as his wife, although he provided for her comfort until she died, three years after leaving his Southern home. The question to be decided in court is as to the legality of marriage in slavery. The best legal talent in the country is employed on either side, and the attorneys are now in South Carolina taking depositions to be used in the trial.

Vast Coal Interests of the State.

The developments of the Indiana coal fields, beginning in Clay County, has gradually extended to other counties within the coal district, although no block coal has been discovered elsewhere that possesses the same qualities as the Brazil variety. Parke County has of late years come to the front with extensive bituminous mines at Rosedale, Coxville and other points on the Chicago and Indiana Coal road. Next to Park is Greene County. Indianapolis is particularly interested in the latter. The Island City Coal Company and Dugger, Neal & Co., at Linton, have mined many thousands of car-loads of a superior bituminous coal, most of which has found its way to Indianapolis on the Indianapolis and Vincennes road. This development, to a degree, extends up and down the Mackey roads, which, in connection with the Chicago and Eastern Illinois and Chicago and Indiana Coal roads, recently added to the system, run parallel from north to south through the entire coal area, a distance of 150 miles. At Linton a four-foot and nine-inch vein has recently been discovered, and a stock company with a capital of $30,000 has been formed for operating it. The stockholders include a Mr. Flechart and others of Welston, Ohio, and William McCleod, of Linton. The bituminous mines were not involved in the strike last summer and fall. With the block output reduced to 75 per cent. the bituminous output was yet sufficiently large to maintain the State's rank as fift among the coal-producing States.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

IMPORTANT MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capitol—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

THE Senate, on the 4th inst., went into executive session at an early hour and spent nearly the entire day with closed doors. It is understood that much time was devoted to discussing the accounts published in the papers of matters which were under consideration in former executive sessions. Newspaper men were rigidly excluded from all the galleries and approaches to the Senate chamber. In the House the following committee appointments were announced by the Speaker: Messrs. Tarsney, of Missouri, and Reyburn, of Pennsylvania, on claims; Brickner, of Wisconsin, on Mississippi levees; Cheadle, of Indiana, postoffices and post-roads. The consideration of the Arkansas contested election case of Featherstone vs. Cate was then resumed, Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, taking the floor and speaking in behalf of the contestant. Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, followed for the contestee. Mr. Rowell, Chairman of the Committee on Elections, then spoke and was followed by Mr. Moore, of Texas, for the contestee. Mr. Morton also spoke in support of the contestee. Mr. Buckalew, for the contestee, emphasized the judicial aspect of the question. Mr. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, for the contestee, repudiated the charges of crime and corruption made by the Republicans against the people of his State and the citizens of the country in general as a reflection on American character. Messrs. Greenhalge and Cheadle for the contestant and Marsh and Springer for the contestee also made addresses, after which the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 5th inst., on motion of Mr. Turpie, the Senate bill appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Lafayette, Ind., was taken from the calendar and passed. Senators Barbour and Plumb both spoke in opposition to the Blair educational bill, and the Senate then went into executive session, after which an adjournment was taken. The confirmations of William F. Rumbusch, for Supervisor of Census for the First Wisconsin District, and Henry Warmoth, to be Collector of the Port at New Orleans, were announced. In the House consideration of the Arkansas election case of Featherstone vs. Cate was resumed, and the contestee was accorded the floor to speak in his own behalf. Mr. Houk closed the case for the contestant. On motion for the previous question the Democrats demanded a yea and nay vote. The motion was carried by 145 yeas to 141 nays. Mr. Outhwaite offered a resolution that Featherstone was not duly elected to Congress from the First Congressional District of Arkansas, and demanded the yeas and nays on the resolution, which was lost by a vote of 138 yeas to 144 nays. Mr. Springer then offered a resolution to recommit the case to the Committee on Elections, with instructions that the committee appoint a sub-committee of five authorized to proceed to the Congressional district and investigate the election. The resolution was lost, 138 yeas to 146 nays. The Speaker stated that the question recurred to the resolution of the majority of the committee that Cate was not duly elected and that Featherstone was. Mr. Outhwaite moved that the resolution be divided and a vote taken on the first part—to wit, that Cate was not duly elected. This was done, the vote being yeas 147, nays 138. The question was then put on the latter half of the resolution that Featherstone was duly elected, and was adopted by 145 yeas to 135 nays. The Speaker declared the resolution adopted, when Mr. Houk escorted Featherstone to the front of the Speaker's table, where the oath was administered to him by the Speaker. The House then adjourned.

In the Senate on the 6th inst. the following bills were passed: Giving a pension of $75 a month to the daughter of Maj. Gen. W. J. Worth; increasing to $100 a month the pension of the widow of Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of executive business. It is understood that most of the session was spent in the discussion of propositions for forcing newspaper representatives to tell the source from which they derived news relating to executive sessions. In the House the Speaker laid before the House a message from the President, transmitting the report of the Chippewa Indian Commission. Referred. Mr. Morse, of Massachusetts, presented the petition of the Women's Industrial League, asking that two women be appointed on the World's Fair Committee of 1892. Referred. The House passed the afternoon in committee of the whole in the consideration of bills reported favorably from committees to the House, among them one providing for the acquisition of a site for the Postoffice buildings at Washington, and similar bills for the cities of Lansing, Mich., Galesburg, Ill., and Ashland, Wis. The committee then rose and reported its action to the House. The first bill considered was one providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a postoffice building in Washington, which was passed. The bill appropriates $1,075,000 for this purpose. The House also passed the bills relating to the erection of public buildings at Lansing, Galesburg, Ashland and San Jose above mentioned, after which the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 7th, the following public building bills were passed: For Sterling, Ill., $50,000; Oakland, Cal., $300,000; Cheyenne, Wy. T., $150,000; Chester, Pa., $100,000; Helena, Mont., $400,000. The Blair educational bill came up, and Senators Hale and Blair spoke on the measure. The Senate passed Senator Plumb's bill, which provides that all lands granted to railroads and lying alongside of those portions of the roads which are not completed before the passage of the bill shall be forfeited. An amendment was added extending the provisions of the act by one year to the lands granted to roads in Alabama. The Senate then went into executive session and adjourned. In the House Mr. Haugen, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution in the Alabama contested election case of Threat vs. Clark. The resolution, which was unanimously reported, declares Clark entitled to retain his seat. It was adopted. The Speaker laid before the House the Senate bill referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Woodbridge for the use of his invention of projectiles for rifled cannon. After some discussion the bill was defeated. The House then went into committee of the whole on private calendar, and took up the claim of Albert H. Emery for perfecting a machine for testing iron and steel. The afternoon was spent in the consideration of this claim, and at 5 o'clock the committee of the whole reported the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. The House, without action on the report, took a recess until 8 o'clock, and spent the evening in the consideration of pension bills.

The Piccadilly Puzzle.

THE STORY OF A TERRIBLE EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF AN ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.

By F. W. HUME.

CHAPTER II.

DOWKER—DETECTIVE.

The Piccadilly Puzzle, as might be expected, became the talk of the town. At the inquest, which Ellersby attended as principal witness, nothing was developed that could throw a light on the mystery. It was simply proved that the victim had been wounded by some poisonous instrument which had resulted in her death. Mr. Dowker, of Scotland Yard, was the detective detailed to find out who the victim was and if possible to bring her assassin to justice.

Dowker was pleased at this tribute to his cleverness and sighed in an approving manner as he rapidly reviewed all the evidence which had come under the eyes of the police.

In the first place it would be necessary to discover the name of the deceased, and then, by finding out the manner of her life, the motive of the crime might be discovered, pointing to the criminal. The clothing was not marked in any way, but on examining the hat Dowker found from a ticket on the inside that it had been purchased at the shop of Mme. Rene in Regent street; so, wrapping up the hat in paper, he betook himself to the establishment of that lady, as the first step in the chain of evidence which he hoped to complete by the discovery of the assassin.

Mme. Rene's establishment was one of the smartest in London, and was well known to the feminine world, who were accustomed to pay the exorbitant sums demanded there for goods which could have been bought much cheaper elsewhere, but then they would not have been stamped with Mme. Rene's approval, and that omission was to declare that the article was unfashionable. Mme. Rene's trade-mark being thus indispensable, ladies never ventured to go anywhere else if they could possibly manage it, and Mme Rene flourished greatly.

Dowker entered the shop and asked to see Mme. Rene, to whose presence he was conducted at once, for the detective was well known there, having been frequently employed by Madame in missions of a delicate nature, principally concerning ladies of high rank and diamonds.

Madame herself was short and stout, with a thoroughly English face, and indeed, she had been born within the sound of Bow Bells, but took her French name for trade purposes. Her voice was sharp and shrill, and her black eyes bold and piercing—a thorough woman of business; who knew the value of money and time, so wasted neither.

"Well, Mr. Dowker," said madame, when the detective had taken his seat in her private office and closed the door, "what is the matter now? I was just going to send for you."

"What about?" asked Dowker, with a sigh. "More trouble?"

"Yes. Lady Balscombe's run away with Lord Calliston, and she owes me a lot of money, so I want to know the chances of getting paid."

"Any security?" inquired the detective.

"Oh, yes—I'm not such a fool as to lend ladies money without security," said madame, with a shrill laugh. "I've got a diamond necklace, but I think it belongs to Sir Rupert Balscombe—part of the family jewels—I suppose I'd better go and see him."

"I think that would be the wisest plan."

"Humph!" sniffed the lady, frowning, "I don't know. On the one hand he may pay me my money and redeem the necklace, on the other he may kick up a row, and I don't want my dealing in this way made public. I'd have a whole army of husbands down on me—just like men—they go [illegible] the Jews themselves to get ready money, and when their wives do a bit of borrowing with their milliners they make a fuss."

"Why not sell the necklace?"

"That's what I'm going to do as soon as I hear from Lady Balscombe. I suppose she'll be divorced and marry Calliston—more fool she, for he's a scamp—then she'll want to redeem the necklace quietly, but I don't know where to write to her. Where have they gone to?"

"I hear in a yacht to the Azores," said Dowker, who knew everything; "they'll turn up again, I've no doubt—then you can see her."

"What an idiot she was to give up such a fair position!" said madame, who looked at the whole affair from a purely worldly point of view. "She was nobody when Sir Rupert picked her up and he gave her everything—she made ducks and drakes of his money—they fought, and the result is she's gone off with Calliston, a man who is the biggest scamp in town."

"Yes, I know; got a little crib in St. John's Woods," said Dowker, who had no hesitation in talking plainly to this woman, who knew as much about fast life as he did.

"So I hear; never saw his mistress, but hear she's a beautiful woman; there will be a row when she hears his latest escapade; but he'll get tired of Lady Balscombe and go back to the St. John's Wood establishment—they always do."

"Well, the whole affair will end as usual," said the detective with a sigh. "In a public scandal and divorce; but I want to see you about this," and taking the hat out of the parcel he laid it before madame. It was rather striking-looking—black straw with brown, and blue velvet twisted together and caught on one side with a slender silver crescent.

"Yes, that's mine," said madame glancing at it. "Rather good style, I think. What do you want to know?"

"The name of the person you sold it to."

"Humph!—rather a difficult question to answer—some one might have bought it and taken it away with them, but if they left an address I'll soon find out."

She touched a bell and a girl appeared.

"Send Miss Brail to me—she's invaluable," explained madame to Dowker when the girl had vanished. "Such a wonderful memory, forgets nothing. I find her useful in my deals with ladies—a milliner's business is not all bonnets and hats, as we know."

"It's more than the world does," responded Dowker with as near an approach to a smile as he allowed himself.

Miss Brail made her appearance and decided the question at once.

"It was sold to a lady about two months ago—somewhere in St. John's Wood."

"Was it a real lady?" asked Dowker.

"Well, she was more like a servant," responded Miss Brail doubtfully. "I should say a lady's maid."

"Was it sent?" asked madame impatiently.

"Yes—the address is in the book," answered Miss Brail, and went out to get the book. In a few moments she returned and announced:

"Lydia Fenny, Cleopatra Villa, St. John's Wood."

In spite of his habitual phlegm Dowker started, on perceiving which madame dismissed Miss Brail at once.

"Why do you start?" she asked curiously, when the door had closed.

Dowker sighed in his usual manner, and, taking out his handkerchief, twisted it up into a hard ball, a sure sign that he was impressed in some way.

"Cleopatra Villa is Lord Calliston's place."

"Oh!" said madame in rather an amazed tone, "what a curious thing we should have been speaking about him! I suppose this Lydia Fenny is the lady's maid there."

"Was the lady's maid," corrected Dowker.

"What do you mean?"

"If this hat," touching it, "was sold by you to Lydia Fenny—she is dead."

"Dead!"

"Yes, the victim of the Jermyn street murder."

"What?" Madame Rene sprang to her feet, greatly agitated.

"I wanted to find out the name of the dead woman in order to get a clew to the perpetrator of the crime," explained Dowker, rapidly; "this hat was on the head when the body was discovered. It had a mark inside showing it was bought here, so I came here to find out to whom it was sold—you tell me Lydia Fenny, so the logical conclusion is that Lydia Fenny is the victim."

"It's all very strange," said madame, rapidly looking at him with keen eyes, "but it may not be Lydia Fenny at all. Other hats might have been made similar to this one, or Lydia Fenny might have lent or given the hat to another person."

"There is only one way of finding that out," said Dowker, wrapping up the hat and rising to his feet.

"And that is?"

"To make inquiries at Cleopatra Villa. Good-day." And the detective went out, leaving madame transfixed with astonishment.

"Humph," she said at length. "I wonder if Lord Calliston's got anything to do with this murder."

CHAPTER III.

THE ST. JOHN'S WOOD ESTABLISHMENT.

Cleopatra Villa was a pleasant house and a very expensive one, as Lord Calliston found to his cost. But then, the presiding deity, by name Lena Sarschine, was very beautiful, and insisted upon having her dwelling fitted up in a corresponding manner, so Calliston gave way and spent a small fortune on this bijou residence.

Dowker knew a good many of these little worldly wise Eves, the existence of whom was not supposed to be known to the polite world, so he felt quite at ease when, upon ringing the bell, he was admitted to the garden by a solemn-looking man servant. He was well acquainted with Calliston's life, both public and private—neither side being very reputable—but then, with such advantages of wrong-doing as the world now offers, 'tis hard to be virtuous.

Calliston had come into the title while in his childhood, and, the estate having been well looked after during his minority, he found plenty of money to spend when he came of age; and he certainly did spend it. Horse-racing and yachting were his two principal pleasures, but curiously enough his name was never mixed up with any well-known woman, and few of his friends knew, except by hearsay, of the divinity who dwelt in Cleopatra Villa. Calliston had fallen in love with her down in the country some years before. Occasionally she went to the theater, and sometimes drove in the park, but at such rare intervals that few people knew who she was. Calliston was very jealous of her and seldom asked his friends to supper, but she was reported by the few who had been thus honored to be a very beautiful woman with charming manners. The general opinion was that he would end up by marrying her, when his entanglement with Lady Balscombe became kowmn, and henceforward he was seen more by that lady's side than in the neighborhood of St. John's Wood.

Dowker, from some mysterious source only known to himself, was cognizant of all this, and had now come down to discover what connection the establishment of St. John's Wood had with the murder in Jermyn street.

He knew that Calliston had gone off with Lady Balscombe, so said he had a message from him and would like to see Miss Sarschine. The servant showed him into a magnificently furnished drawing room, where he waited the appearance of the lady, intending when she entered to ask her all particulars about her maid Lydia Fenny, with a view to discovering the perpetrator of the crime. Being of an inquiring turn of mind, Dowker rose from his seat when the door was closed, and, folding his hands behind his back, strolled about the room, his lank, gray-clad figure seeming sadly out of place.

It was not a very large apartment, but luxuriously furnished, the walls being hung with pale-green silk draped in graceful folds and caught up here and there with thick silver cords. The carpet, also of pale-green, was embroidered with bundles of white flowers, and the window curtains were of soft, white liberty silk. There were two windows on one side in deep recesses filled with brilliantly tinted flowers, white blossoms predominating, and at the end of the room were folding doors opening into a conservatory filled with ferns, in the middle of which a small fountain splashed musically into a wide marble basin. There were low velvet-covered lounging chairs all about, tables crowded with bric-a-brac and photographs in oxydized silver frames, while here and there on the carpet were skins of bears and tigers. Contrary to the usual custom in drawing-rooms, there was only one mirror, a small oval glass over the mantel-piece, framed in pale-green plush. In the corners were high palms and other tropical vegetation, with white marble statues peering from out of their green leaves, and in one corner a handsome grand piano, on the top of which lay a lot of sheet-music. The room was illuminated by two or three tall brass lamps with bright green shades smothered in creamy lace, and just over the piano were a number of quaint-looking weapons arranged in a fantastic fashion. Highland broadswords, Indian daggers and Maylay krisses were all grouped round a small silver shield handsomely embossed, and though at first they seemed somewhat out of place against the rich silk hangings, yet when the eyes became accustomed to them the effect was not unpleasant.

They were arranged in a fantastic pattern, each side being the same, but here Dowker noticed with much curiosity that one side was incomplete, a Maylay kriss having been removed. He looked at the other side and there were certainly two arranged crossways, but on the other there was only one. Dowker was startled by this discovery, as it seemed to point to the fact that the crime had been committed by the missing kriss. He knew the Maylays were a savage nation, and without doubt poisoned their daggers, so the absence of one of those would argue that it had been the weapon used. He gingerly touched the point of a kriss with the tip of his finger, and then drew it hastily away.

"It might be poisoned," he muttered, looking at his finger to assure himself he had not broken the skin. "I wonder if it is—I'd like to find out."

Glancing hastily round the room to make sure he was alone, he took a kriss from the wall on the other side, so that the pattern was now equalized, and trusted to this fact to hide his abstraction of the weapon. Then he took some old letters out of his pocket, and, tearing them up into strips, carefully swathed the blade of the kriss to prevent possible accidents, and slipped the parcel into his breast pocket.

"I'll go and see a doctor," he muttered to himself, as he buttoned his coat, "and try the effect of this on a dog; if the symptoms of death are the same, that will be proof conclusive that the missing dagger was used to commit the crime. Once I establish that, I'll soon find out the guilty party, as it must have been some one in this house—especially as Lydia Fenny was a servant here."

He walked back again to his chair and had just sat down when the door opened and a woman entered. Not at all pretty, medium height, dark hair and eyes, and a sharp, active-looking face, which, however, was disfigured by marks of the small-pox. She was dressed in a well-made dark costume, and wore a knot of crimson ribbon round her throat. Dowker surveyed this lady carefully and instantly came to the conclusion that this was a fellow-servant of Lydia Fenny—certainly not Miss Sarschine.

"Hang it," muttered Dowker, "he wouldn't make love to that!"

The newcomer advanced as Dowker arose to his feet.

"You want to see Miss Sarschine?" she asked, looking at the detective.

"Yes; have I the pleasure——"

"No; I am not Miss Sarschine, but I can let her have any message you wish delivered."

"Cannot I see the lady herself?"

"You cannot; she is out of town."

"Oh!" Dowker looked rather blank. This, then, was the reason Miss Sarschine did not come forward to identify the body.

"From whom is your message?" asked the woman.

"From—from—Lord Calliston," said Dowker, in a hesitating manner.

"That's impossible," replied the woman, curtly.

"Why?"

"Because Lord Calliston is away yachting, and Miss Sarschine is with him."

"Oh, indeed!"

Dowker was beginning to feel rather nonplussed, as he was now at a loss for an excuse for his presence, so he tried another plan.

"Do you read the papers?" he asked, sharply.

"Sometimes; not often," said the woman, somewhat taken aback. "Why do you ask?"

"I have particular reasons for the question."

"I am not bound to answer your question. May I ask your name?"

"Dowker—detective."

The woman started at this and looked a little curiously at him.

"What do you want to know?"

"Are any of the servants of this house missing?"

"No."

"Dear me! Have any been lately dismissed?"

"No; do you allude to any particular servant?"

"Yes; Lydia Fenny."

The woman started again.

"What about her?"

"She is dead. If you had read the papers you would have noticed the Jermyn street tragedy. She is the victim."

"There is some mistake," said the woman, quietly.

"I don't think so," said Dowker, coolly taking out the hat from the newspaper. "Do you know this?"

At the sight of the hat the woman became violently agitated.

"Yes; where did you get this?"

"It was on the head of the woman who was murdered."

The other gave a cry and staggered back.

"Oh, my God!" she said, under her breath, "what does it all mean?"

"Mean? It means that Lydia Fenny is dead."

"No!" she cried, vehemently, "not dead."

"How do you know?"

"Because I am Lydia Fenny!"

Dowker stared at her aghast.

"Yes," she went on, rapidly, "the hat is mine; how did you find out I was the owner?"

"I went to Mme. Rene and she told me you bought it from her; but who was the dead woman?"

Lydia Fenny again gave a cry.

"I'm afraid to say—I'm afraid to say; how was she dressed?"

"In a sealskin jacket, a silk dress and that hat."

Lydia wrung her hands in despair.

"It must be true," she moaned; "it is the dress she wore."

"Who wore?" asked Dowker, in an excited tone.

"My mistress—Miss Sarschine!"

Illustrating the Heroism and Self-Sacrifice of Woman.

There was a crowded temperance lecture at Tulare the other night, and the audience was very much affected by the speaker's pathetic account of how a faithful young wife had borne the abuse and ill-treatment of a drunken brute for years and had finally reclaimed him by putting stuffed snakes under his pillow.

As the audience was wiping its eyes a sad-faced man in an emigrant car duster arose in the corner of the hall and said in a melancholy tone:

"The incident related by the talented speaker is certainly very interesting, but a case came recently under my notice that illustrates in even a greater degree the heroism and self-sacrifice on the part of woman—noble woman!"

"Will the gentleman oblige us by relating his experience?" urged the lecturer.

"Well, I am not accustomed to public speaking," hesitated the stranger.

"Go on, go on, go on!" shouted the sympathetic teetotalers.

"The episode to which I refer," said the man with an uncalled-for garment, "relates to the heroic act of Mrs. Mary Matilda Diffenderfer, of Windy Gulch, Wyoming. Learning that a lonely widow woman living about fifteen miles out in the forest was stricken down by the fell hand of disease, she resolved, though the snow was eighteen feet deep on the ground and a fearful storm raged at the time, to take the poor creature in her hour of need the only succor that could assuage her suffering."

"Heaven bless her!" shouted several persons.

"Strong men—miners, hunters—inured to hardship, shrank from accompanying her; no one volunteered. It was almost certain death to brave the trackless forests on that bitter night, but the noble woman never faltered. There was a precious human life hanging in the balance and she would go alone."

"What man would have done so?" cried one of the female vice presidents.

"For two days and nights that devoted woman toiled through the blinding tempest. With both feet and one hand frozen she tottered through the gigantic snowdrifts until at length she managed to crawl to the cabin of the lonely invalid. She had barely strength left, as she fell exhausted on the floor, to hand to the sufferer the priceless boon she had bought."

"What was it?" shouted the entire audience as the emotion-choked speaker paused to dash away a tear.

"It was, my friends," said the sad-faced man, reaching under his seat for a valise, "it was a box of Stagg's Oriental Liver-Lifting Capsules (and he scattered a handful of circulars), which I would now like to furnish you all with at the low price of twenty-five cents a box. None genuine without the maker's name on the box. A boon to the afflic——"

As his remains were not called for in three days he was buried at the expense of the corporation.—San Francisco Call.

Trying His Voice.

"What's that terrible hollering, Jones?"

"Oh, that's the music teacher overhead singing."

"Singing?"

"Yes; he's trying his voice."

"What for—murder?"—Chicago Ledger.

BITS OF FUN.

A HEAD waiter—The "next" in a barber shop.

"NOTHING is harder to bear than a long succession of pleasant days," sighed the umbrella maker.

POOR people with too many naughty boys in their families should send some of them to a nautical school.

INTERVIEWER—What do you regard as the chief instrumentality in converting the heathen? Returned Missionary—Indigestion.

A MAN said the only reason why his dwelling was not blown away in a late storm was because there was a heavy mortgage on it.

DOCTOR (feeling the patient's pulse)—Um, um, I think I shall have to bleed you. Patient (feebly)—Can't you wait, Doctor, till you send in your bill?

NEVER be critical upon the ladies. The only way in the world that a true gentleman ever will attempt to look at the faults of a pretty woman is to shut his eyes.

TELL a woman that she looks fresh and she will smile all over. Tell a man the same thing, and if he doesn't kick you it is either because he has corns or dares not.

LOVER—Don't withhold your consent on account of my income, sir. I can support your daughter on $25 a week. Pater—Then you are a jim dandy. I never could.

MRS. SKINNPHLINT—Jeremiah, that's an awful cold you've got. Mr. Skinnphlint (crossly)—You needn't make any fuss about it, Jane. It didn't cost me a cent to get it.

CUSTOMER (to bartender)—That's the poorest whisky I ever tasted. Taint fit to drink. Bartender—Sorry, sir, it's the best we've got. Customer—That so? Well, give me a little more of it.

RETRIBUTION ON THE RAIL.

Little Tommy McVail,
As he rode on the rail,
Yelled for his mother to open the winder.
Fate marked him for that,
For out blew his hat
And into his eye blew a cinder.

WHEN Mrs. Shaller read a news item stating that "a man in New York threw his wife from an upper window in a family jar," she looked surprised, and "wondered if the man knew his wife was in the jar at the time."

MRS. DE SENSE (to benevolent friend)—I presume these idiot asylums do some good, but I can't see how they can hope to make idiots self-supporting. Small Son (gloomily)—I guess they set 'em to writin' children's books.

"LOOK here," said the credit man, "we can't sell you those goods on four months' time." "Vy not? I gives you my note." "But do your notes sell on the street?" "Mine gracious! no, or I vould go home and make notes instead of cloding."

EMPLOYER—"William, Mrs. Spriggins complains that she received only one of all the bundles she had put up here last night." William—"That's funny, sir. I wrote Mrs. Spriggins on one bundle and put ditto on each of the others."

MR. SUNDRIES (to his youngest)—Noonah, darling, what makes you the sweetest baby in the whole wide world? Noonah—I deth, papa, that when God made me he mutht have put thome thugah in the thand that I wath made of.

Surgical Operation Upon a Lioness.

Yesterday morning Keeper Havens, of the Gress Zoo, performed a very delicate operation.

The silver lioness, "Mollie," chewed up a piece of raw beef which the butcher had chopped up with a cleaver, leaving some fragments of bone in the flesh. It is not the custom of the keeper to give the animals flesh that contains any bone at all. In this instance a sharp sliver of bone pierced the lioness' gum on the outside of the jaw, next to the cheek, just below the left eye.

The place swelled up and festered, and the animal suffered a great deal of pain. Her head was swollen and she was unable to eat.

Yesterday morning Keeper Havens went to the cage, and by coaxing the lioness he got her to lie down, and then he slipped ropes over her fore feet, stretching them to either side of the cage and tying them securely.

"Mollie" kicked and struggled until the keeper fondled her awhile. After she was secured he entered the cage all alone, and, taking her head between his knees, he cut a small incision in the cheek, took his lance and drew out the sliver, an inch in length.

He did the work all alone, and no one else was present during the performance of the operation.

Yesterday afternoon, after she had been released several hours, he visited the cage, and she met him with a gratified look, holding the wound up to the bars of the cage as if she was glad that he had performed the operation that relieved her, and she appeared as docile and kindly as a kitten, although she had been fierce and resentful before.—Atlanta Constitution.

Jem Browne's Stratagem.

For several years before his death frequent draughts of sherry became a necessity with Jem Browne. Owing to poverty, however, he was ill able to provide it. Attracted by the announcement "Funerals supplied." Browne one day, when fatigued in his rambles, waited upon an undertaker, his face buried in a handkerchief, his voice inaudible from emotion. The man ran for a decanter of wine; Browne drank and was relieved. He asked several questions about scarfs and hat bands, coffins, hearses, mutes and coaches. The undertaker assured him that he would provide all. Browne at last stood up to leave.

"But you have not told me where I am to find the remains," remarked the undertaker.

"You said you would find everything—find the body," exclaimed Browne, as he left the house and rapidly turned the corner.

Fine Sage.

Metaphorical language is sometimes misleading. When one begins to "call names," even in a complimentary fashion, there is a chance that some literal person will wonder what he means. A gentleman visiting a little town "Down East," says:

I called on business at the house of an old lady, and entertained myself in looking over her library.

We fell to discussing books, and, thinking of Emerson, I asked her if she knew much about the "Sage of Concord."

"Concord, where?" she asked.

"Concord, Massachusetts," I answered.

"Is it any better'n any other sage?" she innocently inquired.

THURSDAY.........MARCH 13, 1890.

Township Caucuses.

The democrats of the several townships are requested to meet at the usual places on

SATURDAY MARCH 22, 1890,

at 3 p m. for the purpose of placing in nomination, candidates for the township offices, which are to be filled at the election of April 7, 1890. The officers to be elected can be found by the sheriff's notice which will be posted in each township, and published in the COURIER of March 13. Also, at the same time and place, new committeemen are to be elected for the different precincts, whose term of service will commence on Saturday, April 12. But should any township, after due consideration perfer a date different from that herein given then such date may be taken instead of March 22. It is to be hoped that these caucuses will be fully attended, and that every one will interest himself in getting the best men in all cases.

W. B. BROWN,
Chairman of Co. Committee.
Auburn, March 11, 1890.

NEW YORK has been having its heaviest snowstorm, the past few days.

WABASH county treasury was robbed of over $400 last week. The thieves got in while the treasurer was at dinner.

CARLOTTA, once empress of Mexico, is likely to regain her reason. She has been mildly insane since Maximilian's death.

THE seal fisheries of Alaska have been sold. This time to a new company, the "North American Commercial Company" of San Francisco.

IT is believed that Chauncy M. Depew, the great New York railroad man is getting ready to run for president in 1892 on the republican ticket.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN, the eccentric genius started west from Boston at midnight Sunday, March 2, to make the trip around the world which he says he can do in sixty days.

SENATOR ALLISON was re-elected United States Senator for Iowa, March 5, receiving the entire republican vote. The democrats voted for the defeated democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, Mr. Bestow.

CITY elections in Iowa and New York last week, show a continued landslide in favor of the democrats. Some cities, the democrats carried for the first time in many years. It looks as if Harrison's first year is a failure as these elections were all on the 4th of March.

THERE was a big meeting of colored men in New York City last week, to consider what they should do in regard to tariff reform. A club was formed favorable to reform and to the principles of democracy. Similar clubs are to be formed all over the country, and particularly in the south.

THE plan to make Oklahoma a "colored state," as we notice elsewhere is likely to cause serious trouble there. Already the rougher elements among the white settlers begin to make a stir. Last week two colored families were attacked and driven away, and it is feared all colored people will be forced to leave.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, the young son of Robert Lincoln, our minister to England, died at London, March 5, of some sort of blood poisoning. The trouble began in November, when a large carbuncle came under his arm. He was at school in France, and the sore was cut open too soon. He has gradually got worse since then. He was a lad of great promise.

DEMOCRATS are being expelled from Congress and their seats given to republicans with charming regularity. It don't seem to make any difference what the majority was, or on what claim the republican asks it, it is sure to be done as soon as a vote can be reached. It is a wonder that Capt. White has not contested Judge McClellan's seat. We have no doubt he could get it.

OKLAHOMA is soon to be organized as a territory, and a governor appointed. The strangest part of this is, that a colored man, a former state auditor of Kansas, E. P. McCabe wants to be governor. He and other colored men are getting as many negroes to move to that country, as they can, believeing they can thus secure a majority of the votes when it becomes a state. It is possible that they may do this.

AMERICAN tin is a new product. The first block of this valuable metal was sent to Pittsburg last week from the Black Hills, in South Dakota. It weighed about twenty five pounds and is said to be of a good quality. We understand the mines bid fair to produce a good supply. Now we look to hear republican editors claim that we never would have produced a pound of tin, if it had not been for a protective tariff. That is what one of them recently said about the last year's crop of potatoes.

REPUBLICAN papers that are so jolly over that "increased republican votes" in the sixth congressional district, in Philadelphia, should look up the vote in '86. And at the recent special election the republicans worked the liquor element to the extent of several thousand votes, as so many licenses were about to expire, that the saloon keepers and their friends did not dare to oppose the republicans for fear they would get no more licenses, the local authorities being republican. There were also many who had no license, and it was understood the police would not molest them if they supported the republican nominee. With all these things, it looks as if the democratic candidate did pretty well.

CONGRESS is now once more considering the French Spoliation claims. The history of these remarkable claims dates back 1802, when they were first reported to the house. The claims originated during the war between France and England, when the United States failed to perform the guaranty contained in the treaty of alliance with France. France retaliated by the destruction of thousands of our vessels and the confiscation of their cargoes. The appropriation required to settle these claims is estimated at eight to ten million dollars.

Court.

Much work has been done, especially in getting cases started on the road. A case from Wilmington township, in which Wm. Helms was charged with hunting on another man's land; took a whole day costing the county $100 or so. It was shown he had shot a rabbit on another man's land. Moody for defense, showed it was swamp or overflowed land, which cleared the man. The jury said not guilty. All this for a rabbit. Wm. Helms was fined $5 for gaming. W. B. Austin vs Somers, mechanic's lien, $21 allowed. This, we suppose is one of the several cases, where the men failed to get pay of the contractor, and came on Summers for it. It makes him pay twice. Egbert M. Hodge was admitted to the bar. Hannah Love was declared of unsound mind, and we suppose a guardian will take charge of her property. The state case against Arnold accused of stealing some chains began yesterday. The grand jury is grinding away. The trial jury is at work; B. B. Long, being in place of Denison, John Miller in place of Hallet and Samuel Hikestraw in place of Mr. Furnish.

A new color, amethyst mingled with gold, has been introduced into Venetian glass, and is dividing popularity with tender sea green.

Bad blood causes dyspepsia and dyspepsia reacts by causing bad blood. So both go on, growing worse, until the whole system is poisoned. The surest means of relief for the victim is a thorough and persistent course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., had a disease of the scalp which caused her hair to become very harsh and dry and to fall so freely she scarcely dared to comb it. Ayer's Hair Vigor gave her a healthy scalp, and made the hair beautifully thick and glossy.

Huntington Democrat: Pension Agent Ensley has sent to Charles Flaherty, of Terre Haute, gaurdian of Owen Flaherty a draft for $13,079.07. The beneficiary came out of the war hopelessly insane. He will hereafter receive $72 a month pension money. The back pay sent him is the largest amount ever paid in Indiana in a lump to a pensioner. Flaherty was in Company C. 125th Illinois. His son and guardian is a Vandalia engineer.

We see by the report of the First National Bank, which we publish to-day, that our young legal friend, Don A. Garwood is one of its directors. Mr. Garwood is a man of excellent business capacity, as well as of a high order of legal attainments, and we are pleased to see him coming to the front not only in matters of business, but in the practice of his profession. We understand he is getting into a good law practice, and we prophesy for him a successful career in this line.

The Monte Cristo Company broke up at Lagrange. Their expenses had been too heavy for their receipts, and it took more money to get started than they had anticipated. Mr. McCallum, the manager paid up everything he owed to the last dollar, except the board bill, which was about $40 due the hotel. Not being able to pay this, he was thrown into jail. But next day he was liberated the people believing he was honest. They got him up a benefit entertainment to get money enough to pay the debt and for the company to get to their homes. This was a very good thing to do, for we cannot help believing Mr. McCallum is honest. He certainly had a good company, and we sorry to hear of his misfortune.

The Press has been getting up a new idea to make the new school book law unpopular, so as to get it kicked out, and let the old state of things in again so he can get that 30 per cent profit, out of the sale at the old high prices. Now, he goes on to say, the new law will compel each trustee to devote about 30 days a year, to this work making quite an expense to the township. The trustees themselves say that about 10 days is what the new law will take this, the first year, but that after this, it will not likely be so much. So now, all the Press has to do to become reconciled to cheap school books and no profits, is to divide his estimated expense by three. Then, by quietly giving up his 30 per cent profit he will be in shape to retire from the defense of the old high priced text books and let the people have books just as good at least, and at about half the cost.

Mrs. John Neal and Mrs. G. A. Mader have been making a visit with a sister at Corunna.

The protracted meetings at the M. E. church have been the result of many of Auburn's citizens coming out on the side of right. Sunday evening there were 20 united with the church, and still the good work goes on.

Charles McBride, of Bryan, Ohio' was here a few days last week, returning home on Monday. He came partly to see his wife's people, Thomas Cochran and family. Mrs. Cochran has been in very poor health for some time, and she is still in a precarious condition.

A fine rustic chair has been on exhibition a few days at the barber shop of Geo. Grund. It is a very artistic piece of furniture, made of hickory withes, or slender saplings, and braided together very tastefully. They are made at Bryan, Ohio, and this one was brought here by Charles McBride, when he came down last week.

Read our article about "who must register" in order to vote. The general run of people do not have to register, only those named. If one wishes to go away for some time, and yet retain the right to return and vote, he can by registering secure the right to do so. If he has not registered he cannot come back and vote, the way several did in 1888.

Miss Lida Welch, was here Tuesday. She is well known to many of our people. Her home was for some years in Ligonier where she still has property. She was a few years ago admitted to the bar of Noble county and practiced law. Now she is traveling for the sale of tea, and makes the towns about here, once a month. She has good business ability and is probably making money.

Mr. Salyer, our popular restaurant man, says it is all a mistake about his wanting to remove from Auburn, and he can't see how such a rumor got started. He likes Auburn well, and the people seem to like him, as he keeps a first-class restaurant where the hungry can always depend on getting a clean, square meal, or lunch whenever they want it. We don't think Mr. Salyer wants to go, or that the people care to have him go.

Harper's Young People has always been famous for its fairy stories. It is now publishing a new series illustrated by the old favorite Howard Pyle, and has lately introduced to its readers another author who seems destined to be his companion in popularity among lovers of fairy lore. The latter, Mr. Frank M. Bicknell, recently contributed "The City of Stories," and will follow that with "The Youth who arose a Pauper and went to bed a King," which is to appear with an illustration in the number to be published March 4th.

The C. F. Higgins Concert Company that is to be at the Opera House, March 22, has the most complete recommend we ever saw. It consists in a list of names and residences of those who heard them in Buffalo, N. Y. when they gave the entertainment for the Young Men's Christian Association in that city. After each name we see the individual remarks made by each. All are highly commendatory, and the company may well feel proud of such a testimonial. We believe our people will have an excellent musical entertainment from this company.

New York Star: The President has made a little mistake in Virginia. He appointed Captain Frank Winston, of Louisa, to be supervisor of the census for the Third District, which includes the city of Richmond. He does not appear to have made the inquiries beforehand that prudence would have suggested to a careful partisan for Captain Winston has written him a letter in which he says that he understands the appointment was extended to him because he was a "protection Democrat." As he is not "that sort of a Democrat" he concludes his letter by declining the proffered place.

The Editor of the Press gets off another gratuitous lie about that direct tax. We proved him a conscienceless liar when he said "the COURIER editor had opposed the payment of the direct tax." Now after admitting that he jumped at this conclusion, he tries to get off a new lie, just we suppose, for the enjoyment he finds in this sort of thing. He says: 'Oh no, you were not opposed to this tax, but you were very soon after it was paid. This lie is as totally without a foundation as the other, and the writer knew he had not a single thing on which to base such an assertion. The editor of this paper never opposed the payment of the direct tax, and never expects to. It is the most honest way in which the government can get its money, if we except the internal revenue tax. It makes everybody pay according to his means, and does not like a tariff take an unfair proportion off the poor man. In the meantime let the Press editor "take for granted" a few more untruths about the COURIER editor. We can stand it.

Russel Sturgis will contribute to an early number of Harper's Magazine an article on "Painted Greek Sculpture," illustrated with drawings from statuary which has been recently discovered at Athens.

The Churubusco People has been rechristened and is now called "Truth." The publishers, Downey & Geiger, are working hard to give their people a good paper. We hope they will be rewarded by success.

Wayne, carry the largest stocks, in the state, of all the following lines of goods: Carpets, furniture, baby carriages, toilet sets, lamps, window draperies and upholstery goods.

John H. Renck has been appointed postmaster at Lagrange, in place of J. Frank Snyder whose time expires March 12. Mr. Snyder was, when appointed, editor of the Lagrange Democrat. The new man is editor of the Standard. That makes it even. The editors in DeKalb county did not fare so well at Harrison's hands.

W. H. Dills, J. J. VanAuken, J. L. Davis and Ezra Ensley, went to Albion, last Friday to attend the meeting of directors for the new railroad. The principal work was to see that the necessary funds were raised. Auburn and Albion reported the money raised, and Ligonier probably has her share by this time. A survey will soon be commenced.

By an oversight we forgot to mention the marriage last week of our young friend William Kessler to Miss Lena Hebel. The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's mother, on Main street, Thursday evening, Feb. 27, Rev. C. Preuss, of Avilla, officiating. Mr. Kessler is one of our young business men being extensively engaged in the manufacture of cigars. The COURIER extends hearty congratulations, and may the young couple enjoy a long and happy life.

The Valparaiso Normal School is flourishing, as will be seen by this letter from Prof. H. B. Brown, the head of this great institution of learning:

"You will be pleased to know that our school here is more prosperous than ever before. Our attendance is large and we are all working hard trying to make it more and more worthy of the confidence of our friends. We want to do honest work, such as will tell on young people who are trying to make a success of life. I wish it might be possible for you to visit us sometime."

A very laudable project is being talked up, that will, we hope, prove a benefit to our citizens, and more especially to the young men. It is the establishment of a pleasant reading room. A meeting will be held in a short time, to complete the necessary arrangements. We trust our people will give this matter a favorable consideration. Auburn should have sufficient interest in the future of her many bright young men, to provide for them a pleasant place in which they could while away the hours of leisure, such as all young men have, in a place where they may be free from evil, or at least undesirable influences. There is a tendency among young men to pass their leisure hours in a way that tends rather to lead them unconsciously down rather than to elevate them. Possibly, we can make good influences sufficiently pleasant to them, to counteract these and other undesirable influences. We can at least, try.

C. P. Houser, south of town is putting up a lot of new patent fence. He reports a fair prospect for strawberries, etc., this year.

The town was chock full of people last Saturday. The day was pleasant and roads good, or at least passable after the long bad spell.

Miss Minnie Lanning sang in the Presbyterian choir Sunday, as part of the regular choir was assisting at the funeral of Mr. Askew.

Hicksville has had another fire. A blacksmith shop, wagon shop and the residence of Nelson Smith were burned Saturday morning, March, 1.

Sam. Squires was up here Monday to meet his folks, who had been down to Busco to visit the family of his brother, Dr. James Squires. The latter is reported doing well and the family well.

P. F. Ryan, the gentleman who was book-keeper at the band sawmill for sometime, is a candidate before the Whitley county democratic convention for auditor. Mr. Ryan is a man of ability and would be a good officer.

Jacob Link and his brothers are among the descendants of Revolutionary soldiers in this section. Their grandfather, Adam Link served in that famous struggle. There are six of these grandchildren, including John Link at Benzonia, Michigan.

The mercury staid down in the neighborhood of zero several days last week, enabling people to get in a stock of ice much of which was about six inches thick. Sunday it got warmer and Monday morning, there was nearly two inches of wet snow. Much of this was wasted by the damp day that followed.

The Dispatch seems to think the pension expense is getting pretty big. Lucky the COURIER did not say that, or the Press, at least, would "take it for granted" that the COURIER is opposed to pensions. It would not be such a very surprising thing to find republican papers fighting prohibition and pensions, and the democratic papers defending them. We predict, the republican party will desert both, when they find that no more votes can be gained from either.

Mrs. Drake, of Chicago, sister of the late Mr. I. N. Askew, was present at the funeral Sabbath. She brought with her a very beautiful pillow of flowers with the name Newton, worked on it with other small flowers. The small flowers were blue making a very beautiful contrast of colors. One brother living in Shelby, Ohio could not attend on account of ill health. One sister that used to live in Mercer county, Pa., was not in attendance as her present home is not known.

The second anniversary of Samuel Ford Camp No. 114, Sons of Veterans at this place comes on March 29, and the boys are looking forward to the celebration of this event with great enthusiasm. Last year the boys gave an entertainment in memory of their first year of "organized sonship," with gratifying results. This year they propose to give the public the benefit of better facilities, hoping thus to merit the patronage and justify the confidence of Auburn people. The supper will be given on a ground floor, inasmuch as climbing stairs is tiresome. After this a literary program will be executed at the Opera House. It is to be understood that all persons holding supper tickets will be admitted to the entertainment free and those who don't care to take supper, but wish to attend the literary exercises will be charged a reasonable admission. Remember the date, and secure your tickets early and help the boys celebrate.

The story of Pocahontas is absolutely true. Nobody doubted it until 1866, when Charles Dean started the present skepticism on the point. Henry Stevens believed Smith implicitly, and he is the greatest authority of our age. Before I edited Smith's works I knew of all this doubt; and I went coolly and warily into the matter, determined to find out the truth. Bit by bit the evidence accumulated until the honesty of statement and high character of the Lincolnshire Captain came out refulgently. Of Pocahontas' existence and services to the English colony no man doubts. The question is, did she render this peculiar assistance to Smith? No one was present there but himself. Did he invent it afterwards? Was he a liar generally? Certainly not. In my reprint many greater hair-breadth escapes than that are recorded in his life, and in later Indian stories captive men have often been saved from death by Indian squaws. Such an incident is almost commonplace. So, after a most rigorous test, I was happy to believe that the Pocahontas story is not a myth, like the William Tell one, but a solid, historical fact.—Prof. Edward Arber, quoted in the Athenæum.

Laporte Argus: "A good many foolish things are being said to make it appear that the new election law will be difficult to comply with. It is all nonsense. There is nothing difficult about it. The voter will be given a piece of paper with all the tickets printed side by side on it. Each ticket will be appropriately headed. Any voter who wants to vote a straight ticket will go into a stall by himself and stamp the head of the ticket he wants to vote. He then gives it to the inspector and it is put into the ballot box. When it is taken out the ticket that is marked is counted and no attention is paid to the others. That is all there is of it, and surely any voter can do that. If he wants to vote a scratched ticket, he simply stamps a cross by the name of each candidate he wants to vote for. If he cannot do his work himself he is at liberty to call an election clerk to do it for him, and the clerk is liable to be sent to the penitentiary for exposing any such secrets. It is folly to carry the idea that voting is going to be difficult for anybody under this law, for it is not. The law is plain, has come to stay, and it behooves everybody to make the best of it. This system is the best yet discovered to give a free and honest ballot, and that is what the common people must have, or the ballot is worth nothing to them."

In a letter from Dr. Elson, at Canton, Ohio he says the Higgins Concert Company which is to be here, is a grand thing.

G. W. Reed, four and one half miles east of Auburn will sell a big lot of personal property, April 1. The best lot of farm implements to be found.

Dixon Huston, four miles south of New Era and three miles east of Huntertown will have a sale of personal property next Thursday, March 20. A good sale.

Waterloo Press: "H. H. Knott has leased his planning mill in the west part of town to Messrs Kiplinger and Imhoff for a period of three years. The new firm is composed of two practical, energetic and competent mechanics, Michael Kiplinger and Theodore E. Imhoff, and the public in general can rest assured that the new firm mean business, and that they will promptly attend to it. On Saturday they purchased the stock of lumber and good will of J. R. Duncan & Son, and they are now ready to contract for building supplies and manufacture all kinds of house furnishings. They will improve the machinery and buildings, and we have no doubt will build up a prosperous trade. We heartily recommend the new firm to all in need of lumber, shingles, sash, doors, mouldings and whatever belongs to their line. J. R. Duncan & Son will give more especial attention to the manufacture of buggy bodies.

Speaking of the proposed further investigation into the Dudley blocks-of-five letter, the Civil Service Chronicle, edited by Lucius B. Swift, who during the campaign expressed a belief that the Dudley letter was a forgery, now says:

"This matter cannot be allowed to rest here. Dudley wrote that letter; unimpeachable witnesses have sworn to his signature. The district attorney of Indiana illegally prevented his arrest and pronounced his letter honorable and patriotic, and still, by sufferance of President Harrison, unbearably disgraces his office by occupancy." These facts make a situation which cannot be ignored. The administration and its party will have to learn the lesson that discovered scoundrels must become discarded and discountenanced scoundrels. Notwithstanding all that has occurred, it is not by any means certain that with a prosecutor who meant to do his duty, Dudley could not yet be sent to prison.

Railroads, are on the boom everywhere. Nearly every town in northern Indiana is looking for one more new roads now. The "Three I's," the road we have been talking up for several years past to come to Auburn Junction, is now finding an outlet by going north to the Michigan Central. It goes over the West Michigan track to make this connection. We shall always regret that our people did not make a more united effort to get it. The Elgin and Joliet road, is feeling its way east by way of Michigan City. The Gold Spike is having a big boom at Warsaw and Albion. The Chicago and Toledo Air Line, is working its way through Steuben and Lagrange. There is another to go west from Ft. Wayne. Then the old Canada Southern is trying to get its eyes open once more. Finally we have the big route of all, the new Wabash extension that we want to start at Auburn and go to Chicago. Many new roads will be built but just what ones time will show. We have at least as good a chance as any.

Commissioners' Court.

The session has been a very busy one, for the matters of each and every one who comes before them, must be heard. There were the usual number of liquor licenses granted, and a great deal of work on ditches, highways and claims. The Concord Regulators, by petition of Joseph Koch and others, got permission to have Wilson Koch and James May given the authoritys to act as constables. Final reports on ditches will be made March 22. Among those established, are the Isaac Ditmar ditch, and the John Lowe.

LAST summer the Queen of Italy attained the loftiest point ever reached by a European sovereign by the ascent of the Breithorn, 13,785 feet.

A PENNSYLVANIA country editor is having a lively discussion with his correspondents about a phrase he used in writing up a wedding. He spoke of "the marriage obsequies."

A HALF-DEMENTED hermit, who is supposed to be a victim of the Johnstown flood, has been found living in a hovel in a gulch near the Carbon Hill bunkers not far from Tacoma, Wash. His name is Jasper Milton, and he declares that soft coal is all that he eats.

POMBOLANO is the name of a plant found in Mexico, the root of which is said to contain a substance analagous to but more powerful than quinine in its antiperiodic action. It has been found to cure rebellious intermittent fevers that had resisted the action of quinine.

MR. OMAR THOMAS, of North Haven, Me., has invented a mortar and a bomb for shooting ahead of a vessel and spreading oil on the waves during a gale of wind. It is a very ingenious contrivance with which life-saving crews can smooth the waters around a stranded wreck.

GREAT banks of marine sponges, including all the kinds most valued in commerce, have been discovered on the southeast coast of Sicily. They extend from fifteen to eighteen marine leagues in length, and are from twenty to thirty-one ells in depth. Greeks and Italians are hastening to the spot.

FERDINAND WARD, whose financial Napoleonism landed him at last in Sing Sing prison, looks like a physical wreck. He is bent and lifeless, and his cheeks are sunken. His face has become white, and he looks ten years older that when he entered the prison. He has become an expert type-setter.

IT doesn't take many names to go around among the Norwegians. Nearly all of them are named Ole Olson, Erick Erickson, or Nels Nelson. In Minneapolis alone there are 2,000 of the first, 1,910 of the second, and 1,215 of the last. Any one of these names exists in greater numbers than does the English John Smith.

THE last Sultan of Turkey was accustomed to shut himself up with a negro slave and his favorite wife in a secret room of his palace and there gloat over his treasures. Plugging his arms into a heap of gold-dust and letting it slip through his fingers seemed to give him more satisfaction than gazing on his pile of jewels.

THE title of doctor was invented in the twelfth century. The first person upon whom it was conferred was Irnerius, a learned professor of law, at the University of Bologna. William Gordenio was the first person upon whom the title of doctor of medicine was conferred. He received it from the College of Asti in 1329.

SINCE the establishment of the Vienna free kitchens, the number of drunkards is said to have greatly diminished. The medical profession testify to enormous improvement in the health of the lower classes. Derangements of the stomach, formerly the most frequent cases in Vienna hospitals, have decreased to one-third of the number of ten years ago.

IN Georgetown, D. C., in a humble cottage which rents for $20 a month, lives the only surviving grandchild of Thomas Jefferson. Her name is Mrs. Septimia Randolph Mickleham, widow of David S. Meikleham, long since dead. She is now in her 76th year, a cultured, amiable, venerable old lady, with two daughters and one son in her household.

A GREAT discovery of zinc ore has been made near Field, in Manitoba. A Canadian Pacific Railway tunnel is driven right through the lode, which is simply one solid body of ore. The ore has always been mistaken for red granite, but it turns out to be a very rich body of zinc. It is at least 100 feet wide. The ore assays 65 per cent. of zinc, 10 per cent. iron, $250 in gold, and $150 in silver to the ton.

LOVE plays strange pranks with some people. "Gen." George C. Slicer, aged 54, is the handsomest man in the lumber regions of Pennsylvania. He has a son who is worth several thousand dollars and is proprietor of a store. The son was engaged to be married to Anna Switzer, who is the belle of the village, "Gen." Slicer made his son a visit, was introduced to Anna, and in two weeks won her affections and eloped with her. He never earned more than $35 a month during his fifty-four years existence and has not $1 to his name. Anna will have $10,000 when she is of age and young Slicer will have a broken heart when he gets old enough to vote.

A RECENT letter from London says the Prince and Princess of Wales, although most hospitable and kind toward their guests at Sandringham, are as capricious as other mortals, and it is often difficult even for the best-bred people to estimate to a nicety the exact point at which intimacy may become distasteful. Conduct which in the evening may be deemed very charming and amusing may be resented as presumptuous the next morning.

IT may not be known to many people that Queen Victoria is an ardent student of African geography, and could pass a very creditable examination in that subject with Mr. Stanley as the interrogator. Her Majesty has carefully watched the Portuguese encroachments, and when the news of the outrage on the British flag reached London it was the Queen herself who insisted on Lord Salisbury compelling Portugal to come to a definite understanding without delay.

MEXICO has a right, of course, to subsidize a line of steamers for the importation of coolies from China. Labor does not seem to have much to do with politics in Mexico, and foreigners have no business to interfere. But barbed wire is rather costly, and the Mexican Government may as well take notice before it commits itself any further that it will be expected to keep up a good and sufficient rabbit-proof fence thirty feet high along the 1,500 miles of the American boundary.

A MISSOURI farmer with a turn for statistics has furnished a communication to his county paper on the subject of official salaries, in which he states that an official who receives $4,000 per year salary absorbs the price of 26,666 bushels of corn at 15 cents per bushel, or of 6,666 bushels of wheat at 60 cents per bushel, or 33,333 bushels of oats at 12 cents, or the price of fifty good farm horses. He also estimates that a farm hand at $13 per month would have to work the year round for a quarter of a century to earn the same amount, and adds that in 1866-'67-'68 about 5,000 to 8,000 bushels of corn would have footed the bill, or 3,000 bushels of wheat.

IN Germany a railway flagman at the crossing at a small station thought he had the grip when all the other employes of the road were getting leave of absence from the same cause, and applied to the company's doctor to be examined. The doctor could not spare the time to stop at such a small place, so he telegraphed the flagman to be standing beside the track when the train went past, with his tongue out, and he would examine him on the fly. The flagman dutifully stood with his tongue out all the time the train was slowly passing his station, and the next day the company received from passengers a dozen complaints of the impertinent conduct of one of its employes at the station.

THE names of great men live after them. Any one who mounts the staircase of a certain Dearborn street office building map see near the foot of the stairs a rusty little tin sign tacked to the wall, says the Chicago Herald. This little sign measures about 12x3 inches, and all it bears is "M. W. Fuller" in letters which were once gilt, but which are now nearly effaced by time. Near the top of the stairs is its duplicate, and on the door of a lawyer's office near the end of an upper hall appears the same name. It is the name of the man who is now the Chief Justice of the United States. His office used to be in this building, and no one has ever disturbed his signs. The sign of an ordinary man who had moved or absconded or died would have been quickly effaced, but the Chief Justice's old neighbors are evidently proud of his name, and will allow it to stand until time wipes it out.

The Compass.

The compass needle points to the north because practically the earth is a magnet, not differing essentially in its magnetic properties from a bar of magnetized steel. It has two poles of greatest intensity, and, like most large steel magnets, there are several supplemental poles of lesser intensity. Just as the pole of one bar magnet attracts the end of another, so the magnetic poles of the earth behave toward poles of the compass needle, unlike poles attracting and like poles repelling each other.

It is well to modify the statement that the needle points north and south. As a matter of fact, there are but few localities on the earth where it does point due north and south, and these are constantly changing. An irregular line drawn from the mouth of the Orinoco River, through the east coast of Hayti, Charleston, S. C., and Detroit, Mich., represents very nearly the line in which there is no variation at the present time. In all the places east of this line the north end of the needle swings slightly to the westward; in all places west of it, to the eastward. At the north of the Columbia River the variation of the compass is about twenty-two degrees east; in Alaska it is from forty to sixty degrees east; midway between New York and Liverpool it is about thirty-five degrees west.

The reason is that the compass needle points, not to the geographical but to the magnetic poles, and, these do not coincide in position. The magnetic north pole is at present on or near the southwestern shore of Boothia Peninsula, in the northern part of North America.

Its position is constantly changing, and in the last five hundred years it has moved about half the distance round the geographical pole. During the three hundred years in which observations have been carefully made at the Magnetic Observatory in Paris, the variations have changed from eleven degrees twenty minutes east of north to twenty-two degrees ten minutes west.

In the United States the rate of the change in variation differs much in different parts of the country. In Washington State it changes at the rate of about seven minutes a year; in Arizona and New Mexico it is stationary; in the New England States it is from one to three minutes per year.

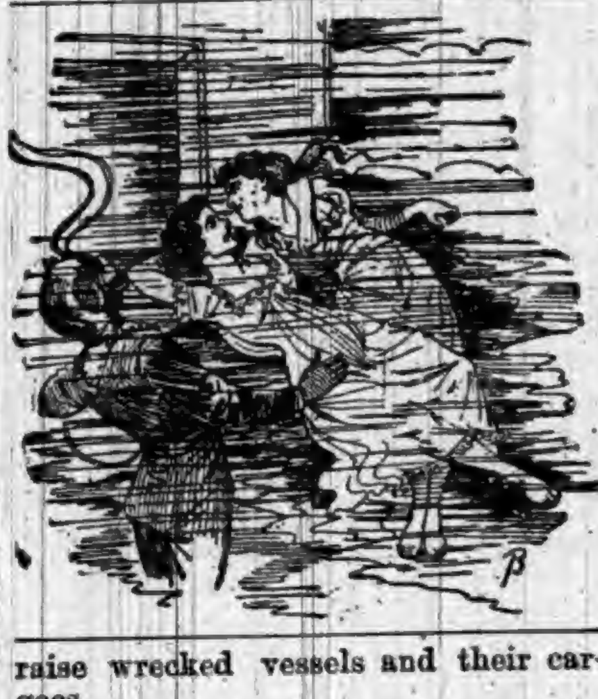
WHAT THE DIVER SEES.

WONDERS AND ATTRACTIONS OF THE VASTY DEEP.

Thrilling Adventures of Veterans in This Strange Calling—Capturing a Huge Muskallonge—Attacked by an Octopus—Terrors and Attractions of Neptune's Realm.

THE mysteries, wonders, and beauties of the vast water-world under the surface of river, lake, and ocean are as profoundly interesting as the often unfathomable depths. Mariners and travelers have their view and knowledge limited to the prospect available on the surface. The submarine universe over which they float is as a sealed volume to them. Divers and wreckers, however, in the pursuit of their calling have now and then glimpses of Neptune's realm and some of its attractions and terrors. Divers are not romancists. They deal with stern realities in a practical, matter-of-fact way. While submerged beneath the waves at their labor they are in personal peril, to greater or less degree, much of the time, and often meet with strange and frightful experiences. Many times they are on missions of confidence, working under sealed orders, with sealed lips. Often they are overcome with nervous shocks and are compelled to relinquish work from sheer exhaustion.

"Chicago has two thoroughly experienced submarine divers, says a writer in the Chicago Times. One of them is familiarly known as Tommy Johnson. He is the mechanical engineer of the Dunham Towing and Wrecking Company. He does not do much submarine work except to superintend mechanical arrangements necessary to raise wrecked vessels and their cargoes.

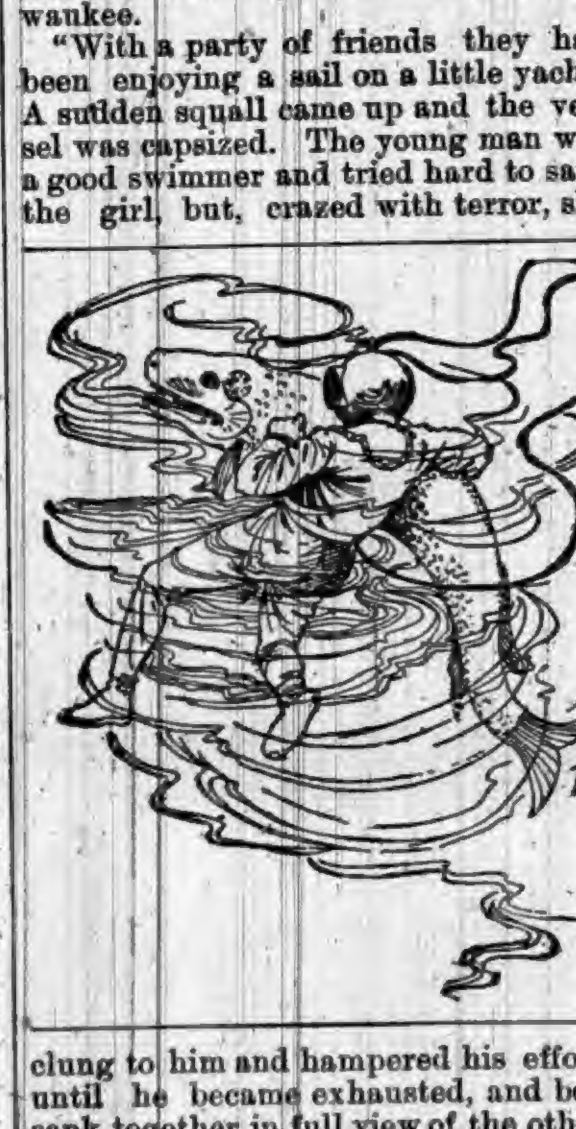


Joe Faulkner has also been actively engaged in shore work on river and lake about Chicago for over twenty years past. Divers must have plenty of pluck and grit, and both of these men possess a goodly share. Tommy Johnson on one occasion lay down on the bottom of the lake to rest awhile. While prostrate and motionless an enormous muskallonge swam up, and after deploying about reconnoitering for a long while floated directly over Tom and proceeded to nibble at the toe of his rubber boot. Watching his opportunity Tom seized the fish, and driving his steel hook deep into its side quickly threw his other arm around its body, hugging it with all his might and main. Instantaneously the startled fish lashed the water with its tail and fins, and vainly used all of its enormous power to shake off its assailant. But Tom, with desperate vim, maintained his hold and was dragged along upward with the scaly monster, until the two came in collision with the keel of the tug Owen, which broke Tom's hold. Of course the jerking of lines and other violent and unusual commotion at once alarmed Capt. Swayne and his men, who swiftly drew Tommy up. When they opened the casement of his helmet he narrated his novel experience amidst roars of laughter. The Captain shook his head incredulously until he glanced at the hook in Tom's hand, which had on it a patch of the scaly monster's body which had been ripped off during the struggle.

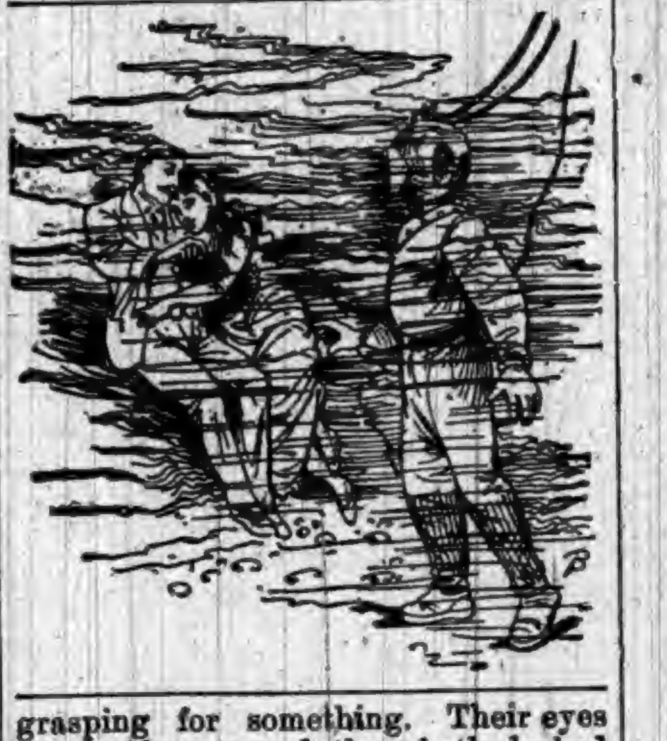
Joe Faulkner may not be guilty of hugging big fish, but he is accounted as one of the sturdiest of workers under water, and describes the lake bottom as one of the pleasantest of promenading places in calm weather. Much of it is a level plain, varied by undulations, banks, and mounds, far out, very like the stereotyped phase of a rolling prairie.

Old Ned Barron, one of the best veteran New York divers, narrates the following pathetic reminiscence: "A few seasons ago I was sent for to come on and try to recover the bodies of a young man and a young woman who had been drowned in the lake off Milwaukee.

"With a party of friends they had been enjoying a sail on a little yacht. A sudden squall came up and the vessel was capsized. The young man was a good swimmer and tried hard to save the girl, but, crazed with terror, she clung to him and hampered his efforts until he became exhausted, and both sank together in full view of the others of the party, all of whom had gained a hold on the bottom of the boat and were soon rescued. The drowned couple were to have been married that very week—in fact, they were buried on the day set for their wedding. They were well-to-do, nice people, and the whole story made me awful sad, so that I really wished I hadn't been told it all. Well, I went down and walked around the bottom of that part of the lake for almost three days. Toward sunset of the third day, I had almost given up work for the day, and I had come up around the end of a big ledge of rock, when I found them. The weather had been fine, the sun bright, and the still water was unusually clear.



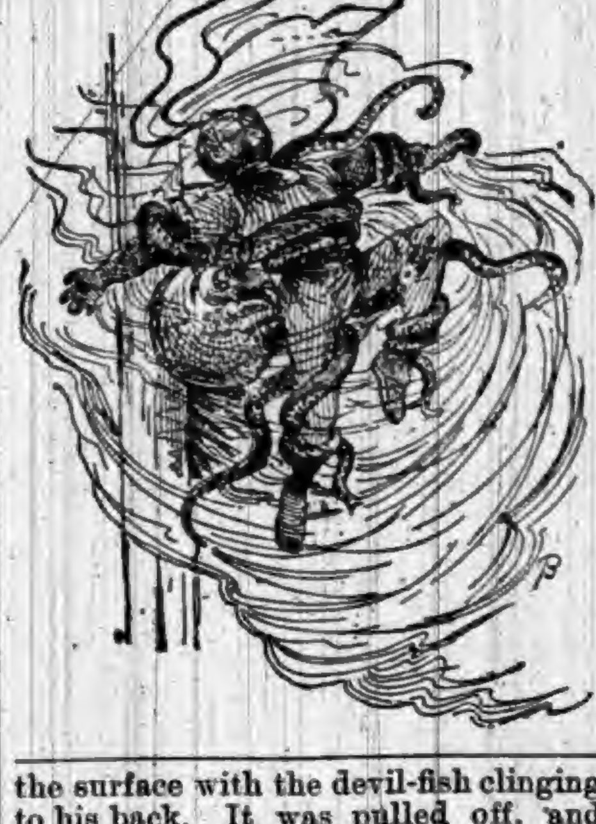
I was about forty feet below the surface; the rock was probably one hundred feet in length, sixty feet wide, and the outer edge was rough and jagged. Well, the two of them were just like sitting down together on the end of the ragged rock, on which the lady's dress had caught and held them fast. She leaned up against his chest, with one arm around his neck, and her long, beautiful light hair hung over her neck and shoulders. He was holding her tightly with one arm around her waist, while the other was stretched out as if grasping for something. Their eyes were wide open and they both looked as natural and perfect as life. Both were handsome and well dressed. His gold watch-chain gleamed in the light and the diamond of her engagement ring sparkled like fire.



"I guess I must have stood there admiring of them fully ten minutes. Why, it seemed almost as if they were alive and I felt almost as if ashamed of intruding on their love scene of 'billing and cooing.' My heart beat like a steam force-pump and it just ached, I tell you.' But I came to my senses, and walked up, disentangled her dress, put my arm around them, pulled the signal rope, and we were drawn up all together. When we got ashore with the bodies it nigh broke my tough old heart to see and hear them go on. I can't stand these things as I used to once."

Authentic intelligence recently came from Wellington, New Zealand, that Archibald McGovan, a very reliable and experienced diver, while at work in the harbor there for the British government was seized by a devil-fish, five fathoms under water, and had an almost miraculous escape from a horrible death. On diving down for the purpose of laying some blocks he was attacked by the octopus, which finally succeeded in fastening its tremendously powerful claws and tentacles onto him like hooks of steel. As soon as he realized the presence of the monster he fought with the strength of desperation, but in spite of his almost superhuman struggles he felt the long, flinty-shelled claws and huge, muscular arms of the horrid creature shut down and wind around him, closing up tighter and tighter until he was securely bound to the pile. His self-possession, however, did not desert him, and knowing that resistance was useless he relapsed into perfect passive quiet.

A little while after his resistance ceased he felt the arms of the creature relaxing their hold of the pile, and as soon as he saw that they were free he gave the signal and was drawn up to the surface with the devil-fish clinging to his back. It was pulled off, and careful measurement showed the arms to be fully nine feet in length.



Like His Grandfather.

Many persons who never heard the word heredity have a very just and vivid idea of the truth which that word was intended to convey. They know perfectly well that physical and intellectual traits are handed down from father to son, and from son to grandson.

Congressman Allen of Mississippi was lately telling stories at a Washington hotel, according to a reporter for the New York Star.

"I had just returned from making a political speech," he said, "when I was met at the door by old 'Aunty' Allison, an aged negro woman who nursed me in childhood. With her big black, good-natured face all wreathed in smiles, she said, 'Bless ma soul, Mass'r John, but how yo don' remin' me o' yo' deah ole gran'far! Yo' walk like him, talk like him, act like him, an' am jus' like him in politiks too.'

"'Why, aunty, I never knew that my grandfather had been active in politics,' said I.

"'Oh, 'deed an' 'deed he wah, Mass'r John. He wah jest like yo'self in that pa'ticlah.'

"'In what way, aunty?'

"'Oh, he wah all de time a-holdin' office.'

"'What office did grandfather hold, aunty?'

"'Jes' the same as yo'—candidate.'"

An Unexpected Rebuke.

He was a deaf mute who had learned to talk by imitation. His wife could both hear and talk, but at the theater they preferred to converse by means of the sign manual. The couple that sat behind them, thinking that neither of them could hear, took occasion to comment freely and speculate on their relations to each other ad libitum, greatly to the discomfort of the lady, who, of course, heard everything. She communicated every word to her husband until he could stand it no longer. Then, turning to the gentleman, he mildly asked, "Will you allow me to see your programme?" The chagrin and discomfort of the pair were apparent. Hastily handing over his programme, the two hustled out of the theater just as the curtain went up on the second act.—Chicago Tribune.

It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. NERVOUS DISEASES.
As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.
CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1887.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic
Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of malignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

REFORM THE TARIFF.

AND EQUALIZE THE GREAT BURDEN OF TAXATION.

A Rousing Meeting Marks an Epoch in the Movement in Indiana—The People Awakening to a True Understanding of the Imposition.

[From the Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The mass meeting of the Indiana Tariff Reform League attracted more than five hundred intelligent men and women to Masonic Hall Tuesday night. It was held to commemorate the first anniversary of the organization, and the enthusiasm that was displayed demonstrated the great interest that is being taken in the movement. Notwithstanding the vicious attacks that a partisan press has been making on the League, representatives of all parties and political affiliations were in attendance. The several prominent speakers who addressed the meeting were interrupted by outbursts of applause at frequent intervals. Mr. Edgar A. Brown, President of the League, in calling the meeting to order, made an eloquent address. At the conclusion of his speech Mr. Brown introduced the Hon. D. P. Baldwin, of Logansport, one of the most prominent Republicans in Indiana, and at one time Secretary of State. Mr. Baldwin prefaced his address with a few remarks. He said that immediately upon his arrival in the city he read an editorial in a Republican paper warning him that he was in danger of being captured by the Democratic politicians. The same papers had hinted that it was the intention of the meeting to turn the administration over to the Democracy. He said that he had been a Republican for thirty-five years, and was still one. It had usually been his habit to make extemporaneous speeches, but in view of the fact that his political death had been predicted, he thought it well to put it in black and white. He thereupon proceeded to read his address, which was as follows:

Both of the great political parties have now, for the last twenty years, resolved and re-resolved that the present tariff should be reformed, and pledged and repledged themselves at the first opportunity to remedy its inequalities and terminate its hardships. These repeated resolutions, always a feature of every platform, indicate a guilty conscience. These pledges, up to date, are unfulfilled, the goods undelivered, and meantime the burden of the tariff is still increasing. Both parties have alternately tampered and laid the blame of their shortcomings upon the other side. A useless surplus has been accumulating for years, which surplus each party vigorously denounces as demoralizing and un-American. The purpose of this tariff-reform movement to-night is to compel one or the other or both of these parties to make good their promises. This association is not, as charged by Republicans, a Democratic aid society, or a half-way house between the two parties, or a sanitarium for sore-heads, but a non-partisan organization, like the Civil-Service Reform Association, the purpose of which is purely reformatory. There are as many Democrats as Republicans in the Civil-Service Reform League of the United States, and civil-service reform reached its highest point under President Cleveland. The Executive Committee of this association authorizes me to say that no man or party will be allowed to make use of it as a stone to grind its or his political ax.

If the forthcoming report of the Ways and Means Committee of Congress shall be a real tariff reform, and a real tariff reduction, every man belonging to this organization is pledged to sustain it. We are not particular whether the relief comes from the party in or out of power, but the time has come for relief. When a man is drowning he grasps the first friendly hand, and does not wait to be introduced to or inquire into the ancestry or social standing of its proprietor.

This league is accused of being a free trade organization. Of all the living humbugs and scarecrows that of free trade is the thinnest. If a man dares to think for himself and differ in his conclusions from the high tariff people, or high tariff is worsted in an argument, free trade is the cry. Free trade is a jack-o'-lantern with big, flaming eyes and nose; and the smoke of a tallow candle coming out of its mouth to terrify ignorant and weak-kneed invertebrates. There is no more probability of free trade in the United States than of reviving the secession ordinances of 1861. So long as we have $500,000,000 per year revenue to raise with a thousand million of debt to pay in the near future; so long as we have $8,500,000,000 worth of manufacturing plants, a tariff we must and will have. The baby is not born to-day that will see free trade in the United States. But this tariff may be made at least a tariff equal and just to all interests.

If our manufacturers constituted our entire population they could make it as high as they pleased, but they must remember that there are ten farmers to one manufacturer and, remembering this, they must be satisfied to take less profits and give their neighbors a better chance. They should not forget the fact that 75 per cent. of all the exports of the United States are furnished by the farmer that is seeking justice at their hands. Furnishing only 25 per cent. of our exports and putting into their pockets hundreds of millions of dollars per year in profits that in theory the farmer is led to believe goes to the United States Government, the manufacturers who now own the Fiftieth Congress ought at least to be willing to take less profits and make the burden lighter. If they do not, then remember that Walpole had his Pitt, Disraeli his Gladstone, and that the President and administration of the United States should profit by their example. Within the last year the shrinkage of our farm lands has been something enormous. You can buy a farm in any county in Indiana outside of the gas and coal belts for $25 per acre less than twelve months ago. The farmer gets less for his wheat and meat and grain than at any time for the last forty years, and yet with wheat at 70 cents, corn at 25 cents, oats at 20 cents per bushel, beef at $2 and pork at $3 per hundred, he is compelled to pay duties upon all the necessities of life that he buys from the manufacturers, ranging from 50 to 100 per cent. and averaging 47 per cent. While the farmer is losing on every side, while his land is depreciating and ruin begins to stare him in the face, our great cities are prospering as never before. They prosper because they are great manufacturing centers. Our Mississippi Valley cities last year drew from the country to their midst 100,000 young men and women, who, seeing no future for them in agriculture, swarm thither to try a life for which they have neither aptitude nor education. Let the present state of things continue three years longer and we shall have a crash to which that of 1873 was mere child's play. Let farm lands continue to depreciate for three years more as they have within the three years past, and the great loan and insurance companies who have invested their millions in farm mortgages will go to the wall. Let half a dozen of these companies fail or become crippled by reason of being compelled to take land for their debts, and our whole commercial system will reel. When the farmer suffers it is only a question of time, and a short time at that, for the entire industrial and commercial system to become diseased. What causes the present agricultural depression? A potent fact is excessive tariff, and ill-judged laws that compel the farmer to pay high prices for what he buys and depresses the market, and the price for what he produces.

High tariff advocates tell us with great unction that home markets caused by high duties is the farmer's true salvation. When asked to explain, they tell us that those farmers are the most prosperous that are nearest to the factories. They tell us that the reason for this is the demand by the factories for the farmer's meat, and grain and truck, and the saving of transportation and middlemen. Let us put this doctrine to the proof. New England is the paradise of protection. For the last seventy-five years the Yankees have had the lion's share of the benefits of our high tariff laws. How about the New England farm and farmer of 1890? He is never out of sight of the factory. He essays the highest possible benefits of home markets, for the factory is just outside of his gate-post. How about land in New England? You can go anywhere and buy land for less than the fences cost. The traditional puritan village, too, has been swept away by the cheap labor of high tariff in the land of the pilgrims. As much rotten whisky is consumed in Massachusetts by the imported cheap factory hands of high tariff as in any benighted Democratic State north or south of the Ohio River.

High tariff apologists say that the ruin of the New England farm and tillage comes from the Western competition. How does that help the home market argument? How does that help the high-tariff advocate, who points with pride to our internal trade and the fact that we have free trade between every State in the Union? Besides, you will find in Kansas about as bad a state of things for the farmer as in New England. In Kansas to-day corn can be bought by the million bushels at 10 cents; hay at $2 per ton; cattle and hogs at $2 and $3 per hundred. (If there is anything that the Kansas farmer wants, and wants bad, and wants right off, it is to sell out.) The truth about home markets is that the boot is on the other leg. Home markets are an injurious and very successful attempt to create a market for the goods of one class at the expense of another class. It is a fine thing for the manufacturers to have the United States Government force people to take their wares at a heavy advance because of that much duty on foreign goods. But how about the poor farmer who is forced to take the goods and do the paying, and who, when he brings his products to market, must sell at a price fixed by the markets of the world? We are glibly and unctuously told that the cause of the present depression in farming is over-production. That is the same thing as saying the farmer is suffering for want of markets. What is over production but lack of markets. The American farmer produced in 1889 food sufficient for 100,000,000 mouths, but there are only 65,000,000 to consume it. What has caused this scarcity of mouths? Why do not foreign people take our farm products? What has shut up the farmer's market that he used to enjoy? There is but one answer: High tariff has provoked retaliatory tariffs all over the world. The American farmer and manufacturer should at least be the granary and workshop of the new world. How much of our manufactured goods go to Central or South America or Mexico?

South America last year imported $40,000,000 of goods—$36,000,000 from Europe and $4,000,000 from the United States. South America, Mexico, and Central America, with their 50,000,000 people, are within less than a week's journey from the United States. Yet Peru, Chili, and the other Pacific states go around Cape Horn 7,000 miles away and supply their needs in Europe. Why? Because we have angered them as well as all the nations of Europe with our excessive high-tariff duties. No nation will trade with another where it is all sell and no buy. We are told that the English farmer is in the same boat. Assuming that the distress of the English farmer is any satisfaction for the distress of his American neighbor, there is a most excellent reason to account for it. In England agriculture is purposely made a subordinate industry. All the land in Great Britain combined is not equal to that of Indiana and Illinois. This land is mainly owned by lords and rich men. The British Isles contain 35,000,000 people. Not being able to feed her people through her lack of land, which is mainly owned by her rich, England wisely makes agriculture a subordinate interest, and, by shrewd legislation, compels the world to feed her by the simple device of making herself the world's work-shop. If you want to be fair in this matter, why not compare the England of to-day, paupers and all, with the England of 1840? If you want to be fair, instead of comparing American wages with the English wages, why don't you compare American wages with the wages of France, Germany or Italy, or some other high tariff country? If you will compare the high tariff wages of Germany, France, or Italy with the wages of the United States you will not only find that the wages of these countries are lower than those of England, but that very high tariff is found hand in hand with starvation wages. What can be done for the farmer? Two things: we can make this meat and grain by reducing the cost of that which he is compelled to buy of double value to him. We have got to the time when we must double the purchasing power of his produce or the farmer is ruined.

How is this to be done? By reducing the 75 per cent. duties on manufactured articles that the farmer is compelled to purchase; this reduction must be made carefully, gradually, conservatively, and slowly.

We can open up by judicious legislation the markets of our neighbors, commencing with those of South America and Mexico, and finally reaching those of the old world.

No man knows the limitations of high tariff better than James G. Blaine. Mr. Blaine knows enough to know that the production of goods is only half the battle; that the remainder of the battle is to find a market to sell the goods. Mr. Blaine is making a powerful and praiseworthy effort to improve our markets by reciprocity treaties; we welcome him in the attempt. We second the motion. But reciprocity is only another name for lower tariff duties and reciprocity treaties give the whole argument for high tariff away. Overproduction means lack of markets; reciprocity means endeavor to supply that market. It appears to be the plan of Mr. McKinley and the Ways and Means Committee to retain high tariff by cutting off the tobacco and alcohol tax and cajoling the farmers into supporting the manufacturers' high duties by establishing beet sugar, flax, orange and other citrous fruit industries through the medium of similar high tariffs and bounties. In all fairness we are bound to wait until the report is made. I doubt whether this will bring relief. If it will we will welcome it; we are so earnest about this matter that we do not care which party the relief comes from, for we desire to treat the whole subject from an economical and not from any party or partisan standpoint.

But I have no right to occupy more time. Distinguished speakers are here from abroad—speakers that we seldom have an opportunity to hear, and I must give way to them. Let it be understood that the farmers of Indiana, who produce $650,000,000 worth of produce per year, have no enmity against the manufacturers of Indiana producing $150,000,000 of goods per year. The farmers of our State outnumber the manufacturers twenty to one; still, for all that, they propose to treat them with fairness. They simply say to them, "Divide; take less profits; give your neighbor a chance."

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with faith in the right as God gives us to see the right, without partisanship, knowing neither Democratic or Republican party, let us earnestly and candidly open up the discussion and solution of this great question. We have a tariff reform league in every one of ninety-two counties of Indiana, and each of these leagues is a full debating school, to which we invite all high-tariff men to come and clean out the free-traders and convert the low-tariff men from the error of their ways. You must read both sides, or you are left in the darkness of prejudice. Truth suffers nothing from discussion. Let the school house open, let the debate begin. If the farmers are prosperous, if the price of their produce is sufficient, let them understand it. If these low prices are not caused by high tariff, tell us what caused them. If the price of our lands and farm products will be bettered by continuing in the old high-tariff rates, let that be demonstrated. If this Government be of protection, by protection, and for protection, instead of a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, let us understand that; we want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about this matter.

The truth hurts no man. We need only fear suppression through the needs and intolerance and years of excessive partisanship.

Mr. Baldwin took his seat amid tremendous cheering.

The meeting, before adjournment, prepared a very comprehensive and well-considered programme for the work of the next twelve months. Among the principal features of this work will be the systematic collection of statistical and other information showing the practical workings of the tariff system in its relations to the various industries and interests of the people of Indiana; also the distribution of literature and the promotion of popular investigation and discussion of the tariff question.

LETTER FROM GROVER CLEVELAND.

The Secretary read the following communication from ex-President Cleveland. It was received with much enthusiasm:

Edgar A. Brown, President, etc.:

MY DEAR SIR—Though my letters to Democratic and tariff reform assemblages have lately been very frequent, I cannot deny your request to say a word of encouragement to the tariff reformers who will meet at the first annual convention of the Indiana Tariff Reform League on the 4th of March.

I am very much pleased with the plan upon which your league seems to be organized. It conveys a suggestion of practical work in the field of information and enlightment. This, if persistently carried out, cannot fail of success. Of course we do not approach the American people assuming that they are ignorant or unpatriotic. But we know that they are a busy people, and apt to neglect the study of public questions. In the engrossment of their daily vocations, they are too ready to rely upon the judgment and avowed principles of the party with which they have affiliated as guides to the political actions. In this way they have become slow to examine for themselves the questions of tariff reform. If, in the light of reasonable and simple arguments, and of such object lessons as are being constantly placed before them, our people can be induced to investigate the subject, there need be no fear as to their conclusion.

The Democratic party, as the party of the people, opposed to selfish schemes which ignore the public good, and pledged to the interests of all their countrymen, instead of the furtherance of the interests of the few who seek to pervert governmental powers for their enrichment, was never nearer to its fundamental principles than it was in its contests for tariff reform.

It certainly adds to the satisfaction with which we labor in this cause, to be assured that in our efforts we not only serve our party, but all the people of the land. Yours very truly.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Gov. Merriam, of Minnesota, Denounces the Tariff.

[St. Paul special.]

The 550 delegates to the State Farmers' Alliance packed the House of Representatives at the Capitol on Wednesday. Ignatius Donnelly opened the speech-making with a roasting for the railroads. His opinion of the treatment of Minnesota farmers by the big millers and railroad magnates was couched in unique language. "I believe," said Mr. Donnelly, "that there is $10,000,000 annually stolen from this State, and in the last twenty-five years there has been enough money stolen from Minnesota farmers to pave with gold the floor of Hades."

The remarks of Gov. Merriam were the subject of warm commendation. On the tariff the Governor said: "The expenses of administration have to be borne, but in my judgment the necessary revenue for the purpose should fall upon shoulders able to bear it. Tax the silks, the satins, the diamonds, the liquor and tobacco, and remove the tax from those necessary articles most widely diffused in their uses. The tax levied upon articles of food of various kinds, as well as upon many staples of common requirement, is a burden upon every farmer of the State, and the laws governing these levies should be changed or modified at the earliest practicable moment. The tariff upon the one item of sugar, yielding a revenue of over $60,000,000—nearly $1 for every person in this country, or almost $1,500,000 for our own State—could well be dispensed with. It is exceedingly difficult to prove to the farmer that it is to his interest to remove the tax from luxuries, like liquor and tobacco, and retain it upon sugar, clothing, hemp, from which binding twine is made, and the like, articles which he has to have."

ILLINOIS DEMOCRACY.

The State Convention Called to Meet on June 4—A Popular Vote for United States Senator.

(Chicago special.)

The Illinois Democratic State Committee met at the Palmer House, Chicago, Thursday, March 6. All but three of the members were present. Francis Hoffmann, Jr., of Chicago, was the orator of the occasion, and he made an extended speech, prophesying Democratic success at the next election. Mr. Hoffmann said it seemed to be the wish of the party that the method of electing a United States Senator be brought as close to the people as possible. It had been suggested that the State convention nominate a candidate for Senator. "And I think," he said in conclusion, "that I voice the wishes and desires of the Democrats of Illinois when I say that the man who should be chosen to hold aloft the party banner in the fight is Governor John M. Palmer."

The mention of Gov. Palmer's name was greeted with applause, and then Chairman Campbell said he had written to Gen. Palmer on the subject of nominating a candidate for Senator, asking his advice on that question as well as several others of party policy. In response Gov. Palmer had written as follows:

I wish it clearly understood that I am in no sense a candidate for the Senate. All I have ever said is that I think the State Convention ought to adopt, as the permanent rule of party action, the nomination of a candidate for the Senate, and that, if my view of party policy in that respect is adopted, I would accept the nomination and make a canvass, but I would greatly prefer that some other person be nominated.

The motive that leads to this suggestion is that I do not desire to be a member of the Senate, and will only consent to be a candidate before the people in order to vindicate the principle of electing a Senator by popular vote as nearly as possible. I wish to be understood as not urging my views upon the party. On the contrary, if there is any considerable opposition to the plan I suggest, I would, for the sake of harmony, advise that it be abandoned. We will carry the Legislature if we make a united, energetic canvass. Let nothing be done that will divide us or dampen the enthusiasm of the party.

It was decided to hold the convention June 4 at Springfield, and then the Senatorial question came up. A resolution was passed without debate or dissent calling on the various county conventions which will elect delegates to the State Convention to decide at the time of their meeting whether or no they are in favor of the State Convention nominating a candidate for United States Senator. This decision in the various county conventions will be in the nature of instructions to the delegates therein chosen, so that when a vote is taken on the matter at Springfield, there will be no doubt that the action of that convention will represent the wishes of the Democracy of Illinois in the matter.

One of These Days.

One of these days a defeated Republican party will be asking itself whether it paid to steal Montana; whether it was good policy to overthrow the parliamentary practice of English-speaking people for a thousand years for the purpose of getting a little tighter grip upon things in the Fifty-first Congress; whether it availed anything to set up Tom Reed as a dictator among a free people who are patient under impertinent aggravation but who very well know the time and the place to rebuke upstarts and violent demagogues; whether there was anything lasting in the advantage gained by unseating a score or more of honestly elected Democratic Congressmen; whether the amount of "fat" to be fried from the protected manufacturers every second year really pays for the moral and intellectual degradation of proclaiming in and out of season that a tariff of 47 per cent., levied chiefly upon the necessaries of life, and for the sole benefit of capital and monopoly, is a good thing for the people; whether there is real profit in the encouragement of fellows like Foraker, who must sooner or later expose themselves as this wretch has done, and whether the crimes of a Dudley or a Quay can be hidden by the ostentatious piety of a man like Wanamaker.

One of these days all these things will come home to the Republicans of this country. They are electioneering for destruction.—Chicago Herald.

No Wonder Farmers Are Dissatisfied.

The Kansas farmer is certainly in a bad way. The Atchison Globe says:

"A particularly industrious farmer can 'tend' sixty acres of corn—that is, plow the ground, plant the seed, cultivate the growing crop and harvest it. The average yield of corn is thirty bushels to the acre—1,800 bushels. Of this he will feed 500 bushels to his stock, leaving 1,300 bushels as the result of a year's work. A letter received from an Atchison traveling man says that in Edwards County day before yesterday white corn sold at 11 cents a bushel and yellow corn for 10 cents. You can figure for yourself how much a farmer can make raising corn. Another thing should be thought of. The average farmer lives a considerable distance from market. In order to get 10 and 11 cents a bushel for his corn he must haul it to the market. If he starts early in the morning he can haul twenty-seven bushels to town in a day, with the assistance of a wagon and two horses. In hauling his crop to market he just about earns wages. No wonder the farmers are dissatisfied. We don't blame them."

Yet the Kansas farmers have always been loyal to the party which gives them nothing but high taxes and the promise of a home market.

Nothing but Spoils and Plunder.

Is there a man in the United States who is able to point to a solitary circumstance connected with the Harrison administration which has not one way or another had something to do either with plundering the people by means of tariffs, subsidies or pensions, or with the placing of some patriot in a fat office? If this administration has done anything else since it came into power, nearly a year ago, what is it? If Benjamin Harrison has had anything to say or to do relative to anything else than official spoils and monopolistic plunder, what has it been?

These questions are asked in all seriousness. The people of the United States are so accustomed to the hypocritical Republican pretense of superiority that much of that party's disgraceful conduct passes unnoticed. Here is a record, however, which is entirely characteristic and which should not be forgotten.—Chicago Herald.

A Protected Idiot.

A Nebraska farmer recently loaded up his three teams, one with corn, one with oats, and one with potatoes. Behind one team he hitched a fat steer, and behind another a fat cow. With this outfit he started to his "home market," where he sold the products of his farm. The fat steer bought him a suit of ordinary clothing; the fat cow bought him a common overcoat; the load of potatoes bought him a hat and a pair of gloves; the load of oats bought him a pair of boots and a pair of socks; and the load of corn bought him a suit of underclothing. He went home whooping for "Harrison, Protection, and Home Market," and wearing upon his person the products of a fat steer, a fat cow, a load of corn, a load of oats, and a load of potatoes!—Meade County Times, South Dakota.

Always on Time.

Washington had many admirable traits worthy of imitation, and one of them was rigid punctuality. This was well illustrated by an incident during his visit to Boston, one hundred years ago. Having appointed eight o'clock in the morning as the hour at which he should set out for Salem, he mounted his horse just as the Old South clock was striking that hour. The company of cavalry which was to escort him did not arrive till after his departure, and did not overtake him till he had reached Charles River bridge.

A Noble Revenge.

DeQuincey gives a beautiful anecdote, illustrative of the nobility of a generous heart.

An officer in the army one day struck a common soldier. He was young and hot-tempered; and he forgot the respect due to himself, and the duty he owed his neighbor.

The soldier whom he struck was a young man too, and noted for his courage; he felt the insult deeply. Military discipline forbade that he should return the blow: he could only use words. Perhaps he was hot-tempered, also, for he said to the officer:

"I will make you repent it!"

So they were ill friends.

One day, in the heat of a furious engagement, the young soldier saw an officer who was wounded and separated from his company gallantly striving to force his way through the enemies who surrounded him. He recognized his insulter, and without a second thought rushed to his assistance. Supporting the wounded man with his arm, together they fought their way through to their own lines.

Trembling with emotion, the officer grasped the hand of the soldier and stammered out his gratitude.

"Noble man! What a return for an insult so wontonly given!"

The young man pressed his hand in turn, and with a smile said gently:

"I told you I would make you repent it."

From that time they were as brothers.

Saw His Way Clear.

"Why, Anderson," said a friend, "you seem to be enthusiastic to-day. Anything happened?"

"My dear boy," Anderson replied, affectionately placing his hand on his friend's shoulder, "I am now on my way to make some money. I have been so hard pressed lately that life has seemed a complete failure, but I am all right now."

"Tell me of your good fortune. What has occurred?"

"You have doubtless heard of Adolph Sutro, who for years has worked and searched to complete his first folio edition of Shakspeare."

"Yes."

"Well, all he lacks now is an old steel engraving, copied from an early portrait, and which is now known as the Droeschut engraving. He is, of course, willing to pay handsomely for this picture."

"What, and you have secured it?"

"No, not yet. But I have started out to look for it and have been to three second-hand book-shops already this morning. Ah, my dear boy, how we work when we have an incentive!"—Arkansaw Traveler.

"Early last spring I was very much run down, had nervous headache, felt miserable and all that. I was very much benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla and recommend it to my friends." MRS. J. M. TAYLOR, 1119 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured me of salt rheum, which I have had for years. I do think it is a splendid medicine. I am 40 years of age and my skin is just as smooth and fair as a piece of glass. I have six children, and when anything is the trouble with them the first thing I go for is Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. LILLA CLARK, South Norwalk, Conn.

Hood's Sarsaprilla is prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Juniper Berries, and other well known vegetable remedies, in such a peculiar manner as to derive the full medicinal value of each. It will cure, when in the power of medicine, scrofula, salt rheum, sores, boils, pimples, all humors, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, indigestion, general debility, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney and liver complaints. It overcomes that extreme tired feeling caused by change of climate, season, or life, and imparts life and strength to the whole system.

Blood Poison

"For years at irregular intervals in all seasons, I suffered the intolerable burning and itching of blood poisoning by ivy. It would break out on my legs, in my throat and eyes. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, as a blood purifier, with no thought of it as a special remedy for ivy poisoning, but it has effected a permanent and thorough cure." CALVIN T. SHUTE, Wentworth, N. H.

"I had boils all over my neck and back, troubling me so much that I could not turn my head around nor stoop over. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me in two weeks. I think it is the best blood purifier." DANIEL READ, Kansas City, Mo.

ENORMOUS SHIPMENTS.

Frequent shipments of car-load lots of Dr. Pierce's Medicines, to all the principal commercial centers of this country, are necessary to supply the unprecedented demand for these world-famed remedies. No other medicines ever attained anything like the popularity which they enjoy. No other medicines possess such superior and positive curative properties as to warrant their manufacturers in selling them, as the proprietors of Dr. Pierce's Medicines are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee of benefit or cure in every case, on fair trial, or money refunded.

There are scores of sarsaparillas and other blood medicines advertised, but the "Golden Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce is the only one ever backed up by a positive guarantee from a well-known and thoroughly responsible house. The conditions are, that, given a fair trial, it will do all that is claimed for it, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. A Certificate of Guarantee wraps every bottle.

To attempt the sale of an inferior, or even a fairly good, blood-purifier under such trying conditions as these, would mean bankruptcy to its proprietors.

Only a medicine possessed of extraordinary merit could sustain itself under such a business policy. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is such a medicine, and has proven its ability to sustain its proprietors, even though sold on such extraordinary terms.

As a remedy for all Blood, Skin and Scalp Diseases, it has won for itself world-wide fame. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Salt-rheum, Eczema, Tetter, Pimples, Blotches, Eruptions, old Scrofulous Sores, Ulcers, and kindred ailments.

As a remedy for the peculiar weaknesses, distressing irregularities, and painful derangements incident to women, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription stands alone as the only remedy guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it is promptly refunded.

It is but natural that the people should bestow their patronage upon those medicines, whose makers are sold on such fair and liberal terms. They are manufactured by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., a house whose financial standing and reputation for fair dealing is well-known to every publisher, as well as to every druggist, throughout the civilized world.

Veterinary Surgeon.

Dr. J. Adams, lately from Illinois, has taken up his residence in Auburn and will hereafter practice his profession among our people wherever his services are needed in the treatment of horses and cattle. He has had thirty years successful practice and comes well recommended. He has purchased the brick dwelling on North Main street, of S. J. Brandon, where he will be found or at the drug store of Robbins & McCord. tf

Who Must Register.

The new election law requires registration of voters at the County Clerk's office three months before election, in instances, as follows:

1. If, having been a resident of Indiana, he has absented himself from the state six months, or more.

2. If, having been a resident of Indiana, he has voted in another state.

3. If having been a resident of Indiana, he has gone into another state or sovereignty with the intention of voting there.

4. If he has not been a bonafide resident of the county, in which he resides, for at least six months before election.

The first three specifications are indefinite as to time, but presumably mean that the voter must register if he has so absented himself or voted since he last exercised the right of suffrage in Indiana. The registration should be made after the county commissioners have established the precincts.

The certificate of registration must be taken to the polls, as the voter cannot vote unless he produces it on demand of a challenger. This registration need not be made if, prior to leaving the state, the voter files with the County Clerk a notice of his intention to hold residence in Indiana.

The Heart of the Alleghanies.

Writing of a recent trip across the mountains of West Virginia, a gifted journalist says: "Twilight on the grade is grand. The mountain summits look like the bushy tops of trees. The sun has disappeared in a ball of fire at his 'jumping-off place," but the vivid lighting of the western sky by the still upturned illumining face below the horizon is in marked contrast to the gathering shades behind the rushing train. From shelf to shelf, from crag to crag, from brink to brink, we almost fly. Like a flashing transformation, rendering almost past belief the fact that the scene is in the midst of the Alleghanies, comes a bit of landscape gardening with all the beauties of walks and hedges and bright hued flowers, a mountain brooklet tumbling through the centre—Buckhorn Wall, the most noted and most admired view that can be had from any known point in the Alleghany range. To enable the road to span the tremendous gorges, a massive wall of cut stone was erected for a distance of several hundred feet above the foundation rock. As the river makes an abrupt turn at right angles, a deep canyon is opened up for miles. Range after range of mountains disappear behind each other. The shadowy outlines of single peaks steal out through the haze." This beautiful scene is on the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. near Grafton, W. Va. The entire line from the Potomac to the Ohio is a majestic panorama of the grandest views on the continent and all endowed with historic interest.

Catarrh

IS a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

Survival of the Fittest.

For some time past the question of purity in baking powders has formed quite a feature of newspaper discussions, and eminent doctors of philosophy have given opinions as to the ingredients which compose many of the articles sold under that name. The investigations have narrowed down to the limit which awards the Royal Baking Powder the palm of purity, and the most distinguished scientists have testified not only that no extraneous or deleterious matter enters into its composition, but that its use is positively healthful, making, as it does, lighter, sweeter and more digestible food. The Royal Baking Powder Company have achieved a world-wide reputation for the success which has marked their preparation of cream of tartar for baking purposes. It is indisputably shown that they have eliminated all elements of tartrate of lime, alum or other impurities, and present to the public a healthful and chemically pure article. The U. S. Government chemists and others widely known have verified its superiority over other manufactuers, and testified, through practical experience, to its excellence. It is well for families to observe the fact that it costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other, but it is, as shown by chemical analysts, the only "absolutely pure" baking powder made.

A Yankee genius has invented and patented a machine for buttering bread. The machine cuts and butters 750 loaves of bread in an hour.

A Scrap of Paper Saves Her Life.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by physicans that she was incurable and could live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read of Dr. Kings New Discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. For fuller particulars send stamp to W. H. Cole, Druggist, Fort Smith. Trial bottles of this wonderful Discovery Free at Robbins & McCord's, Druggists.

Eupepsy.

This is what you ought to have, in fact, you must have it, to fully enjoy life. Thousands are searching for it daily, and mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in the hope that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be had by all. We guarantee that Electric Bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you Good Digestion and oust the demon Dyspepsia, and install Eupepsy. We recomend Electric Bitters for Dyspepsia and all diseases of Liver, Stomach and Kidneys. Sold at 50c. and $1.00 per bottle by Robbins and McCord, Druggists.

Literary Note.

It will be of interest to thousands of war veterans, as well as well as the Southern people generally, to know that W. L. Fagan, of Alabama, who was an officer in the Confederate Army, has compiled, and M. T. Richardson & Co., 84 Reade St., New York City, will soon publish the most complete collection of southern songs, camp fire, patriotic and sentimental, ever gathered in one volume. The title of the book will be "Southern War Songs," and it will be elaborately illustrated and finely bound. The intention is to make a volume which can be used for Birthday and Holiday Gifts.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to return our sincere thanks to the many friends and neighbors, who so kindly assisted us during the death and burial of our husband and father. Also to the choir for their excellent music, and the pall bearers for their services on the day of funeral.

Communion Wine.

Physicians who have used Speer's Port Grape Wine, of New Jersey, and have applied to it the strictest test, pronounce it strictly pure and rich body and recommend it to the aged and infirm, and for general use where wine is desirable, as the most reliable of wines to be had. Mr. Speer also preserves the Grape Juice fresh and sweet just as it runs from the press, not by the use of spirits, but by electricity extracting the fermenting principles from the ripe grapes when mashed; it is called Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice. C. F. Higgins Concert Co.

Joseph Jefferson on "Dundreary."

During the season of 1858-59 Miss Keene produced Tom Taylor's play of "Our American Cousin," and as its success was remarkable and some noteworthy occurrence took place in connection with it, a record of its career will perhaps be interesting. The reading took place in the greenroom, at which the ladies and gentlemen of the company were assembled, and many furtive glances were cast at Mr. Couldock and myself as the strength of Abel Murcott and Asa Trenchard were revealed. Poor Sothern sat in the corner, looking quite disconsolate, fearing that there was nothing in the play that would suit him; and as the dismal lines of Dundreary were read he glanced over at me with a forlorn expression, as much as to say, "I am cast for that dreadful part," little dreaming that that the character of the imbecile lord would turn out to be the stepping-stone of his fortune. The success of the play proved the turning-point in the career of three persons—Laura Keene, Sothern, and myself.

As I have before said, Sothern was much dejected at being compelled to play the part. He said he could do nothing with it, and certainly for the first two weeks it was a dull effort, and produced but little effect. So in despair he began to introduce extravagant business into his character, skipping about the stage, stammering and sneezing, and, in short, doing all he could to attract and distract the attention of the audience. To the surprise of everyone, himself included, these antics, intended by him to injure the character, were received by the audience with delight. He was a shrewd man as well as an effective actor and he saw at a glance that accident had revealed to him a golden opportunity. He took advantage of it, and with cautious steps increased his speed, feeling the ground well under him as he proceeded. Before the first month was over he stood side by side with any other character in the play; and at the end of the run, he was, in my opinion, considerably in advance of us all. And his success in London, in the same character, fully attests, whatever may be said to the contrary, that as an extravagant, eccentric comedian in the modern range of comedy he was quite without a rival. His performance of Sam which I saw at the Haymarket Theater, in London, was a still finer piece of acting than his Dundreary. It was equally strong, and had the advantage of the other in not being overdrawn or exvravagant.—The March Century.

Don't Be Humbugged.

The way the other fellow does.

You will find that the newspapers are full of great slaughter advertisements, giving you 1-3 or 1-2 off, trying to make you believe that they are going to give something for nothing. No house can afford to offer such discounts and do it in the square, straight forward honorable way. You know as well as we do, that these fellows play a confidence game. Either they rob people terribly most of the season or they fib it unmercifully at this stage, or both. As a rule it is both. What reliance can you place on such dealers? What can you expect from the deceptive goods they handle? Take a detective with you when you go to such places, the odds are against you every time.

We hope you don't place stock in this moss grown theory. The annals of trade prove that there is only one sure foundation for permanent success, and that is actual merit in merchandise. Good clothing, substantial fabric, thorough workmanship, style and fit, are the advertisements which make TRADE and keep IT.

Our way: Goods marked in plain figures and one price to all. Where a child can buy as cheap as a man that weighs a ton. Every garment guaranteed to you as represented, or money refunded.

The Triumph of Steel in Harvester Building.

When in 1886 the harvesting machine made practically of steel instead of wood, was introduced it was denounced by all harvester manufacturers, except the manufacturers introducing it—William Deering & Co.—because, as they said, it was not as durable as the wooden machines, but in reality their denunciation was caused by the fact that they feared that it would overturn their old methods of manufacture and give the farmers machines so durable in structure as to prevent their frequent reappearance to purchase another machine. Wm. Deering & Co., however, persisted in giving the farmers the benefit of their inventive ability, and in four harvest seasons they have forced every other manufacturer worth calling such to build an imitation steel machine. For 1890 the farming public will see their greatest achievement—the New Junior Steel Binder.

Our Druggists.

F. E. Davenport says they are selling more of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup than any other preparation, for coughs, colds, etc., it being cheaper, more pleasant to take and guarranteed to cure. The price is only 25cts. making it the cheapest reliable cough medicine in the market. Sold by F. E. Davenport. 13

Frankfort News has discovered a curiosity near Moran. The farmers have found a hole nine feet deep and 18 inches in diameter in the creek from which gas bubbles at intervals of five minutes.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

EARLY CONVENTIONS.

I see that in some parts of the county there is some sentiment in favor of holding an early county convention. So, last week, having to be in Auburn and Garrett, I made some inquiry as to the feeling. After returning home and looking over what I had heard, I came to the conclusion that all this talk for an early convention is only a political dodge to favor some candidate or his friends. I asked each one I met, "Why do you want it so early? What reason have you for departing from the old custom, and now want the convention in May?" The answer is generally that "we think our candidate is now all right. That there are dangers in delaying and allowing others to be announced and come out against our man." But I told them that our county was a farming county, and that May is the very busiest month in the year. One man said that made no difference with him, that the most of the democrats in his township were mechanics and townspeople, and could turn out in May as well as any other time. Now what does all this mean? It seems to me that these men who want an early convention want to get an advantage. We have always had our convention from June 20 to August 1, and never yet had any trouble because of the time when it was held. Our state campaign never opens till Sept. 1. Now why have the county candidates in the field three months before that time?

One young fellow said the new election law took effect June 1, and he thought that might be against his plan of working. I have heard that the new law was against buying, hiring and treating delegates and men to work for candidates. If that is so, then it seems that there is still more reason for holding the convention later. The farmers who are not wanting office, and the men who are working for the party for the party's sake and not for improper motives, favor the usual time for the convention.

FARMER.

Fort Wayne Real Estate.

Fort Wayne is experiencing a perfectly healthy boom. Real estate investments are proving extremely profitable. A thousand houses were erected last year, and yet a vacant one can hardly be found in the entire city. The leading citizens have organized a Land Improvement Co., and purchased the five hundred acres of land, which, lying just across the Maumee River, has been fairly sticking its nose into the heart of the city, for a hundred years. Heretofore no one has been able to induce the Taber heirs to part with the land. This magnificent addition to the city has been laid out in building lots, parks, boulevards, and lakes, and is sure to at once become the handsomest residence portion of the city. At the start, lots will be sold at half their real value. You can double your money on them within a year. Prices will vary for a 45x150 foot lot from $450 to $650, 10 per cent. off for all cash. If preferred, only a payment down of $50 upon a lot, will be required. There must be a good many people in Auburn who will be able to share in the advance upon this property. For information apply to Land Improvement Co, Fort Wayne, Ind. An active real estate dealer of this city is wanted by the company to take the Auburn agency for the sale of these lots. They will be ready for sale by March 20th.

He Gets Mixed.

THE Press in its usual ignorance says "the tariff cuts no figure" in the railroad iron business of this country. Then why have a duty of $17 a ton if it "cuts no figure" in the business? There are several republican papers about here, that have that patent editorial "Protection is a necessity," and yet here we have a high tax organ, telling us, that a tariff of $17 a ton on iron "cuts no figure." It would seem to require these brethren to get together and agree on something.

* * *

As to the amount of duty collected on railroad iron last year, we found it in a republican paper, and no doubt it was correct in the main. The Press does not deny that some steel rails are brought here each year. And being brought here, as we before said, $17 must be paid on each ton. Does it not add to the cost? And is not the total cost collected off the man who buys that iron? Will the Press answer and not dodge?

* * *

We have no doubt but Canada did purchase rails of us last year. We have never doubted our ability to produce rails as cheap at least as they can in England. That is why we fight a protective duty on iron. The protection is not needed. Our manufacturers would get rich faster than other people, if there were no tax. But the duty enables them to keep up their prices higher than they would otherwise. And all this extra high price which the manufacturers are not entitled to, comes out of the common people at last. The Press can't deny. It is easier to dodge.

* * *

After saying "We could not have exported rails to Canada had not our manufacturers been protected," the Press says in the very next sentence "The tariff cuts no figure with them." Now which is right? One sentence asserts and the next flatly denies. The right hand don't seem to know what the left hand does. Truly the editor of the Press is getting rattled.

DR. J. S. PEMBERTON, OF ATLANTA, GA.

Is a celebrated dealer in Proprietary medicines of his own manufacture. He said: "I had a most severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which brought me down upon my bed and entirely incapacitated me for business. The disease appeared to have a lien on my system, and all I could do did not dislodge it. Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure was recommended to me, and I took it. In a day after beginning its use I began to improve, and in five or six days I was entirely free from pain and able to resume my business. I told Mr. Hunnicutt at that time, that his cure is the best medicine the world has ever offered for rheumatism." The Doctor refused $2500 to say as much for another remedy. This he said free and voluntary.

Iowa's Democratic Governor.

Governor Boies, the new executive of Iowa is evidently a Jeffersonian democrat. He takes very plain grounds as to drunkenness and the tariff, as well as on matters merely of interest in his state. Some of his thoughts are so good, that we quote a part.

AS TO DRUNKENNESS.

He says: "Drunkenness should be punished as a crime, and the habitual drunkard should be taken in charge by the state, tried by a commission, and if found guilty, sent to an asylum and kept there until cured. He has no more right to be at large than the lunatic, for he is such when intoxicated, and when it is made known to him that he is to be treated by the law as he should be, and not by a vitiated public sentiment as he never ought to be, there will be fewer homes wrecked by dissolute men than now."

AS TO THE TARIFF,

He says: "Any system of taxation the effect of which to take from one class and give to another is necessarily a partial and unequal distribution of public burdens.

If such a system is necessary because none can be devised that is absolutely fair to all classes, it is apparent its inequalities should be confined to the lowest practicable limit. This can be done by confining its operation to the one purpose of raising absolutely necessary revenue and in no other way.

It increases the cost of nearly everything we buy and diminishes the price of almost everything we sell. It obstructs our own ports against the importation of products we are compelled to use, and foreign ports against those we produce and must send abroad.

It levies tribute upon a business in the throes of adversity for the benefit of another that produces millionaires by the thousand.

Let it be understood that the people of this state demand cheap clothing, cheap fuel, cheap implements of labor—in short cheap necessaries.

That they are not interested in cheap whisky or cheap tobacco and if compelled to take the latter cheap and the former dear they will surely resent the injury, and our labors will not be in vain."

CONSUMPTION,

IN its first stages, can be successfully checked by the prompt use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Even in the latter periods of that disease, the cough is wonderfully relieved by this medicine.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."—A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middleton, Tennessee.

"Several years ago I was severely ill. The doctors said I was in consumption, and that they could do nothing for me, but advised me, as a last resort, to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking this medicine two or three months I was cured, and my health remains good to the present day."—James Birchard, Darien, Conn.

"Several years ago, on a passage home from California, by water, I contracted so severe a cold that for some days I was confined to my state-room, and a physician on board considered my life in danger. Happening to have a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, I used it freely, and my lungs were soon restored to a healthy condition. Since then I have invariably recommended this preparation."—J. B. Chandler, Junction, Va.

Give Them a Sidewalk.

We mean Bauer Brothers, who have the new store across the street south of Ed. Baker's. They have a new business room, good stock and could do a good business if people could get to them. But at present, this is about impossible. There were two new crossings laid to reach the corner west of them. Then a new sidewalk was laid from the west corner. But soon after this, the work on the new Kiblinger building began, and it was necessary to take the walk up. They are willing to wait in patience till the new building is done, but feel that they should have a sidewalk to the east. They are entitled to it, and we understand the town board ordered it put down last summer. But not a stroke has been done. The walk is already built along the north side of Davis' hardware store, and has been for many years. But it is always kept full of all sorts of out door goods and no one can get along. Then going west along the other lots that have recently been divided up among the owners, Mr. Davis, Mr. Lockwood and Mrs. Eldridge, we have 70 feet with a stone gutter, but no sidewalk. Now let us put through the new sidewalk as ordered by the board, and clear up and make passable that part along the hardware store. It will look better, show better for the town, and give a worthy business firm a fair show.

A County Superintendent Promoted.

W. H. Calkins county superintendent of Tippecanoe county, who has held the office longer than any other county superintendent of the state has received a government appointment. In a letter to the Indiana School Journal he says, "I have devoted twenty-eight years of the best part of my life to the public school work. I have enjoyed the work, and I leave it with great reluctance, but I am forced to the realization of the fact that I am just twenty-eight years behind in the struggle for the where-with-all necessary to keep the "wolf from the door in my old age." The Journal says, Mr. Calkins was appointed county superintendent August 1, 1874, and has been appointed eight times since then, making nine terms in succession, and in all that time but one vote has been cast against him. There are 13 trustees, always divided politically. On Christmas 1880 he received an elegant $150 gold watch as a present from all the teachers of the county, which he says he prizes above all things except his wife and babies.

AN AWFUL HORROR.

Indianapolis the Scene of a Shocking Casualty—Twelve Men Roasted.

A special from Indianapolis, dated the 18th inst., says: This afternoon fire from a furnace in the basement of the large book publishing establishment of the Bowen-Merrill Company reached some paper, and in an instant the flames were carried by the elevator shaft to the fourth story. The building, a fine stone and iron structure, fronting on Washington street, was stored with books and stationery of all kinds. This large stock was consumed and the building wrecked.

At 5:30 o'clock this loss of more than $150,000, on building and stock, was followed by the falling in of the roof, which carried down more than twenty persons, including those who were working on the various floors. The fire at this hour had been driven to a corner between the ceiling of the fourth story and the cornice. Parts of the fire companies were on the roof working their way down to the fire. The roof seemed sound and the walls substantial, but suddenly the wall yielded. A man threw up his arms and sank into the seething ruins below. Another man dropped, and then the whole rear roof, with fifteen men on it, fell to the top floor where the fire was raging. Four men were on the upper floor under the roof. These were crushed beneath the grinding timbers and all the men hurled through the falling floor beneath, which gave way beneath the weight of the mass. One of the firemen on the top of the adjoining building ran to the front of the building and shouted to those below: "For God's sake throw water into the upper windows. Twenty men are buried there." Instantly ambulances were telephoned for and presently the crowd below moaned under the portentious developments. The scene on the heaps of debris immediately after the collapse was pitiable and dreadful beyond all power of description. The limbs of men here and there were seen writhing, while the trunks to which they belonged were buried from sight. A ladder lay across three men and was weighted down by tons of brick and timber. Another poor fellow, now beyond all pain, lay close beside his fellows, a shapeless and mangled mass. The ladder lay across the stomach of one man, who was screaming with agony. Another man with a broken arm and twisted body lay next to him. As fast as willing hands could hurl away the brick the weight was removed, but the ladder was too firmly held to yield. The man with a broken arm was dragged free and carried away. Under him, mute, but breathing, appeared the upturned face of a poor fellow not seen before. The mortar and dust were cleaned from his limbs, but he was buried so deeply that no immediate help could come to him. On all sides blackened and bleeding faces, distorted with agony or dreadful in death urged the crowd who had scaled the heap, to redouble their efforts. The debris had fallen so that it lay with a valley shaped surface and this made the available space for work very small. There was no place to deposit the materials dug from the bottom of the valley, except to throw them on the sides of the depression from which they continually rolled down toward the center again. All the work of relief was thus carried on with great difficulty. One by one the men nearest the surface were extricated, but as the workers went down further they discovered new victims and horror steadily grew. The forward part of the building stood high and burned fiercely and threatened every moment to fall down and bury the brave rescuers, but they gave no heed to the peril. On either side the walls tottered and seemed ready to fall, but there was no time to think of them. As fast as the men at work became exhausted others stood ready and anxious to fill their places, so there was not a moment of delay in the labor of relief. Every moment was filled with an awful suspense, for all were thinking of the friends who lay buried beneath them. Names which were inquired after were passed hurriedly from lip to lip, and people bent down to scan closely the blackened and scarred faces. Persons who had friends among the firemen, or among citizens who were supposed to have been in or near the fatal walls, became frantic as time passed and they could get no word. As the wounded were carried out of the ruins they were met with embraces and tears of joy, but when the still, broken forms were borne away, motionless and limp, then it was when the full sadness and horror of the calamity came upon the waiting crowd.

A Defaulting County Clerk Caught.

S. W. Yeagley, the defaulting Clerk of Hillsdale County, Michigan, who left Feb. 3, has been captured by Sheriff Banker and is now lodged in jail. The Sheriff received word that Yeagley was in Chicago and left for that city. On arriving there he discovered that his man had just gone to Canada, where he caught him.

Nearing the End.

The work of the Pan-American conference has so far progressed that adjournment is confidently expected within the next thirty days. With that in view, arrangements are making for the trip through the South, which will end the official hospitalities of the United States to the delegates.

John L. Sullivan's Case.

The Supreme Court of Mississippi, has squashed the indictment against John L. Sullivan and remanded him to the next term of the Marion County Court to answer such indictment as may be found against him.

HAVOC BY FLOODS.

Six Feet of Water in Hotels and Business Houses at Black Rock, Ark.

A special from New Orleans, dated the 11th inst., says: At 1 p. m. to-day the river was three inches above the high water mark of 1874 and still rising. At Poydras street the water commenced running over the levee and all low places in the vicinity were soon flooded. On the lower side of Canal street, near the harbor station, the water covers the levee up to the Louisville and Nashville depot. At Bienville street much of the levee is under water and at Conti street the entire levee is covered with water.

The streets about the Sugar Exchange are flooded and the exchange is reached by temporary plank walks. The water is flowing down the gutters of Bienville, Conti and other streets below Canal street, Although the water is running over the levees, there need be no apprehension, as between the bulkheads of the wharves thick planks are driven into the ground and behind which is the levee batture. This affords protection that will not give way, and no great damage is likely to result from water running over. At Clnet street the water is running over the bank in quite a stream, flooding the gutters and the adjacent streets.

Memphis (Tenn.) special: Only meager details of the flood in Arkansas have been received. At Batesville the White River rose thirty-two feet in twenty-four hours and all the lower part of the town is flooded. The depot and freight houses of the Iron Mountain Railroad are two feet under water. The destruction of property at Black Rock will be heavy. The water stands six feet deep in the hotels and business places.

Stermont, of Princeton, President of the Service Pension Association, was elected State Commander by a vote of 426 out of a total of 597.

DYNAMITE.

It Is Successfully Fired Out of a Cannon and Can Drop Its Deadly Presence in the Enemy's Camp.

Syracuse (N. Y.) special: The first successful experiment on a big scale of firing dynamite from a cannon with gun powder as a projecting force, was made in a deep ravine near the village of Perryville, Madison County, by Dr. J. G. Justin and his corps of assistants. The test was witnessed by quite a large number of persons from different parts of the State. The dynamite used was the most powerful made, containing 75 per cent. of nitro glycerine. The doctor and his assistants spent the forenoon in loading the shells, four in number. At 2 o'clock p. m. everything was in readiness, and the firing began an hour later. A shell containing five and one-fourth pounds of dynamite was first fired from the big twelve-ton cannon, the amount of powder used being fourteen pounds. It struck the limestone cliff at the end of the gorge, a quarter of a mile away, and glanced upward without, doing very much damage. Two other shells were fired with similar results. The fourth shell containing eighteen pounds of dynamite struck the cliff with such effect that two huge masses of rock were set rolling down into the gorge. The doctor is satisfied with the results. Secretary Tracy will be invited to attend the next experiment.

Child-Killer's Frenzy.

Pittsburgh special: Frank Groettner, a German, living in Allegheny City, killed his stepchild, a little girl aged 10 years, with some sharp instrument, supposed to have been a hatchet. No cause for the murder is known. The crime was committed during the night, and the child's remains were discovered in her bedroom by her mother. The room presented a most horrible sight. The furniture, ceiling and walls were bespattered with blood, and from tufts of hair found on the walls it is thought Groettner took the child by the legs and dashed her brains out. The little one's head was crushed in and one arm was broken. Groettner was found secreted in the cellar. He resisted arrest, and it required three men to force him into the patrol wagon. He refuses to give any reason for the horrible deed. The little girl's name was Annie Heffner.

Seven Men Buried in a Railroad Cut.

Cumberland (Md.) special: A huge rock rolled down the mountains and fell upon the West Virginia Central Railroad track in a "cut" between Chaffee and Blaine. The work train, with a crew of twelve men, was dispatched to the spot to remove the obstruction and clear the track. A large cable was placed around the rock and attached to the engine that it might be dragged from the cut. All was nearly ready and the men were making the final adjustment of the rope when a great mass of earth came rushing down upon the men from the steep mountain side and buried seven of the men from sight. The horrified companions rushed to their rescue and as speedily as possible exhumed the ill-fated ones. Two were dead when taken out, and one has died since, and three were seriously or fatally injured.

The Lottery's Latest Bid.

A special from Bismark, N. D., says: Contrary to expectation, the seed wheat commissioners—McKenzie, of Spencer, Fleming, of Fargo, Mulcahy and Budge, of Grand Forks, and Meyers, Lakotta—will report to the Legislature that they can furnish 250,000 bushels of seed wheat to the needy farmers, without interest, to be returned bushel for bushel after the crop is harvested, if the crop fails the debt to be canceled. This will be foiled by the lottery bill, raising the amount to be paid the State to $150,000 per annum. The money to buy seed undoubtedly comes from the Louisiana Lottery Company or the men who represent it. The dual proposition is a dazzling bait to catch the few votes needed to secure the passage of the lottery bill.

Husband Won and Lost.

Miss Sallie Griffin, a wealthy spinster of forty-five, of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, advertised for a husband last summer and was successful. Sherman Rice, a good-looking young man, aged 28, residing at Marbletown, Ohio, wrote to her, proposed, was accepted, and married her soon afterward. He went into the express business, she furnishing the funds. He sold out and got the money the other night. After succeeding in getting her to call on a neighbor, he pocketed all the money in the house, amounting to $140, took all his clothing and left for parts unknown. It is said he went to Kentucky. Mrs. Rice, who is a member of the Presbyterian Church and highly respected, is heart-broken. Her loss is about six hundred dollars.

The judges were divided in their opinions, but the majority sustained the constitutionality of the law. Judge Elliott wrote the majority opinion, and held for the law on the ground that it in no way interferes with local self-government. Judge Berkshire dissented on the ground that the Constitution declares that the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen class privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall equally belong to all citizens.

St. Petersburg special: Intelligence has just been received here from Cabul, the capital of Afghanistan, that a revolution against Abdurrahman Kahn, the Ameer, broke out in that country. Other courtiers implicated in the revolt fled to Russian territory. At the last accounts they, with a number of other revolters who also fled to Russia, were gathering on the frontier of Afghanistan.

Pardoned by the President.

St. Paul (Minn.) special: On May 25, 1885, Lewis Carter, a colored private in the Twenty-fifth infantry, United States army, was court-martialed at Fort Snelling for a criminal assault, robbery and desertion, and found guilty of all and sentenced to ninety-nine years in the Stillwater penitentiary. President Harrison has issued an unconditional pardon to Carter, which takes effect May 25, next, and reprimanding the court-martial which convicted him on little or no evidence; also taking the ground that five years is a sufficient penalty for desertion.

High Water.

A Memphis (Tenn.) special says: The flood outlook is more threatening than at any previous time since the present high water began to excite attention. The rain fall over the country west of here and south of the Ozark mountain range has been over three inches within the past two days and the storm still continues. As a consequence, the Arkansas and White rivers are pouring out immense volumes and the situation below their mouth is anything but encouraging. The river at this point has risen to the great flood level of 1882, thirty-six feet, and is still rising.

France's Cabinet Out.

M. Tirard, the French Prime Minister, waited on President Carnot and handed him the resignations of the members of the Cabinet. INDIANA HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crime, Casualties and General News Notes.

A Brutal Murder.

Mrs. Charles Wheland was found brutally murdered in the suburbs of New Albany. The killing had been evidently done with a hatchet. A frightful gash in the head told the story. Mrs. Wheland had been living with her sister, Mrs. Henry Ritter, and the latter's husband. The house was near by where the murdered woman was found. Ritter was arrested and lodged in jail, saying: "I was too drunk to do anything like that," before any crime was charged. He bears the marks of scratches, as if the woman had defended herself. Mrs. Ritter, who is ill in one room of the cottage, while the murdered corpse lies in the only other one, after refusing to say anything, at last stated that Ritter and Mrs. Wheland quarreled early in the morning, and she fled, he following her, and returning in a few minutes to bed. This is all she will say, but the bruised body tells the tale of awful brutality, and is marked all over with blue spots. It is believed that the attempt at another crime led to the murder. Ritter bears a hard name. The dead woman's husband is of good Kentucky family, which has always refused to recognize her. He only visited her on Sundays and his whereabouts are unknown.

Scott, attemped to force an entrance into the residence of Thomas Martin, a farmer living near Evansville, and attacked Martin with a knife, when the latter shot Weddell through the jaw and in the leg, inflicting a probably fatal wound. Martin was arrested, and will be held to await the result of Weddell's injuries.

—Robert C. Stine, a well-known character, commonly known as "Bob Denny," was killed in Wilson & Co.'s mine, near Washington. He was mining a tight shot, and the coal, becoming loose, fell down upon him. One huge lump pinned his head against a prop in the mine and crushed it in a jelly. He died shortly after being found.

—The Madison County Commissioners have granted the petition of the Anderson Common Council to annex a large amount of territory adjacent to the present corporate limits of the city, and it is probable that this addition, which includes a number of the new additions to the city, will give Anderson a population of at least twelve thousand.

—The Supreme Court has rendered a decision in the three cases coming up from as many circuits, and each involving the constitutionality of some part of the school-book law, the Judges being divided in their opinions, but the majority sustaining the constitutionality of the law. In the Senate, on the 11th inst., the credentials of Mr. Allison for his new term, commencing March 4, 1891, were presented, and ordered to be placed on file. Mr. Mitchell introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators by the votes of qualified electors in the States. Mr. Morrill offered a resolution (which was agreed to) directing the Secretary of the Interior to report any information in possession of his department in relation to authorizing any lottery company by the Indian Territorial Government of the Creek Nation. Mr. Dawes offered a resolution (which was agreed to) calling on the Secretary of War for copies of correspondence between Lieutenant General Sheridan and General Crook in regard to the Apache Indians in 1885-6. The House bill for the appointment of a surveyor of customs for Columbus, Ohio, at a salary of $1,500, with the usual fees and commissions, and to extend to that city the privileges of a port of delivery, was taken up and passed. In the House bills for public buildings at the following places were passed: Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Atchison, Kan.; Alexandria, La.; Lafayette, Ind.; Baton Rouge, La.; and Fremont, Neb. Also for an increase in the limit of cost of the buildings at Scranton, Pa., Dallas, Tex., and Springfield, Mo. The measures involve an expenditure of $1,845,000. Mr. Baker called up the resolution providing for the admission of Wyoming into the Union as a State. Mr. Springer asked to be heard for a few minutes before the bill was read, but Mr. Baker objected. Mr. Springer then said to Mr. Baker that his course would not facilitate the disposition of business, and when the bill was read raised the question of consideration and by other dilatory motions wasted the most of the afternoon, so that nothing had been accomplished on the bill when the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 12th inst., the concurrent resolution for the investigation of immigration matters was laid before the Senate, with the House amendments extending the investigation to the purchase of American industries by foreign capital and to the use of Bedloe's Island, in New York harbor, as an immigration depot. Mr. Chandler moved concurrence in the House amendments. The motion was agreed to, and so the concurrent resolution has passed both houses. A resolution was then passed declaring the right of the Senate to elect a President pro tem who shall act in that capacity at any time the presiding officer may be absent and until further action by the Senate. The Blair bill was then taken up and a resolution adopted fixing the date for a final vote at 3 p. m. March 20, after which the Senate spent the afternoon in discussing the bill, the debate running into sectional issues and Senators Hoar and George occupying most of the time. In the House the Senate bill was passed appropriating $6,100 for the removal of sand-bars at the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.; also a bill granting the right of way through the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indian reservation in Dakota to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. The House spent the afternoon considering a bill to provide a Government for the Territory of Oklahoma. The proposition to insert a Prohibition clause called forth a spirited debate. The House then adjourned without action.

The Senate on the 13th passed bills for public buildings as follows: Stockton, Cal., $85,000; Mammoth Hot Springs, in the Yellowstone National Park, $10,000; Virginia City, Nev., $75,000; Hastings, Neb., $150,000; The Dalles, Ore., $100,000; Salem, Ore., $100,000; Stillwater, Minn., $100,000; Reno, Nev., $75,000. All the foregoing were Senate bills. The afternoon was spent in the consideration of the Blair bill. The House passed a bill granting right of way through the Indian Territory to the Galena, Guthrie & Western Railroad Company. The House then went into committee of the whole for the further consideration of the Oklahoma bill. On motion of Mr. Holman of Indiana an amendment was adopted providing that no person having a fee simple to 160 acres of land in any State or Territory shall be entitled to enter the land covered by this act. The committee then rose and reported the bill to the House. The amendment adopted in committee of the whole, providing that section 2139 R. S. (prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the Indian Territory) shall be in force in Oklahoma until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly, was agreed to—yeas, 134; nays, 103. The bill was then passed—160 to 25. It is a substitute for the Senate bill on the same subject. The bill contains provisions which in substance fix the boundaries of the new Territory so as to include the Cherokee outlet, with a proviso that no lands which the Indians occupy, under treaty of law, shall be included without their consent, except for judicial purposes. They extend over the new territory the Constitution and laws of the United States and the code of Nebraska, without interference with the local Indian governments acting under their treaty rights. The Cherokee outlet is declared to be public land and open to settlement under the homestead laws, and bona-fide settlers and occupants are given a preference right. The House then adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 14th inst., among the bills reported from committees and placed on the calendar were the following: Appropriating $75,000 for a public building at Aurora, Ill.; for a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at South St. Paul; authorizing the counties of Hennepin and Dakota, Minn., to build two bridges across the Mississippi River; to amend the act for a bridge across Crail Creek, Michigan City, Ind.; authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River, between Minnesota and Wisconsin. After a brief argument by Senator Teller on the Blair bill, the Senate took up the resolution of respect to the memory of ex-Congressman Townshend of Illinois, and after a number of addresses adjourned till Monday. The House went into committee of the whole and resumed consideration of the Emery bill, which was finally reported favorably after cutting down the amount of the compensation to $50,000. The committee also reported to the House in favor of the bill authorizing the President to appoint and retire John C. Fremont as Major General in the United States army. A recess was then taken until 8 o'clock and the evening session was devoted to pension bills.

Do not laugh at anybody's form of worship; respect a toad praying to a mushroom.

Do not write on ruled paper, or on that decorated with printed sunflowers, or blossoms of any kind.

Do not get into the habit of laughing at elderly people. It is not only unladylike, but it is vulgar.

Do not attempt to take care of a man's overcoat; he has a vote and ought to be able to look after his own clothes.

Do not talk especially to one person when you have three or four visitors. Instead make the conversation general.

Do not giggle when a smile would answer, and don't talk in a jesting way about things that are holy to other people.

Do not get into debt; but, if you have been guilty, deny yourself everything possible that you may be free once more.

Do not introduce your girl friend to the gentleman visitor. Instead say, "Miss Brown, will you allow me to present Mr. Jones?"

Do not say the rules of etiquet are nonsense; they are made up for your comfort and mine, and arranged so that the feelings of every human being are considered.

Do not ask people who they are in mourning for. If you don't know wait until you find out, and in the meantime don't ask after the members of their family.

Do not believe that all these don'ts are not spoken to you in the kindest manner as from girl to girl; but one has to suffer and make mistakes one's self to find out into just what pitfalls one is apt to tumble.

THE WOODLAND RILL.

BY ARTHUR E. SMITH.

We wander down the aisles of pine,
And turn the brow of the hill.
And there within the wooded vale,
Swift flows the woodland rill.
Its banks are lined with brier and vine,
And graceful arching trees,
Whose sun-kissed leaves and cooling shade
Invite the summer breeze.

At early morn when the bright sun
Rounds slowly into sight,
And floods the woods and vales around
With a rich, golden light,
The timid partridge and her brood
E'er come to take their fill
From this sweet fountain, crystal clear,
This little woodland rill.

We stoop and quench our thirst from where
The waters slowly run,
And where they form a little pool
Sheltered from the sun.
We prize this gift that Nature gives,
These waters cool and clear,
Which leap and sparkle through the vale
The whole of the long year.

Pure as the tear which sorrow draws
From the eye's hidden well,
Pure as the dew of heaven caught
In the modest lily's bell,
And purer than the rain which clouds
Scatter o'er vale and hill
Are the laughing, sparkling waters of
This little woodland rill.

Here lovers meet, at night's fond hour,
To hold communion sweet,
Here hunters cool their heated brows,
And rest their weary feet,
Here beauty lingers longest, here
Are first seen smiles of spring,
And here the joyous birds of song
Their sweetest anthems sing.

Fair woodland stream! a charm thou hast
For all who do thee love!
Round thee, with light and joyous wing,
Fancy doth ever move!
We count life dear if we can not
From Nature pleasures cull;
But thou art glad, for thou dost breathe
E'er of the Beautiful!

The Piccadilly Puzzle.

THE STORY OF A TERRIBLE EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF AN ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.

By F. W. HUME

CHAPTER III—Continued.

The case seemed to be more mysterious than ever; instead of the maid it was the mistress. Dowker took a photograph of the deceased and gave it to Lydia.

"Who is that?" he asked, sagerly.

"Miss Sarschine," she replied, quickly; "but what is the matter with her face?"

"Swollen by poison."

"Poison?"

"Yes; on Monday last she was found lying dead in Jermyn street, killed by a poisoned dagger."

"Last Monday night!" said Lydia, with a gasp, "that was the last time I saw her."

"Look here," said Dowker, quietly, "you'd better tell me all about it. I am employed in the case, and I want to discover who murdered your mistress; so tell me all you know."

Lydia Fenny, who seemed to possess strong nerves, sat down and began to speak deliberately.

"I will tell you everything, and help you to bring the murderer of my poor mistress to justice, but I don't know any one who would have killed her. She lived a very quiet life and had few friends. Lord Calliston came here very frequently, and she was very much in love with him. Where she came from I don't know, as I have only been with her about a year, but he often told her he would make her his wife, and she was always imploring him to do so. About three months ago he met some great lady——"

"Lady Balscombe?"

"Yes that was the name—and fell in love with her. He neglected Miss Sarschine, and she reproached him. There was a lot of trouble and quarreling between them, and Lord Calliston stayed away a good bit. Three weeks ago I went away for a holiday, and when I came back I found my mistress in a terrible state. She had discovered in some way that Lord Calliston had determined to elope with Lady Balscombe, and go off to the Azores in his yacht. Miss Sarschine was mad with rage; she said she would kill them both, and then thought she'd play a trick upon Lord Calliston and go off with him instead. This was on Monday last."

"The time of the murder," murmured Dowker.

"She went to Lord Calliston's rooms in Piccadilly and found out from his valet that he intended to leave town that evening for Shoreham, where his yacht was lying, and that Lady Balscombe was to follow him early next morning. So she came back here, and, waiting till the evening, dressed herself and put on my hat, as less conspicuous than her own. She intended to catch the ten minutes past nine train from London Bridge Station, and go right on board Lord Calliston's yacht and insist upon his sailing and leaving Lady Balscombe in the lurch. She went out about seven with that intention, and since then I have heard nothing of her. I thought she had carried out her scheme and gone off with Lord Calliston to the Azores."

"Did you not hear of the Germyn street murder?"

"Yes, casually, but I never thought of connecting it with my mistress, and all the servants here live very quietly, so they would never think Miss Sarschine was the victim."

"What was she doing in Jermyn street?"

"I can't tell you. Lord Calliston has rooms in Piccadilly, so perhaps she went there first and then through Jermyn street on her way to the station."

"You do not know any one who had a grudge against her?"

"No—no one."

Dowker arose to his feet.

"I will call and see you again," he said, "but meanwhile give me Lord Calliston's address in Piccadilly and I will find out if Miss Sarschine was at his rooms on that night."

Lydia Fenny, who was now crying, gave the necessary address and followed him to the door.

"One moment," said Dowker, stopping. "Where is the dagger that used to be on the wall?"

Lydia looked round for the weapons and gave a cry of astonishment.

"Two are gone."

"I have the one, but the other—where is it?"

"Miss Sarschine took it down on Monday, and said if Calliston did not take her with him she'd kill him."

"Kill him—not herself?"

"No, she had no idea of committing suicide. What are you going to do with the other?"

"Try it on a dog, and find out if the symptoms of death are the same; then I will know the companion dagger to this was the cause of your mistress' death."

"But who would take it from her and use it?"

"That's what I've got to find out. She must have met some one in Jermyn street who killed her with it."

"It can't be suicide?"

"Hardly. The wound is in the jugular vein in the neck, so it could hardly have been self-inflicted. Besides, she would not choose a public street to die in."

"When shall I see you again?"

"After I have found out what took place in the Piccadilly chambers on Monday last."

And Dowker departed, very well satisfied with the result of his inquiries.

CHAPTER IV.

THE PICCADILLY ROOMS.

Calliston occupied a suite of rooms in a side street leading off Piccadilly; and very comfortable apartments they were, being luxuriously furnished in the prevailing fashion of the day. His sitting-room was hung with dark-red curtains and carpet to match, and the furniture being of the kind designed to promote ease and comfort, it looked very snug, particularly at night. There was a desk in one corner of the room piled up with a disorderly heap of papers. Over this were fencing-foils and boxing gloves, arranged against the wall, and the pictures mostly consisted of photographs of pretty women and paintings of celebrated horses. There was a small table near the fireplace on which lay pipes, cigar-boxes, and tobacco jars, and on a sideboard a spirit stand, which was much in favor with Calliston's friends. A small book-case contained an assortment of French novels, principally of the Zola and Mendes school, and, judging from the shabby appearance of the books, must have been pretty well read. The whole apartment had a dissipated air, and the atmosphere was still impregnated with a faint odor of stale tobacco-smoke. Opening off this apartment were a dressing-room and bedroom, and, though the whole menage was somewhat limited, yet it made up in quality what it lacked in quantity.

When Calliston was away his Lares and Penates were looked after by a worthy lady, who rejoiced in the name of Mrs. Povy, generally known by the name of Totty. She was elderly, very stout, with a round red face, the tint of which was due to health and not drink, as she seldom imbibed anything stronger than tea. Totty was addicted to a kind of regulation uniform, consisting of a black dress, a huge white apron, and a muslin cap, set coquettishly on the side of her elderly head. She was one of these quaint old motherly creatures who never offended, no matter what they say, and she frequently lectured Calliston on the irregularity of his life, which that noble lord accepted with an amused laugh.

The late Mr. Povy had long since departed this life, and having been what is vulgarly known as a warm man, had left Totty comfortably off, so that lady occupied her present position more from choice than necessity. She had a gruff voice, and her casual remarks had the sound of positive commands, which she found of great use with refractory servants.

Totty learned from the papers that Lord Calliston had gone off to the Azores with Lady Balscombe, and expressed her disapproval of his action in the most emphatic manner to Mrs. Swizzle (a friend of her youth) as they sat over their four o'clock tea.

"Ah," said Totty, fixing her eyes pensively on the little black teapot, "it ain't no good being a reformatory. The way I've talked to him about his goings on, and now look at his goings off."

"Perhaps he couldn't help himself," said Mrs. Swizzle, who was tall and thin, and spoke in a kind of subdued whistle.

At this moment there came a ring at the door, and Totty hurrying away to attend to it, Mrs. Swizzle made the best use of her time by eating up the buttered toast as rapidly as she could.

When Mrs. Povey opened the door she was confronted by a lank figure in gray, which was none other than Dowker, come to prosecute his inquiries concerning Miss Sarschine.

"Well," inquired Totty, gruffly, annoyed at being disturbed, "and what do you want?"

Dowker gazed on the substantial figure before him and sighed.

"A few words with you about Lord Calliston," he said, softly.

"What's up?" she gasped. "Has Lord Calliston bin doing anything wrong?"

"No, no," replied Dowker, soothingly, "I only want to obtain some information about Miss Sarschine."

"I don't know that kind of pusson," said Totty, angrily.

"Never mind if you know her or not," retorted Dowker, sternly, "but answer my questions."

Mrs. Povy sniffed and would have refused, but there was something in the detective's eye which quelled her, so she yielded an ungracious assent.

"When did Lord Calliston leave town for his yacht?"

"About a week ago—on Monday last."

"Where was his yacht lying?"

"At Shoreham. He went to London Bridge Station to catch the ten minutes past nine train. His yotsh was to leave next morning."

"Did he go alone?"

"As far as I know," retorted Totty. "If Lady Balscombe went with him you can see it in the papers. I know no more than that?"

"How often did Miss Sarschine call on Monday?"

"Once, in the afternoon, to see Lord Calliston."

"Did she see him?"

"No; he was out, so she said she'd call again in the evening."

"And did she?"

"Yes; but Lord Calliston had gone about eight o'clock to catch his train. I suppose she thought he wouldn't go till next morning."

"Did she know he was going to elope with Lady Balscombe?"

"Not that I know of."

"Did she see any one when she came the second time?"

"Yes; Mr. Desmond, my Lord's cousin."

"What time was that?"

"About twelve—between eleven and twelve."

Dowker pondered a little. So she called here to see Calliston just before she was murdered, and saw Desmond. Now, the question was, what had Desmond to do with the affair?

"Was Mr. Desmond here on that evening by accident?"

"No; he told me he had come to give Miss Sarschine a message from Lord Calliston."

"You did not overhear their conversation?"

"Me!" growled Totty, indignantly, "I never listen—but when she was leaving they were having a row."

"About what time?"

"I think at ten minutes after twelve."

"Did she go out alone?"

"Yes; Mr. Desmond followed shortly afterward."

"Did he say anything?"

"No; not a word."

Dowker felt puzzled. It was evident Desmond had given her a message from Calliston that made her angry, and she left the house in a rage, but then this did not connect any one with a design to murder her. Suddenly he remembered that Ellersby had mentioned that he had met Desmond coming up St. James street a short time before the body was found. Was it possible that he had killed Miss Sarschine and was then coming away from the scene of his crime? Impossible, because the doctor said the woman must have been dead some hours. And yet he might have killed her and gone down St. James street to avert suspicion; and then come up again when he thought the coast would be clear. Unfortunately, he had met Ellersby, and then—well, Dowker made up his mind he would go and see Ellersby, find out what he could about the meeting, and afterward call on Myles Desmond. He perhaps might give some satisfactory explanation of his interview with Miss Sarschine, and account for his presence after the interview. If he did not, well, it would appear suspicious.

While these thoughts were rapidly passing through his mind, Totty had her eyes fastened eagerly on him.

"Well, now I've answered all your questions," she said, "perhaps you'll tell me what it all means?"

"Murder!"

Mrs. Povy became quite excited, for she had a keen relish for horrors.

"Lor'! Who's dead—not Lord Calliston?"

"No; Miss Sarschine."

"Miss Sarschine!"

"Yes; she was murdered shortly after she left these rooms and after her interview with Mr. Desmond."

"Oh, he is innocent, I'm sure," said Mrs. Povy, eagerly. "What on earth should he want to kill her for? Besides, he's in love with Miss Penfold."

"Oh, and she, I understand, was going to marry Lord Calliston."

"I don't believe she'd ever have married him," said Totty, disbelievingly; "she's that fond of Mr. Desmond, as never was. Where are you going?"

"To attend to business," replied Dowker, "and, by the way, where does Mr. Desmond live?"

"You ain't going to arrest him for this murder?" shrieked Totty.

"No—no—there's no evidence," retorted Dowker, lightly. "Where does he live?"

"Primrose Crescent, in Bloomsbury," replied Mrs. Povy.

The detective took the address and went down stairs, followed by Mrs. Povy.

"You don't think Mr. Desmond did it, sir?" began Totty, "for a more——"

"I don't think anything," said Dowker, putting on his hat. "You'll hear soon enough what is done."

As he hurried away Mrs. Povy shut the door and returned to her room, where she implored Mrs. Swizzle to mix her a glass of brandy.

"I've 'ad such a turn," she wailed, "as never was. Oh, it's a blessing Povy died afore he saw his wife mixed up with them nasty police."

CHAPTER V.

A SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT.

Dowker walked along Piccadilly thinking deeply about the curious aspect the case was now assuming. As far as he could make out, Myles Desmond was the last person who saw Miss Sarschine alive, and he having gone out a few minutes after the interview, it seemed as though he had followed her. The only thing to be done was to see Ellersby, and as he was stopping at the Guelph Hotel, Dowker went along in that direction. He followed the same path as he surmised the dead woman must have taken, but what puzzled him was the reason she had for going into Jermyn street.

"After she found out Calliston had gone off with Lady Balscombe," he muttered, "the most obvious course would be for her to go home, but she evidently did not intend to do so. I wonder if she walked or took a cab? Walked, I suppose. Let me see; it was a foggy night, and she got lost, that is the explanation. But then this man or woman she met; it must have been a friend, as she would hardly have stopped talking to a stranger, unless, indeed, she asked the way. Lord," ejaculated Mr. Dowker, suddenly stopping short, "fancy if this murder turns out to be the work of some tramp; but no, that's bosh; tramps wouldn't use a poisoned dagger—unless they took the one she carried. Hang it! it's the most perplexing case I was ever in."

He had by this time arrived at the Guelph Hotel and sent up his card to Mr. Ellersby. The waiter soon returned with the information that Mr. Ellersby was in and would see him, so he went upstairs and was shown into a sitting-room. At one end near the window sat Spencer Ellersby in a comfortable armchair, smoking a pipe and reading a French novel. A remarkably unpromising bulldog lay at his feet and arose with an ominous growl as Dowker entered the room.

"Lie down, Pickles," said Ellersby to this amiable animal, who obeyed the command in a sulky manner. "Well, Mr. Dowker, what do you want to see me about?"

"That case, sir," said Dowker, taking a seat.

"Oh, of course," replied Ellersby, shrugging his shoulders; "I guessed as much. I thought I'd done with the whole affair at the inquest."

"As far as it then went, sir," said the detective, quickly; "but I've found out a lot more since that time."

"Ah, indeed! The name of the assassin?"

"Not yet, sir—I'll do that later on—but the name of the victim."

"Yes? And it is——"

"Lena Sarschine."

"Hum! And what was she doing in Jermyn street that night?"

"I don't know, sir. That's one of the things I've got to discover."

"Well, what else have you found out, and how did you manage to acquire your information?"

"That was easy enough," said Dowker, confidentially. "I'll just tell you all, sir, for I want you to give me some information."

"Delighted—if I can."

"As to the finding out, sir. The hat worn by the dead 'un had a ticket inside, showing it was made by Mme. Rene, of Regent street. I went there and found out it had been sold to a woman called Lydia Fenny, of Cleopatra Villa, St. John's Wood. I, thinking Lydia Fenny was the victim, went there and found that she was alive, and had lent the hat to her mistress last Monday night."

"Curious thing for a maid to lend her mistress clothes," said Ellersby, smiling. "It's generally the reverse."

"I thing she did it for a disguise, sir," explained Dowker, "because Miss Sarschine went to Lord Calliston's chambers in Piccadilly."

"What for?"

"To get information concerning his elopement with Lady Balscombe."

"The deuce!" said Ellersby, in astonishment. "This is becoming interesting."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Wanted Inducements.

An old fellow, after standing about the corridor of the Grand Pacific Hotel nearly all day, at last found an opportunity to speak to the clerk.

"I reckon you have noticed me around here."

"I don't know that I have," the clerk answered.

"Why, I've been here all day; but no matter. I have been wanting to speak to you on business, but you have been so busy that I couldn't get a chance. I am from Michigan, and expect to stay in this town nearly a whole week, and I'd like to know what inducements you offer for folks stoppin' at your hotel."

"No inducements except that we do our best to please."

"No discount for cash in advance?"

"None."

"Don't make a man a little present when he leaves, I reckon?"

"No."

"Just let him go on away as a matter of course?"

"Yes."

"Well, I don't reckon we can trade. I have lived too long and l'arned too much to throw away money without any inducement."—Arkansaw Traveler.

CHILI declared its independence of Spain Sept. 10, 1810, and by the decisive victory over the royal forces at Chacabuco, Feb. 12, 1817, broke forever the Spanish connection.

PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS.

A PRECIOUS pair—diamond earrings.

THE undertaker's favorite exercise is boxing.

AN official organ is one that has an authorized crank to turn it.

LOVE is a species of intoxication that swells the heart instead of the head.

IT was a thoroughly sophisticated young woman who asked the waiter for a stack of Saratoga chips.

BROWN—Does your wife keep her temper very well? Jones—Um-er-some; but I get the most of it.

FENCING classes for ladies are very popular now, and we don't wonder—ladies are so fond of making thrusts at each other.

MOTHER—You'd better put on a veil. The wind will chap your face. Clara—Never mind. A chap never hurts my face. I rather like the sensation.

TEACHER—I would like some one of the class to define the meaning of vice versa. Bright boy—It's sleeping with your feet toward the head of the bed.

WAITER (to Uncle Greencorn)—What is your order, sir? Uncle Greencorn—I belong to the Masonic order at Sturupville, thank ye. Can't I have something to eat?

DIGNIFIED Mamma—When that young man left you last night, I heard something which sounded like a kiss. Dignified daughter—Did you? How does a kiss sound, mamma?

"THEY say the Czar doesn't mean to be so harsh to his subjects." "How so?" "Because even when he puts the smallest of the Nihilists upon trial for his life the Czar is only trying a little Russe."

A GOOD thing can be carried too far. A Boston man, who had been told that he was about to die, asked the doctor for his bill, saying that he did not like to depart from his life-long rule, "Pay as you go."

YOUNG Bride (pouting)—Here we have only been married two days, Clarence, and you're scolding me already! Husband—I know, my dear—but just think how long I've been waiting for the chance!

MR. YOUNGER (meeting Miss Winters on the street)—Why, how do you do? Miss Winters (with a cold stare)—You have evidently made a mistake, sir. Mr. Younger—I beg a thousand pardons—I mistook you for your mother.

"IF I only knew what to give my uncle for his birthday! He is so very saving that, no matter what you give him, he will always put it away and never use it." "Oh, that is easy; fill half-a-dozen bottles with water, cork and seal them nicely, and label them 'Old Rhine Wine, 1780.'"

WHITE Citizen: "Well, Jackson, what are you doing for a living now? Colored Citizen: "Ain't doin' nothin'; de ole woman takes in washin'." White Citizen: "Ain't you ashamed of yourself to allow your wife to support you by washing?" Colored Citizen: "Well, boss, my ole woman am a mighty ignorant nigger, an' doan' know how to do nuffin' else."

TARDY WIT.

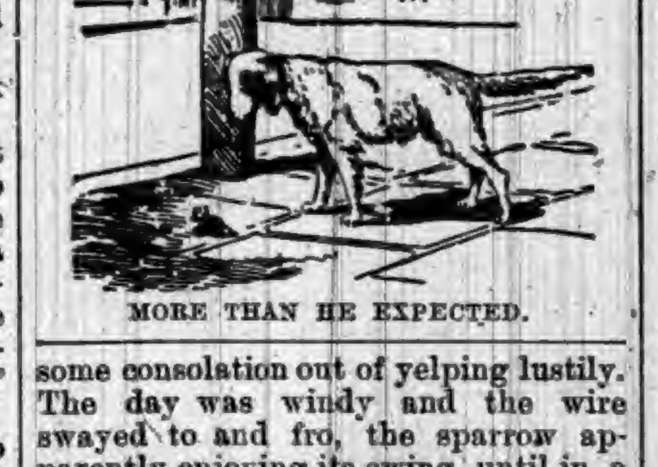
A bright little man sat bemoaning the fate
Of the wit that is tardy and sparkles too late;
Of the keen repartee that is strictly one's own,
But comes into view when occasion has flown.
Oh! the ideas, apposite, bright and sublime,
That travel like stage-coaches, never on time,
So sluggish in movement, so slow in the race
That a new topic renders them quite out of place.
So the bright little man, with a serious look,
Remarked to himself as he opened the book,
"Of regrets that annoy a humorist's head,
The saddest is this: It might have been said!"

"FAREWELL, dearest," she sighed as she lay against the lapel of his double-breasted coat; "and George, you may kiss me once on my forehead ere you go." "Thanks, Angeline," thoughtfully murmured the young man, "but the last time I kissed a girl on the forehead I got a bang in the mouth." A moment later he left the house, looking as if he had been eating marshmallows.

A YOUNG man writes to inquire if it is proper to take hold of a young lady's arm in promenading. Certainly it is. Nothing looks so nice as to see a tall youth walking with a little lady who comes not up to his shoulders, with his arm hooked in hers, lifting her half off her feet every time he steps. The nearer you can reach the appearance of taking a lady into custody like a policeman, the more genteel it is.

An Astonished Dog.

A singular electric-wire accident was seen the other day at Boston. The attention of the passers-by was attracted by the barking of a red Irish setter to an English sparrow which was perched upon an electric-light wire high above the beast's head. The animal had evidently been amusing himself in the fruitless sport of chasing the bird, and when it had taken refuge on high had endeavored to get some consolation out of yelping lustily. The day was windy and the wire swayed to and fro, the sparrow apparently enjoying its swing, until in a fatal moment the tail of the bird came in contact with another wire near by. Then, in the twinkling of an eye, the unlucky sparrow came tumbling down stone dead at the feet of the noisy dog, who was so astonished at this sudden turn of affairs that he did not offer to pick the creature up, but simply stopped barking and stood staring at his prey in astonishment.



MORE THAN HE EXPECTED.

The Benign Witchery of Candle Light.

There are so many women who have passed their first youth who appear at the balls in New York and receive the devoted attention of men for whom they must entertain a most grandmotherly interest, that the question of light has become a most important one, so these foxy caterers to the female complexion had taken a leaf out of French books and lighted their rooms with candles, the silver candelabra being set in the walls so that the light falls from the side, not above, while pretty little fluted petticoats of rose silk shade the colored candles. A side light, especially if it is rose-tinted, takes ten years from a woman's age. No wonder we are in favor of abolishing the deadly electric lamps, and the flaming gas, if wax candles are such thieves of time.—Hartford Courant.

Also, at the same time and place, new committeemen are to be elected for the different precincts, whose term of service will commence on Saturday, April 12. But should any township, after due consideration perfer a date different from that herein given, then such date may be taken instead of March 22. HON. B. F. SHIVELY, member of congress from the South Bend district, declines a renomination. But the democrats of Kosciusko county are bound to make him stick.

WISCONSIN farmers are getting tired of the high tariff "home market" that gives them such low prices. They say there are some counties, where the farms will not sell for the mortgages on them.

A MEMBER, of the Winnipeg, Canada legislature beat Senator Blair's long speech last week. He talked nine hours, and the chairman would not let him stop. He even took lunch while speaking. He stopped from exhaustion.

LOBBYISTS, are again swarming in Washington and besieging congress with all sorts of schemes. They were mainly kept at a distance during Cleveland's administration, but this boodle administration attracts them as molasses does flies.

THERE has been introduced into the Senate, a bill to have senators elected by a direct vote of the people, and not by the legislatures of the states. This idea seems to be gaining ground. Oklahoma and other new territories are moving in the same direction.

CONGRESS is chock full of bills appropriating large sums to erect public buildings in scores of little cities all over the land. The worst feature of all is, that these sums are from two to three times as large as would be needed for a private person to put up just such a building.

RECENT elections in Peru, were very riotous in some places. A president was to be voted for and excitement ran high. In one town some Indians or half-breeds got drunk, and quarreled with the other party. A fight ensued, and about 100 were killed. That is worse than Dudley's blocks-of-five methods.

THE vast sums now being pulled out of the national treasury indicate the early wiping out of the surplus. Even republicans may be found, who believe there will be no surplus at the end of a year. And yet our revenues are increasing. The present administration will pay out more money than any one we ever had before.

TERRIBLE fire at Indianapolis Monday afternoon. The great Bowen & Merrill establishment burned. Their stock in paper and books, including law books etc., was destroyed. But the most dreadful thing was the loss of life. The roof fell in with eleven firemen, all of whom perished. Several more were fatally hurt.

County Convention.

There is a growing feeling among farmers and others, that the democratic county convention should not be held till late in June. At least this is the way many have expressed themselves to us. Personally, it makes no difference to us, of course. We would have preferred a convention in April, on the plan of Whitley county, but that did not seem feasible this year. The next best time is the last half of June, or in August, or early in September, as people have a better chance to attend, at these times. But as the county committee thought we should have an early convention this year, we suppose it will be in the last half of June. This date will give candidates a chance to see their friends after the April elections have fully passed away, and will give all an equal chance. It will give the people a sufficient time to look over the list of names and select the best. Candidates will find this to their advantage, for if they have a good claim it will bear to be investigated. We take it for granted that all the candidates will be good men, and it only remains to select from these, the very best. We believe the people can be trusted to do this, and we are therefore willing to leave the full decision in their own hands.

School Book Law Settled.

The supreme court last week decided, that the new school book law is constitutional and must be obeyed. The opinion was written by Judge Elliott, the head of the court and four of the judges were agreed in it, only one dissenting. The opinion is ably and clearly expressed, and shows that the legislature has the power to control all these matters. After a full discussion of legislative powers, the court goes on to say that the law as to putting in and using the new books, is mandatory; that is, that school officers can be compelled by law to get the new books, use them, report to the county superintendent the number of books needed and at the proper time make the other reports in regard to the matter as required by law. They say among other things:

"Three important things are made manifest. The books are to be secured for all the schools of the state. Everywhere throughout the statute the terms employed refer to the entire state—never to localities. Every provision indicates an intention to establish a uniform system, and not a provision indicates an intention to put it in the power of any officer to break the uniformity.

The duty is enjoined upon all of the trustees of the state; none are excepted.

The books are all to be furnished under the contract and furnished without exception for all the schools of the state. The only method for securing the books is through the contract.

The conclusion that the law is obligatory upon every school trustee within the state, is therefore irresistible.

From beginning to end there is no hint or suggestion that some of the trustees may, and some may not, obey the law, and procure, or decline to procure, the books under the contract made by the state board. There is not the remotest suggestion from which it can be inferred that the system constructed shall be treated otherwise than as a unit. Nor is there a word from which it can be inferred that the legislature intended that inferior school officers might exercise discretionary power and thus break and deform the uniformity and symmetry of the system.

All we know of the history of the enactment, all we can discover as to the object of the statute, and all that we have learned of the evil sought to be remedied, combine with the words of the statute (words clear in themselves, but clearer still in the light shed upon them by intrinsic facts which it is our duty to know, and which we do know.) In support of the conclusion that the statute creates a uniform system, it requires that all books be procured under the contract, and that school trustees may not exercise discretionary powers, but shall perform the duty enjoined upon them by procuring and distributing the books selected by the state board of education, as the law commands.

Court.

The jury is taking a rest till March 31. The cases against Callie Walters and Mrs. Benninghoff were dismissed. John Snarr gets $50 fine and ten days in jail for cruelty to animals. Alf. Griswold, $1 fine and ten days for taking the shirt at Hoff's, and disfranchised for two years. Claude Young goes to the reform school till 21. The tax cases of Lockwood vs the county treasurer are dropped. Casebeer vs Johns, Casebeer gets $308.33, and the school mortgage in favor of the county gets $372 and foreclosure ordered. The partition case on the 70 feet of lots west of J. L. Davis' store, Lockwood was given a little over 23 feet, for his third, Davis 29 feet 10 inches on part next to his store for his half, Mrs. Eldridge getting the rest. But this division made by the men selected was not confirmed by the court. Lockhart vs Crew, gives Lockhart a judgment of $650. The Ft. Wayne damage case of Stone vs Maumee Turnpike Co., Stone gets $500. A low toll gate had knocked him off a load of hay and hurt him. The great bridge case in Ft. Wayne came up, as Brames vs Allen county. There was a special finding by the court and conclusions of law therein, filed; judgment for costs went against plaintiff. In the case of McBride vs Kelley for defamation, case comes up April 8, and they will have a struck jury. Michael Lumm took out his second naturalization papers. The grand jury has been discharged. Cases before the judge are being tried.

The Ohio Farmers Co.

BUTLER, IND., March 10, 1890.

To my patrons of the Ohio Ins. Co.:

Gentlemen—I beg to inform you that I have this day, for a small consideration, transferred my agency of said company to Mr. Hastings, a worthy young gentleman from near the home office, who will locate among you (probably at Auburn), and I bespeak for him the very liberal patronage accorded to me in the ten years last past. And you can rest assured that the company will stand by you in your sorest need, if you will stand by them, especially in adequate rates I now say to you, as I have always said, that the Ohio Farmers' are not following but leading other companies. Especially is this true of their prompt and fair settlement of honest losses. Gentlemen, you all know how earnestly I have advocated the company, and as I believe strict truth to be necessary to a long continuance of business relations, I have not one word to retract. With sincerest thanks for your liberal patronage and kind hospitalities, I ever remain, yours,

J. W. SWAYSGOOD.

P. S.—To the company's officers I return sincerest thanks for the kind, courteous, encouraging and lenient treatment always accorded me. Respectfully,

J. W. S.

Mrs. Jacob Eckert of Custer, called yesterday in company with Mrs. B. C. Baxter and little Bessie, daughter of the latter. Mrs. Eckert took the opportunity to pay their subscription more than a year ahead. That's the way they do up that way frequently.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Mrs. Winslow is still in poor health.

Last Thursday, Mr. Stiefel, of Butler, was in town.

"Time waits for no man." The same of the tax collector.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hite March 12th.

Mrs. Martha Kelley has a nephew visiting her from Pennsylvania.

Isaac Speer is not yet able to come down to attend to his store.

Last Thursday Mr. Reperd, a horse dealer from Fremont, was in town.

Tony Lehman is at home at present. He has been attending medical lectures in Chicago.

Last Wednesday no less than four of the scholars in our schools celebrated their birthday.

Reports from the south, are that early vegetables are injured by the unusually cold weather lately.

Earl W. Durfee, of Hillsdale was here on business this week. He represents a loan agency, we believe.

Clayton Mallory, of Steuben county, was in town this week visiting his relatives, the Leas family and others.

The project of consolidating Union and Grant townships, has been postponed until the session of the commissioners in June.

Miss Zoe Ettinger, a teacher at Angola, is visiting her sister, Mrs. B. F. Kennedy. She is trying to recover her health after an attack of grip.

Mr. Branderberry from Fostoria, Ohio, was here a few days ago visiting relatives. He boasts of the oil and gas wells in his section of country.

The work on the inside of the Evangelical church is nearly finished. Painting on the outside will be commenced shortly and it is hoped the building will be ready 'ere long for service.

Nearly every day there are applications for houses. It is said there is not an unoccupied house in town, and many for the first time are accommodating two and even three families.

Rev. Bradt preached his first sermon in the Methodist church last Sunday evening. The house was completely filled by an attentive and seemingly interested audience. He is spoken of by those who were present, as an educated and eloquent gentleman.

Mrs. Francis and Mrs. McBride returned from Indianapolis last Saturday, and report a splendid time although it rained most of the time. Snowdrops, crocuses, jonquils, hyacinths and all the early spring blooming bulbs were in full blossom. The season there is about three weeks in advance of this locality.

Mrs. Hannah Keller, mother of Rev. D. B. Keller was born in east Ohio, September 24, 1811, died at Kendallville Ind., March 12, 1890, aged 78 years, 5 months and 18 days. She leaves an aged husband and sister, four children, a number of grandchildren to mourn their loss, but their loss is her gain. She died in peace, expressing full faith and confidence in Christ as her Savior, with a fond hope and bright expectations of meeting loved ones gone before. The funeral was preached in the U. B. church at Waterloo, March 14, by Rev. S P. Klotz assisted by Rev J. Crouse. The remains were interred in the Waterloo cemetery to await the resurrection morning.

NEWVILLE.

Rose Harter is convalescent.

Walter Chissman is very sick with throat trouble.

Mrs. Dan Bair has been visiting relatives in Wilmington township.

I think Bony will win the cigars on his bet of 25 cents. We hope you will Bony.

Aunt Roxie Ackley is visiting her son at Oakwood. She expects to stay two or three weeks.

John Tarney thought the trip to Butler with old dolly was too much for her, it was her first load of sin this season.

John W. remarks to the people in general, that Walker cannot run the justice of the peace business for him if he is elected

W. M. Rex is among the sick list, he has lung trouble. Dr. Hull thinks he is in a precarious condition. Boys don't expose yourselves.

Pela is now promenading our streets among the boys selling the Chicago Blade. It is quite an enterprise for Newville to have a newsboy.

Aunt Julia Rex is not so well at this writing, she is up and down. We think old age has something to do with her case, as she is past seventy.

Yank has been down to Sherwood in the cattle trade, he is a rusher in the cow business. So is Imhoof in the horse trade business, so Ade Berry says.

Among the worst men we have to find fault with his customers is one that gets up before the dog does, from what we can learn he had better stayed in bed that morning.

Old Sacket goes around from one store to the other pricing eggs. Finds he cannot get them for less than 11 cents. Some one makes the remark they ought to be twelve. Sacket gets mad and walks off on his ear.

The stepfather of a certain young lady refused to let her have a horse. She got so excited and mad she run up and down the river to find a suitable place to drown herself, but finally came home, and she is yet living.

Orlin and Dock were caught in the rain by a lady on the hunt of them. It was two o'clock one night. Boys get home a little earlier, don't have your wife get up out of bed and hunt you any more, and find you in a pedro game.

BUTLER.

The M. E. church revival checked up last Thursday night after nearly four weeks of vigorous effort resulting in one hundred and eighty-one conversions The success has not been confined to the M. E. church alone, the other churches reaping bountiful harvests also. The U. B. about forty, the Lutheran thirty-nine and the Christians about thirty. Last Sunday was dedication day and a busy day it proved to be. Rev. C. C. Albertson, of Goshen, opened the morning services, which continued until after 2 p. m. when the funeral of Miss Carrie Hazlett, who died last Friday, was held immediately after the morning service, those returning from the morning service, mingling with those who came to attend the funeral. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Stewart, of Columbia City, a former pastor. The service was closed by the Eastern Star ceremonial. The large house was nearly filled, over seven hundred persons being present. The evening service, a continuation of the morning service was conducted by Rev Woolpert, of Warsaw, and was one of the best discourses the writer was ever privileged to hear. The subscriptions were then resumed, and resulted in obtaining the sum of $3,750, enough to pay all present indebtedness and fully $1,200 besides. Among the visiting ministers were Rev. Wilkinson, of Tipton; Rev. Diffinbach, of the Lutheran church; Rev. Moot and Rev. Stewart of the Disciple church. It was decided to continue the meetings, and it is hoped that many more may yet be induced to join the numbers already secured.

The Two Administrations.

The Dispatch takes up quite boldly our challenge for comparison of Harrison's administration with Cleveland's—more boldly than it would, perhaps, if it had not Senator Dawes' Forum article "A Year of Republican Control" to copy from. But borrowing from Dawes, is better than nothing. Following Dawes, it says confidence has been restored in one year. When was confidence lost? There has been no change for the better in any business interest, in the past year. None can be shown. Dawes nor the Dispatch, do not mention an instance. "Vilas' circular letter" was not a tenth as plain or wrong as scores of similar circulars used, even since Harrison's time, by republican officers. Vilas did not drive Sparks from office and in the difference of opinion between the two officials, Vilas showed a leaning to the republican spoils idea, and republicans show weakness and ignorance in going back on him and favoring Sparks. Bayard did not "show weakness and vacillation in his treatment of the fisheries question." He is the only man since 1817 that has made a clear showing in that matter. His treaty was the very first that gave a plain line of boundary between our fishing grounds, and those of the Canadians. And it would now be a law, but a republican senate refused to ratify it. The Behring Sea trouble is just where it has always been. The Samoa matter is merely a bubble. There was nothing to settle. We have had a right to a coaling station there for many years, and that is all we have now. We never had a pound of coal landed there and not as much as a flag raised. True, the thing has cost us a fine fleet, many lives, and several millions in money, and if Blaine wants the credit, he may explain what we have gained. As Dawes does not mention a "British treaty" we can't see where the Dispatch got the idea. The same may be said of that "Mexican affair." It speaks of Garland's pan-electric matter. Will he explain what was wrong about that? Endicott never "quarreled with Sheridan." Cleveland prevented Drum from "returning the rebel flags." Whitney did not "drive Roach to ruin and disgrace." John Roach was found to have been cheating the republican officials, and the government lost millions by his frauds. Whitney came in and told Roach to build honest ships or stop. Roach couldn't build an honest ship, being out of practice, so he stopped. He made a whine about it and pretended to go into bankruptcy, but gave that up when the government proved him to be worth about three millions. The ships were finished honestly by others, and are now in service, as a part of the navy, that the republicans are trying to make people believe they have built. Roach died. So have others. But Whitney did not kill any of them. You can't make a martyr out of a dishonest contractor. The Dispatch finds fault with the Mills bill. But that was in the interest of the common people, and against monopolists. Cleveland's order putting mailing clerks on the civil service list was right, and exactly in line with what the Dispatch is trying to claim for Harrison. As to Cleveland's "putting the surplus money into pet banks," that is exactly what all republican administrations have done, and what Harrison is doing to day. Please deny it! As to new states, there is nothing in that. Any party is liable to object to the addition of new states. It is a right that has always been exercised, and never denied till now. As to what Wm. E. Curtis said. Curtis is an ordinary newspaper writer, whose opinion need have no more weight than that of the editor of the Dispatch. But we suppose the latter meant George William Curtis, of the Harper's Weekly, a man of ability, who is now saying the same things of Harrison that he did of Cleveland and telling the world how much better and more honest and capable Cleveland was with all his faults than Harrison is. The Dispatch makes its crowning folly by complaining that Cleveland turned out thousands of office-holders. Harrison has turned out more in his first year, than Cleveland did in four. In brief, Blaine has not settled the fisheries, the Pan-American Congress has not accomplished anything yet, though it may; the tariff bill has not even been introduced. The Dispatch is silly enough to quote the unsavory "Gath" that "Cleveland's administration was a marrying one." We are at a loss to know what this means, nor do we suppose the Dispatch knew. We are not aware as to what a marrying administration is. Nor do we know that getting married is a disgrace. We recall several people including some presidents who at some period of their lives got married. But among this number we fail to find our friend of the Dispatch. There may be other ways in which he does not resemble the presidents. We shall have more to say of the two administrations when we have more space.

THE FAMOUS CLOTHIER

"SELLING AT COST."

NINE times out of ten that sign is a fraud. The public knows that selling at cost is not what the merchant is in business for. Loss puts nothing in his purse and he can't live on it. They smell a fly in the ointment and detect a colored gentleman in the fence. But about once in ten times that sign is genuine. There are many reasons why the questions of profit and money-making are for the time minor ones. The merchant does not expect to live on his loss. He has figured out that loss is inevitable on a certain class of goods and has wisely concluded to make a virtue of necessity, and lose voluntarily his profits rather than be compelled to lose more. It's like a captain with a ship richly freighted. A storm comes up; the vessel labors; the chances are that all will be lost. The captain orders up a part of the cargo and throws it overboard to save the rest. Just the position of the merchant. Here's been a bad season; hard winds; no chance of making port, now, with this line of goods. The dead stock is as heavy as lead. Out with it, then, at cost! Better lose profit than principle. Better sell at cost than hold at hazard. That's Laemle's fire. This has been, and is a GENUINE cost sale. Its not of choice, but of necessity; not to advertise, but to lighten the ship. It's a sale of only those goods which it would be a loss to carry over, both from the room they occupy and the money locked up in them. You can buy these goods just as cheap as you could buy them in the great wholesale ware-house, or factory. They will pay you from 25 to 33 per cent on any money you put into them, even if you have to keep them until next winter. You can keep one garment in camphor, where the Famous can't keep five hundred. Can you make bigger interest than 25 per cent? There is not much more to say. If you will come in and see them, and note the prices, you will buy them and remember that this is

A Genuine Cost Sale.

Although some of our WOULD-BE competitors cry, "don't go there, you will be humbugged, they are liars and thieves." This is because they carry a

A BIG

Chattel mortgage on their stock, and on account of this are bound hand and foot and are COMPELLED to buy of those holding the same, and at prices that no merchant, who can buy where he pleases, would be willing to pay. The consequence of all this, is just this: They cannot sell as low as we do, and will stop at nothing, to hinder you from buying where you can get the most value for your money. Yours Resp'y,

The Minneapolis Building and Loan Association, has been having a hard struggle but has come out victorious. Some parties in that city tried hard to make it appear the company was not sound, but have signally failed. The company is going on with its business as usual. Several Auburn people have an interest in this company, and for their sake at least, we are glad to see it come out triumphant. We believe one or two buildings in Auburn got their means of the association.

Rev. D. F. Kain of the Lutheran church has patented an improved road cart, one that has many advantages over any heretofore made. It especially does away with all the tiresome swinging motion of other carts. He is now seeking a good location and financial assistance to start the manufacture of them. He has several good offers from other places, but would prefer to come to Auburn, as he finds our shipping facilities extra good, and he has many friends here. Those of our citizens who can, ought to take hold of this enterprise, and help him. It does not take a large capital, and the business is good. If he can locate here, he will bring with him five or six families. Let our people wake up to this chance. Since the above was written we learn he will locate here.

Miss Katie Huntington, of the Higgins Concert Company, is a resident of Canton, Ohio, as we see by a marked paper sent by our friend, Dr. Elton. She is said to be a fine singer.

Presiding Elder Mahin preached at the M. E. church Sunday to a large audience. It was also the occasion of quarterly meeting and in the evening there was the usual love feast.

Miss Flora Hoffman, who is at Ft. Wayne every Saturday to perfect her musical education at the conservatory, says the teachers there, were highly pleased with the Higgins' Concert Company that is to be here Saturday evening. They will go over to Bluffton to hear them again.

Irvin Hoffman, son of D. Z. Hoffman, who has been for some years at Los Angeles, Cal., now goes into the employ of the United States View Co., an association which will furnish as we understand it views of natural scenery etc., for a pictorial paper like "Picturesque America." He will travel with them over various states, spending the summer in the south.

No, we repeat to the Dispatch, wheat was not down to 50 cents just before the war, unless it was rotten wheat. And all through that ten years the price was about twice what it is now after nearly thirty years of high protective tariff. The Dispatch has likely got mixed up with the time from 40 to 50. And the reason we now furnish less wheat to England than we ought to, is because we refuse to buy their goods, and to spite us, they have started up the wheat business in their province of India The silly cry, "It is the home market that pays," won't work, when we in Indiana cannot eat in our "home market" only one-third of what we raise.

The Dispatch last week asks that republican local officers be elected. It says they make a better showing as to economy. That is not true certainly as to DeKalb county. The officers in township and in county offices who have been the most expensive are republicans. Look at the carelessness, with which republican officials have created expense. Look at the action in this regard of the county officers the republicans "worked" into office at the very costly campaign of 1886. We refer especially to the recorder, sheriff and treasurer. And we are not afraid to compare any others. As to city government: The last republican town government in a very brief time nearly bankrupted the town, and had not a valuable thing to show for it. After all the experience the people of DeKalb have had with republican officials, they will be foolish to take any more chances.

Max O'Rell was recently invited to write an article for the North American Review on the subject of "Comic Journalism in America." "That means all your journals," he replied, "for they are all comic." Under the title of Lively Journalism, however, he contributes an article to the March number.

Among the other contents of this number are the following articles:

"Free Trade vs Protection, (a continuation of the Gladstone-Blaine controversy,) by Senator J. S. Morrill; The Limitations of the Speakership, by the Hon. T. B. Judge Lowry is said to desire the nomination of judge of the supreme court for this district. No better man could be chosen.

Mrs. Lee Gœtschius, formerly Laura Fair, come back Saturday for a short visit with friends. They now reside at Dillon, Montana.

Money, the root of all evil, would be useless in case of cholera without Ganter's magic chicken cholera cure. It is warranted by Robbins & McCord.

Unless more care is given to the hair, the coming man is liable to be a hairless animal; hence, to prevent the hair from falling use Hall's Hair Renewer.

Judge Lowry's youngest brother, James M. Lowry, died recenty at Milwaukee. He was a prominent official of the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad.

County Superintendent Machan, who is being tried for being an agent for school furniture contrary to law, has had his case put off till next term of the Lagrange court

"Ayer's medicines have been satisfactory to me throughout my practice, especially Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has been used by many of my patients, one of whom says he knows it saved his life." F. L. Morris, M. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. A. Nye, formerly of the Dispatch, is not only publishing a paper at Attica, Ind., but also publishes the "Bugle Call" the organ of the Sons of Veterans. We were shown a copy of the Call, last week, by Al. Roland, and find it quite a handsome paper.

That tired, debilitated feeling, so peculiar to spring, indicates depraved blood. Now is the time to prove the beneficial effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It cleanses the system, restores physical energy, and infuses new life and vigor into every fibre of the body.

The Lagrange Democrat keeps up a hot fire on their county superintendent for acting as an agent in the sale of school furniture. It was against the law, and he may lose his office for it. He also refused to obey the new school book law. But an officer is sworn to obey the laws.

Indiana School Journal: DeKalb Co. has four commissioned high schools, one graded township school and three district graded schools. This county also has two editors who hold state certificates—James A. Barns, of the Auburn COURIER, and M. E. Smith, of the Butler Record. C. M. Merica is still County Superintendent and pushing his work.

It was Hemholtz who once remarked that the greatest discovery he had ever made was that of the genius and writings of Thomas Young, whom he considered to be "the greatest man of science that has appeared in the history of this planet." The Rev. W. H. Milburn, "the blind preacher," will contribute to Harper's Magazine for April an account of this extraordinary man and his works. A portrait of Young will accompany the article. In "The Editor's Drawer" of the same number the same writer will present a few anecdotes of Bishop Asbury.

A recent letter from Prof. H. B. Brown, of the great Valparaiso Normal drops in a few good words of our popular and efficient county superintendent. He says: "I am glad to learn of Mr. Merica's success. He is a worthy young man and I hope he will always be prospered." It is such words as these and from such a high source, that do much to smooth over the many difficulties that beset the pathway of a county superintendent and encourage him to go on in the good work fearlessly. It is very gratifying to know that this office has never had to struggle against much adverse opinion in this county; but still, such words are a comfort, and help to strengthen the sometimes weary hands. For our own part we believe Prof. Brown's good words are deserved, for we know of no school officer who has done his work more thoroughly and conscientiously than Mr. Merica has. He has been a valuable public servant and we believe our people appreciate this.

With the advent of Spring the interest in Chicago's latest and greatest attraction—the Libby Prison War Museum—increases, and very few people come to the famous World's Fair metropolis without visiting this wonderful institution. The old prison itself, moved a thousand miles from its home in Virginia, is fraught with interesting memories of the days that tried men's souls in the greatest war the world has ever known. It was to be sure the palace prison of the Confederacy, but connected with it are occurences that will never be forgotten, be the building defaced from the earth or still standing as a monument to the heroism of the Union soldier. These walls are as sacred as the shrines of martyrs and they should be pregnant to us and the rising generation of patriotism and piety. This, which was once a prison under the very shadow of Virginia's Legislative halls, and after that great Civil War was left to decay by the march of time, has been preserved by Chicago's enterprise and converted into a vast war museum filled with thousands of northern and southern relics of every description. In fact there is not another institution in this country that compares with it. Old Libby is a spacious building, but no pains have been spared to fill it with valuable and interesting relics. It is divided into two displays—Confederate and Union. The former is conceded to be the most complete in existence, and the Union exhibit is so extensive that it is hardly possible to surpass it. These displays include oil portraits of all the leading statesmen and generals of the north and the south, original manuscripts by the thousands signed and written by the noted men of those days including war orders, official documents and personal letters. There are relics from all of the battle fields and prisons, and in fact thousands of things that would take space for enumeration. Nearly every day some of those who fought under the blue and the gray meet here, and as they pass together through this old prison they utter in one accord the sentiment. "No North—No South—No Animosity—No Sectionalism."

Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson returned this week from her winter's visit with friends in Ohio. Her sister, Mrs. Bolander, who resides at Dayton, came with her and will stay here some time.

Albion came near having a disastrous conflagration last week. The old Worden house caught fire, but through the vigorous efforts of the citizens the fire was extinguished without much damage.

Jackson township has a call for a caucus in this week's issue, for March 29, as the democrats of that township prefer that date, rather than the one in the general call. That's right. Give everyone his choice.

J. W. Swaysgood, so long the agent in this county for the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Co., bids his old patrons and friends adieu in this week's COURIER. He goes, we are told, to the Pacific Coast. He has been a faithful servant to his company.

New National Banks have been organized at Pierre, South Dakota, and at Phillipsburg, Montana. We expect soon to hear that George Kraus is a stockholder in the former, and that our friends Josiah Shull and W. T. Allison are in the latter.

Read over our advertisement for the Eckhart Carriage Company, which we start this week. This popular establishment expects to turn out more work than ever before, and they intend to give their patrons the best carriage or buggy there can be made.

M. L. Hoffman, of Butler township, has the latest warm winter story. He saw at different times during the winter, the common water or mud turtles traveling about. One he saw on Christmas day. This is something that we do not remember to have ever heard of before.

O. J. Powell, now a citizen of Lexington, Mo., came back last week, to defend the case brought against him by Dr. Wood. He says he will make a square fight on it. He reports the "Herald" as prospering though some of his family are sick. He will remain here till his case is disposed of.

Jacob Stamets at his grocery near the Wabash depot has just got 100 barrels of salt, right from Sagimaw, and can beat everybody on prices. He has a general assortment of fresh groceries, tubs and woodenware and fresh familiy supplies. Buys butter, eggs and other produce. Give him a call.

Albert Hogue, of LaOtto, was here last week and paid us his usual visit. He is a man who keeps posted on all the news of the day, and it pleases us to see that he realizes the number of hundreds of millions our government could have saved, had it taken the advice of thousands of our own intelligent common people.

Capt. J. R. Smith late democratic postmaster at Kendallville, has bought a good farm one mile from DeSmet, in Dakota, and will make that his home. If the Captain goes to town he can find some Corunna and Sedan folks there. A. B. Imus and wife, the former being telegraph operator. They ought to get acquainted.

Mrs. Capt. Cutter was down here last Saturday the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Salyer, they having been old neighbors in Waterloo. She has been stopping with friends in Waterloo since the burial of her husband, and she now returns to Evansville, Indiana, where her sons have good positions. She has many friends in this county who sympathize with her.

A. P. Myers, a former citizen of this township, has lately returned to the old home southeast of Waterloo. He has been residing about six years in Missouri, but he don't like the style of things there, and will hereafter make DeKalb county his home. He will probably remain with his wife's father, Mr. Eberly, who is quite old and needs some one to care for him and the old home.

Our subscription list shows the names of several new patrons this week. Nor should we forget the old familiar names that have come back again after a year or two of absence. They are always welcome and we are glad to see they think the old reliable COURIER is the best after all. We shall give them the worth of their money if possible. We shall aim to give more valuable home reading than any other paper in the county.

Miss Clayburg the popular trimmer at Harter's has returned and is ready for the spring campaign of new hats and bonnets.

W. H. McIntyre went to Chicago this week and saw the great pictures, including the Angelus. He says it is fine, but he would prefer the $110,000.

Mrs. Al. Roland, received last week a box of fine sea shells, star fish and other specimens, from a lady who resides at Seminole, Florida. They are great curiosities here, and many of them are very beautiful. Mrs. Roland appreciates the gift.

Miss Flora Husselman wishes to state to the lady readers of the COURIER, that she will open a milliner store in Corunna, on the 1st. of April. A fine well selected stock of goods will be on hand. Miss Flora Chasey will occupy part of the building and engage in dressmaking. She will be found neat, practical and reliable. 14

Ollie Ensley was married last Thursday March 27, at Wapakoneta, Ohio, to Miss Janet Rogers, the young lady who used to be with Ensley & Harter. They went at once to Indianapolis, where they will go to housekeeping. They are a worthy young couple, and the COURIER congratulates them without reserve. Mrs. Ensley was present at the wedding.

The Election Bribery Law, is already in force and has been for more than a year. We published the law the 26th, of last September, and any one can refer to it. It was approved March 9, 1889, and had an "emergency clause" making it go into effect that day. This will save aspiring republican office seekers a good deal of money.

The Butler Review says: "Auburn business men have about given up hopes of securing the Wabash extension," and quotes the Kendallville Standard as saying, "Auburn business men are not putting up their money, etc." On what authority do these papers say this? None at all. Then why say it? Auburn had her money raised before any other town interested had raised theirs.

The Gold Spike railroad that the people at Albion and Warsaw are looking for is to come from Fayette, Ohio, and follow the old Canada Southern road bed a part of the way, crossing DeKalb county in the northwest part so as to go not far from Corunna. At least that is the plan as shown by a map in last week's New Era. If it takes the old road bed, of course the Wabash can't, and will not therefore start from Montpelier.

The Dispatch a week ago, objected to the good words we said of Ligonier, and intimated that we ought to have said it of Auburn. Bless your heart, haven't we said it of Auburn many times? And besides, the people of Ligonier are our old neighbors. The town was once our home. It has grown and prospered at least as much as we said it had. Don't let us be so small about these things. If our neighbors prosper let us rejoice with them. Then in our prosperity, they will not be our enemies.

S. R. Bickel, of Waterloo, was here the other day. He is a number one carpenter, and we understand will come over here and work during the busy season of the building boom which will set in when the weather settles down. He is the proprietor of the extensive fruit drying establishment in Waterloo, and last year found himself with 20,000 pounds of dried fruit on hand, when he stopped work for the season. But he sold all. His dried apples stand high everywhere, for they are well selected, and nice and clean. He also put up a quantity of dried pumpkin, the same that is on sale at A. J. Ralston's and people find it as good as fresh pumpkin. He will devote the entire fall to this business, the coming year.

Ashland county, Ohio, is the home of many well known DeKalb County people, and some of them at least, have reached prominent positions. Picking up a sheet the other day, sent out by the American Press Association, we happened to see an interview, reported from Washington, that called attention to a number of Ashland boys who have made their mark in the world. The Studebakers, were among them. Then came Senator Allison, of Iowa, ex-Governor Kirkwood, of Iowa, Congressman Reed of the same state, and after mentioning several other successful men, from the same locality, the one who was being interviewed, himself a prominent statesman, and a former barefooted Ashland boy, added: "But I have not yet exhausted the list of barefooted boys who went out into the world from adjoining farms in Ashland county to win success in various walks of life. Judge McClellan, now representing the Fort Wayne Indiana district in congress, used to wear blue jeans and drive cows to and from pasture on his father's farm in Green township. Now he is a banker, has a seat in congress and has been on the bench as a judge in his adopted state." And nearly all the well known names the speaker mentioned were also from Green township. The whole article is very interesting, and we would give it in full, had we the space.

Died.

Angels bright will watch beside it
In its quiet, holy slumber,
Till the morning; then awake it
To a place among their number.

Thus a golden link is broken
In the chain of earthly bliss,
Thus the distance shorter making,
'Twixt the brighter world and this.

THE announcement that Geronimo is teaching a Sunday school class in Florida is gratifying evidence that this once mighty warrior is no longer the foe of civilization. We rather think that Geronimo will lift the scalp from the devil if he once gets at him.

IN speaking of Mr. Gladstone, Dr. Talmage says: "Mr. Gladstone is the first man I ever met who enjoys walking as much as I do. We ran up and down the hills. He is past 80 years old, looks to be about 58, and feels about 15, as near as I can judge."

They want five thousand charter members at $5 a member. Several hundred members have already been obtained.

THE Wine and Spirit Gazette tells a good story "on" the House of Commons. After an all-night session which resulted in the passage of the original Irish closing bill, a radical temperance measure, a reporter, at 7 o'clock in the morning, went to the bar of the house—not that where members are arraigned, but where they refresh themselves, and asked for a little brandy. "Bless you," said the waiter, "they have drank up every drop of spirits in the House of Commons hours ago, in order to pass a Sunday closing law for poor Ireland."

A STATUE commemorating a touching little episode in the life of the late German Emperor Frederick is about to be erected at Kaiserslautern. When Frederick was Crown Prince he visited one of the orphan asylums of that town. Among the children was a sickly and sad-faced little boy. Frederick noticed him, took him in his arms, and thereupon agreed to become his godfather. The child, to whom a caress was a stranger, appeared somewhat frightened at first, but soon got over his difficulty and began to play with the Prince's medals and decorations. The statue in question will represent the Prince with a baby in his arms and the youngster tugging at his cordons and crosses.

ONE of the most intrepid explorers of the day, says the Pall Mall Gazette, is a French lady by the name of Mme. le Ray, mother of the Duc d'Abrantes, who has been for several months engaged in Eastern travel. After having visited Babylon and Nineveh she traversed the Persian deserts, amid terrible privations, in order to reach India. For five days and five nights her little caravan had to encamp in the wilds without meeting a living soul or even discovering the slightest trace of a human being. During all this time the cold was so intense that Mme. le Ray's fingers were frostbitten and her guides became seriously ill. She managed at last to reach the Persian Gulf, where she embarked for India.

MEDICAL INSPECTOR TAYLOR, of Philadelphia, very properly declaims against the use of swamp hay in street cars, as follows: "I have investigated the complaint about the use of swamp hay in the cars of one of the passenger railway companies," said the Doctor, "and find that during wet weather the hay becomes saturated with water and loaded with the expectorations from scores of tobacco-chewers, the sputa from tuberculous lungs, and street filth from passengers' shoes. The moist exhalations from this mass of filth are pernicious and prejudicial to public health. If this hay is dried and used again, the dust that is given off from the movements of the passengers finds lodgment in many delicate mucous membranes."

ACCORDING to the British Catholic Directory for 1890, the estimated Catholic population of the British Empire is 9,730,000. It is distributed as follows: Ireland, 3,913,000; England and Wales, 1,360,000; Scotland, 327,000, and the colonies and dependencies, 4,130,000. The distribution among the colonies and dependencies is as follows: America (Canada, Newfoundland, West Indies, etc.), 2,200,000; Australasia (Australia, New Zealand, etc.), 580,000; Asia (British India, Ceylon, etc.), 1,044,000; Africa (South Africa, Gold Coast, Mauritius, etc.), 131,000; European colonies (Gibraltar, Malta, and Gozo), 175,000. There are 25 archiepiscopal sees, 96 episcopal sees, and 20 vicarates and prefectures apostolic. Several writers assert that at least 6,000,000 of the British Catholics are Irish.

LET us stop teaching boys that their careers will be failures unless they become rich or famous, and that life consists of its miracles, says a writer in Farm and Fireside. There are higher positions in your square mile than the Presidency of the United States. The best part of history is not written at all. Your father, on whose memory you love to dwell, was never known beyond the farm; just nobody; that was all. Fidelity; it is the only true test, because it is the only one which can be universally applied. Perhaps it is not so much the parents as it is outsiders and the newspapers that infect our young people with these erroneous ideas. But, however they get them, far too many have them. They jump at the "big prizes" and fail, where a lesser aim might be reached. But after all, it may be only in this way that the unduly ambitious can learn the lesson of life. All arts and all professions are alike in this, that if useful in themselves, and honestly pursued, they will afford a full and sufficient career for any man.

Shoes Are a Blunder.

"Few people know how to take good care of the feet," said Miss Moffett, the physician chiropodist of Detroit, as she sat in a low, cushioned chair and held a lady's foot in her lap. "All feet are not perfect by any means, but it is always the bad fit of a shoe that produces corns, bunions and other injuries which afflict the feet. I do not believe that it was ever intended that shoes should be worn. The ancients believed this, for they wore sandals."

"Why should sandals be worn?"

"So that the toes shall have room to breathe. The great toe, you see is on a line with the arch of the foot, and should stand out separate from the others. The ball of the foot and the heel serve as two pillars to balance the arch, which is a bridge to the body. Every step that we take that arch elongates like the springs of a buggy. A high-heeled shoe throws the whole structure out of balance because we cannot raise one part without making a false foundation. We are taught to consider the pointed shoe beautiful, but how can it be beautiful when the foot is thrown out of proportion? People cannot walk, they can only hobble."

"Have you many customers with malproportioned feet?"

"All my patients have trouble with their feet or they would not need my services. A lady will come in and say: 'My foot has been abusing me all day.' I at once ask, 'What have you been doing to your foot?' It is a very elastic member, filled with nerves and blood vessels, and capable of doing a great deal of work. Look at the foot of a dancer and see what it can accomplish. The Germans call the toes the foot's fingers.

"It is recorded of the Germans that in a certain memorable battle they removed their shoes and braced themselves with their bare feet in order to successfully receive the charge of conflict. My foot is so sensitive that I can tell by walking across the floor if the carpet is clean.

"A rounded, well-molded foot is a good one. It must be in proportion with the size and weight, and also shaped to support the ankle. The shoe should be longer than the foot. It is the short shoe that does all the mischief."—Detroit Free Press.

THE SURPLUS WASTED.

UNCLE SAM'S HOARD NEARLY ALL SQUANDERED.

The Treasury Depleted by Republican Raids to the Point Where the Government May Be Compelled to Sell Bonds to Meet Expenses—Entertaining Statistics.

Ex-Speaker Carlisle has recently been giving much attention to the financial outlook in connection with the many Republican schemes for getting rid of the surplus, and he has some very interesting statistics on the subject, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Herald. It is his opinion, as well as that of many other Democrats in Congress, that the Treasury surplus has practically disappeared, and that it is no longer possible to conceal the fact that the Republican Congress has started out on a career of extravagance that is sure to create an alarming deficit. Mr. Carlisle says:

"Even if there should be no reduction of the revenue by a revision of the tariff or a repeal of the tax on tobacco, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates in his official report that the total receipts of the Government from all sources for the next fiscal year will be $385,000,000, and he estimates that the expenditures already provided for by law, including the sinking fund, will be $341,430,477, leaving a surplus of $34,569,522. But it is already apparent that the appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the Government for the fiscal year will be largely in excess of the Secretary's estimates. It has been stated on the floor of the House by a Republican member of the Committee on Appropriations that $442,099,110 will be required, and, if this is correct, there will be a deficit of $57,090,110 instead of a surplus, even if none of the extravagant appropriations proposed shall be made.

"The repeal of the limitations clause in the law granting arrearages of pensions will require the immediate payment of $471,000,000 on account of pensions already allowed, and a great many millions every year in the future on account of pensions hereafter allowed on applications now pending. The Grand Army service pension bill now pending before the committee will require $144,000,000 per annum in addition to the amount now being paid on account of wounds and diseases contracted in the service. This $144,000,000 includes nothing for the widows and dependent parents of soldiers who may hereafter die while drawing service pensions. It is estimated that there are now surviving thirty thousand soldiers who were in prison during the war, and the bill for their benefit proposes to pay $2 per day for each day of imprisonment, which will require the immediate disbursement of about $10,000,000, and this class of pensioners will take $3,768,000 each year for the future. The dependent pension bill, now under discussion in the Senate, and which will be passed in a few days, will require about $50,000,000 per annum. The bill increasing the pensions of a certain class of soldiers from $50 to $72 per month has already passed, and will increase the pension expenditures about $400,000 per annum. Another bill proposes to increase the pensions of all soldiers who have lost an arm or a leg to $50 per month and to pay the difference between that rate and the rate they have received from the close of the war until the present time, which, it is estimated, will cost $25,500,000. It is also proposed to grant pensions of $25 per month to all army nurses, which would require an annual expenditure of $4,000,000.

"These are not all the general pension bills pending in Congress," said Mr. Carlisle, "but they are enough to show the reckless manner in which the Republican party proposes to legislate upon this subject. The bills which I have enumerated, if passed, will add $708,668,000 to the $100,000,000 now annually expended for pensions. Besides this, the bill to refund the direct tax will require $17,000,000. A bill will also be passed to pay subsidies to the owners of steamships for a period of ten years, which will require about $6,000,000 the first year and at least $9,000,000 per annum before the time expires. A bill has already been reported in the Senate appropriating $126,000,000 for coast defenses, $21,000,000 of which is to be expended during the ensuing year. And it is proposed, also, in another bill to appropriate $300,000,000 for the construction of vessels, guns, etc., for the navy. I have not mentioned the French spoliation claims, a large part of which will almost certainly be allowed by the present Congress, because opinions differ widely as to the amount. Some estimate them as high as $40,000,000. The Blair educational bill proposes to appropriate $79,000,000, of which $77,000,000 is to be expended for educational purposes and $2,000,000 in the erection of school houses."

"Will all these bills be passed?" was asked of Mr. Carlisle.

"Of course it is impossible for me to say whether they will or not. But one thing is certain, and the country ought to understand it—they will be passed if the Republican party wants to pass them. It has the Senate, the House, and the President, and the rules have been so changed that the Democrats can neither defeat nor delay any measure that the majority may see proper to introduce. The pension bills can be taken up any day and passed, and so can all the others. If the repeated pledges made to the soldiers and others by the Republican party are not redeemed by this session of Congress it will be simply because that party does not want to redeem them and does not intend to do so. It has no excuse whatever for a failure promptly to pass all these bills, and if this session closes without their passage it will be useless for it hereafter to pretend that it is in favor of them. The time and opportunity have come, and the party must take the whole responsibility for action or non-action. It is true that the passage of these bills or any considerable part of them would make it absolutely necessary to impose additional taxes upon the people or largely to increase the public debt by the issue of new bonds, but the Republican party knew this just as well when it made its promises to the soldiers as it knows it now, and, therefore, it cannot escape responsibilities on that ground. All through the last campaign the Democrats insisted before the people that the redemption of the promises made by the Republican party would bankrupt the treasury and require a large increase either in taxation or the public debt."

Just One Sample Steal.

[Washington special to Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The House went into committee of the whole on Friday for the consideration of bills on the private calendar for the first time this session. The first bill on the calendar was in favor of allowing $175,000 to Albert H. Emery for constructing a dynometer for testing structural iron. This is an old claim and has been before Congress ten years. Speaker Reed was always one of its most earnest champions, and this probably accounts for its being brought in so early and placed at the head of the calendar. A history of this claim will enlighten the people as to what they may expect before this Congress terminates. Emery contracted with the government in writing to complete the machine for $25,000. While the plans and drawings were being prepared, the representatives of the Government concluded to have heavier material used than had been stipulated in the first contract, and Emery was asked to state the amount he would take to make the change. He agreed in writing to make the change for the additional sum of $6,500. The machine was completed, and Emery was paid the contract price, $31,500 in cash. Ever since then Emery has been persistent in trying to lobby through Congress an additional appropriation. The Senate passed the bill once or twice for $200,000, and once for $225,000, but in the House the bill has always been defeated. The committee in charge of the same last Friday showed great ignorance of the merits of the claim, and it was apparent that the same had been railroaded through without proper investigation. When it came up, a few old members, who had fully investigated it in past Congresses, exposed its fraudulent character, but did not get an opportunity to defeat it. It is strange that such a claim should be the first reported, when there are thousands of bona fide claims of small amounts pending before the committee. This Congress, it must not be forgotten, is organized for action. Farewell, surplus!

ON THE RACE PROBLEM.

Senator Jones, of Arkansas, Says the Colored Man Should Learn that Peace and Moral Elevation Afford the Only Hope of Bettering His Condition.

[Washington special.]

If the leading negroes could have heard an address delivered in the Senate by Mr. Jones, of Arkansas, during a discussion of Mr. Blair's educational bill they would have received considerable enlightenment as to the Southern views of the race problem. Mr. Jones said the question of the passage of the bill was not one of principle, but of expediency. He had hoped that leading negroes might be led to think soberly, to reason in a dispassionate way, not as the result of going to school, but as the result of seeing that the white people of the South wished to do for the colored people the very best they could. Schools and school-books would help to solve the race question, but there would have to be a moral uplifting of the negro; and this would be, of necessity, a slow work. For that there would have to be peace, but it seemed that the pretended friends of the negro did not intend that there should be peace. It would be well for the negro if he would learn that when he was moderate and conservative his white neighbors were with him; that those who undertook to incite him to murder and arson were his worst enemies; that his best friends were those who employed him but would not be ruled by him, and that the intelligence of the country must govern it. When the negro had been taught that a great kindness would have been done him and he would be shown the only practical way of working out the interests of both races at the South.

Farmers and the Tariff.

I am often asked whether the farmer would be able to get any better prices for his wheat and corn if we had reduced tariff, a half tariff, or free trade. A great many can see that the farmer would get his goods a great deal cheaper and therefore get more in that sense in exchange for his wheat and corn, but they can not see that there would be a much larger demand for his wheat and corn and therefore a high price. Now, I'll put it to your common sense and see if you can not. How many people on the continent of Europe do you suppose ever eat wheat bread? I can tell you from personal observation as well as from statistics that three-fourths of the people who live upon the continent of Europe never eat wheat bread. They sometimes eat meat—once a week; some of them eat it twice a week, and wheat bread is something which you might literally say they never eat, half of them; but half of them do occasionally eat it on special occasions—holidays—perhaps four times a year, they get a piece of wheat bread in their mouths, but the rest of the time they live on black bread, and they don't import wheat from you. Do you suppose that is because they don't like wheat bread? Do you suppose they would not eat wheat bread if they could get the chance! Do you suppose they would not eat meat every day if they could? Do you suppose they would not be very glad to buy any quantity of wheat and corn and meat from American farmers? Why, there are people enough in Europe alone willing and glad and anxious to take twice as much wheat and twice as much corn and twice as much meat as they take now, and more, too. Why don't they do it? Why, simply because you will not take from them the only things they have got to pay for your wheat and corn and meat. You put up a big tariff and say: "Stand off, you blasted foreigners; we will not let you send your goods in. We will not let you pay for wheat, corn and meat in anything but gold." They don't have any gold; they don't raise gold in their fields; they don't have but a very few gold mines in Europe. They cannot give you gold and you will not take anything else, consequently, my enlightened farmer friend, that is the reason you don't have any more customers.—Thomas G. Shearman, at the Indianapolis Tariff Reform Convention.

Taxing Misery.

Just now there is an attempt in some circles of high-taxers to protest against the proposed reimposition of the tax on quinine. It is claimed that this is a tax on misery and fever beds, and, therefore, should never be made.

But it must be kept before the people that the tax on quinine is no more a burden upon misery and fever beds than is that which increases the cost of every blanket to the profit of a few grasping monopolists. There is no half way in this matter. If the tariff really reduces the cost and selling price of commodities, than it would be worse than cowardice for the high-taxers to refuse the benefit of this form of taxation to the sufferers who need quinine. But if it be true that the tariff is sought by the quinine monopolists simply that they may increase their levy upon the sick and helpless, then the same is true as to blankets and every other necessity of life which is taxed for the benefit of a class and at the expense of the masses.

The tax on lumber is a tax on fever beds. The same is true as to every article used by the people from the cradle to the grave. The statement that the Philadelphia manufacturers of quinine demand the restoration of their power to levy tribute on the people in the form of a quinine tax, is proof that they know the full effect of the tax, and that it will add to their profits proportionately as it robs the poor of their rights. Let the people understand this matter and there will be fewer taxes levied for the benefit of a favored class.—The Leader.

Democratic Success in Minnesota.

A dispatch from St. Paul says: Returns received from the municipal elections throughout Minnesota indicate, wherever party lines were drawn, a sweeping Democratic victory. This was conspicuously the case in the larger towns. In the small towns the result turned largely upon the local issues, and particularly upon the license question, the no-license party generally being defeated. The most signal Democratic victory was won at Owatonna, the home of Congressman Dunnell, where Dr. Mirehouse was elected Mayor over State Senator Crandall, and the City Government in every branch was captured by the Democrats. In Austin the Democrats elected Senator O. W. Gibson Mayor, and carried the Council. Alexandria, the home of ex-Congressman Nelson, and Delano, the county seat of Wright, were the scenes of Democratic victories. At Rochester the Democrats made a combination against the no-license element and carried the city. White Bear, Montevideo, Mound View, and Hector all elected Democrats. Every town named has hitherto been strongly Republican. The tariff-reform wave is rolling over Minnesota and will reach tidal proportions by next November.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to everyone.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

THE MODERN RIALTO.

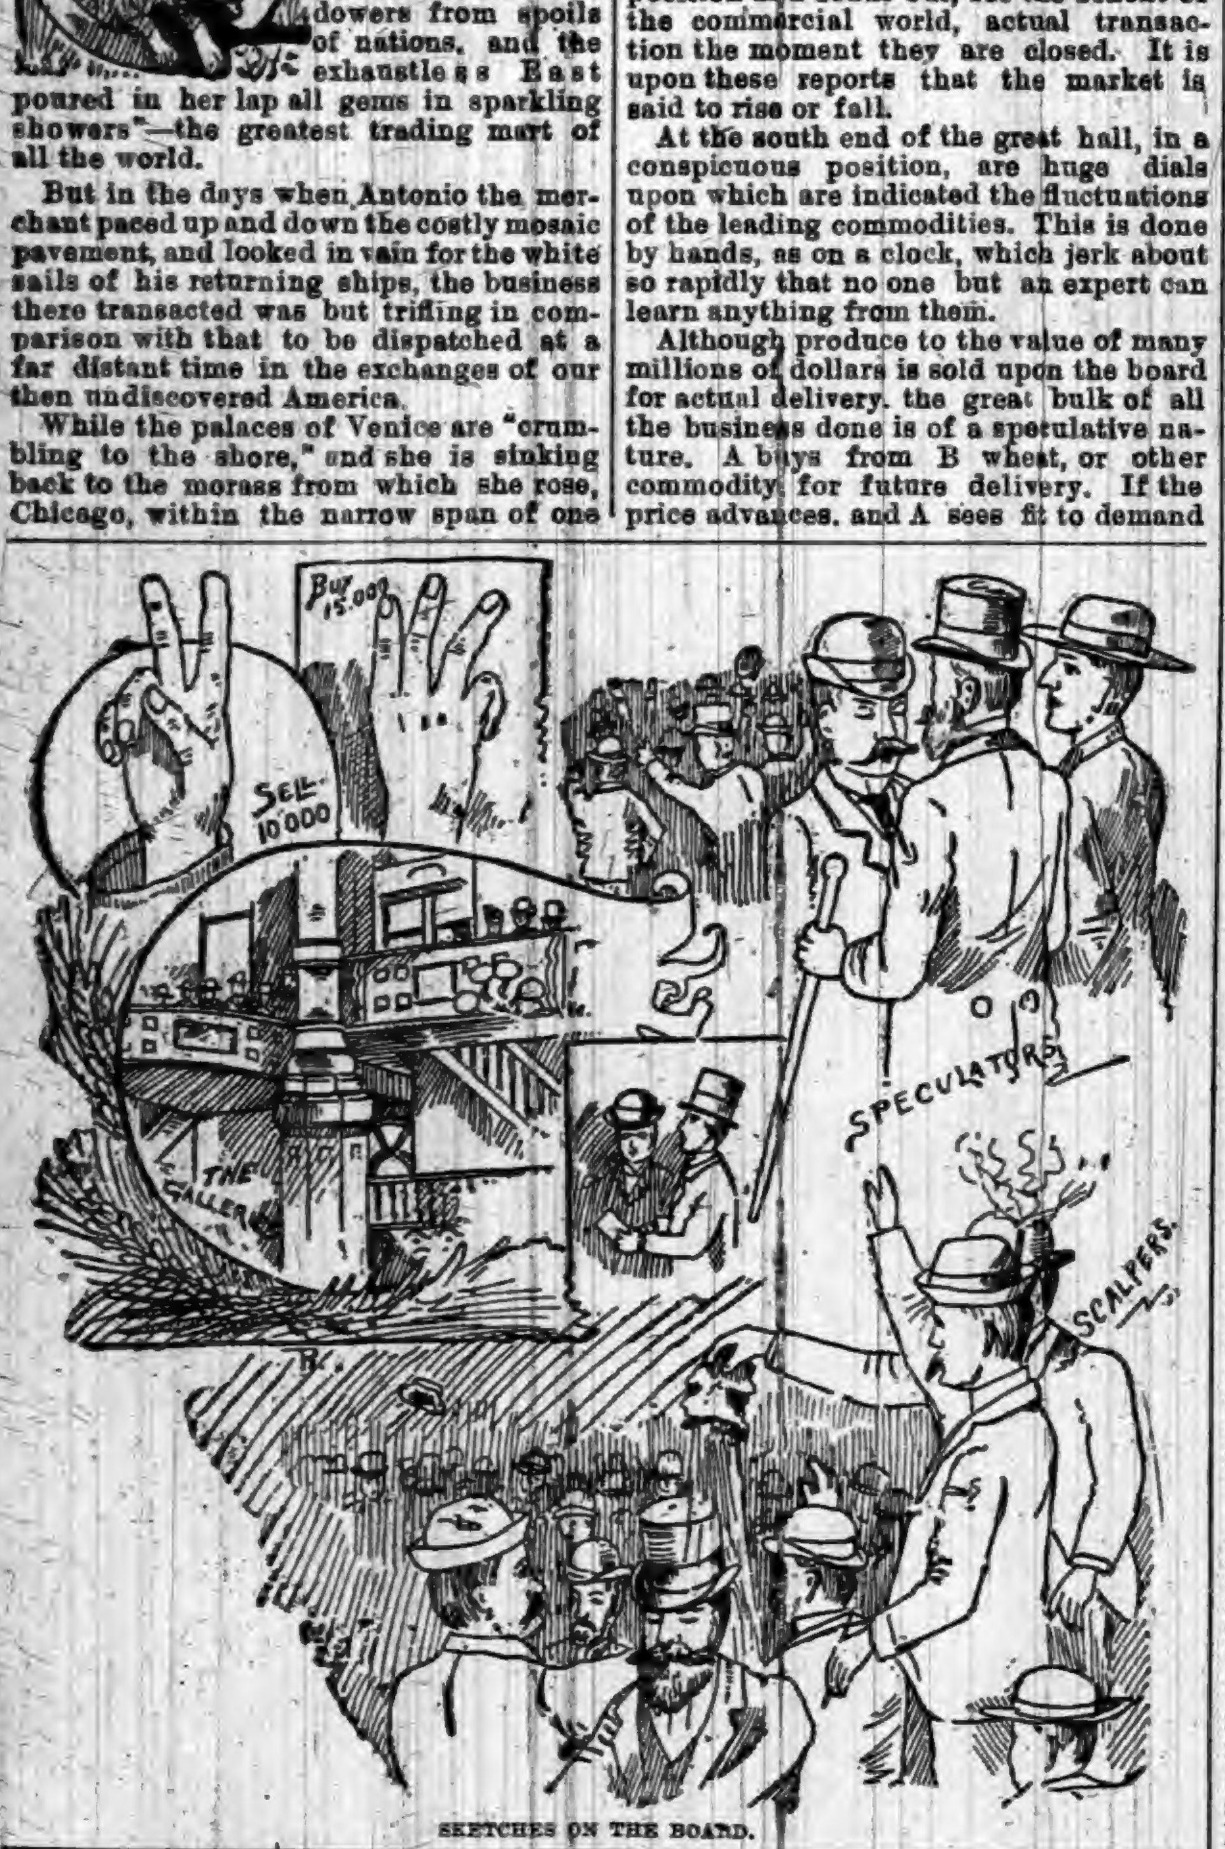
SIXTY MINUTES ON THE CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE.

A Description of the Manner in Which Its Business Is Conducted—The Lingo of the Institution—Bulls and Bears—Puts, Calls, Straddles, Margins, Etc., Etc.

THE Rialto, which Shakspeare's Shylock designates as "the place where merchants most 'do congregate,'" was—at that golden time when the daughters of Venice "had their dowers from spoils of nations, and the exhaustless East poured in her lap all gems in sparkling showers"—the greatest trading mart of all the world.

But in the days when Antonio the merchant paced up and down the costly mosaic pavement, and looked in vain for the white sails of his returning ships, the business there transacted was but trifling in comparison with that to be dispatched at a far distant time in the exchanges of our then undiscovered America.

While the palaces of Venice are "crumbling to the shore," and she is sinking back to the morass from which she rose, Chicago, within the narrow span of one short human life, has far surpassed the highest commercial glory ever attained by the mighty city of the Doges.



SKETCHES ON THE BOARD.

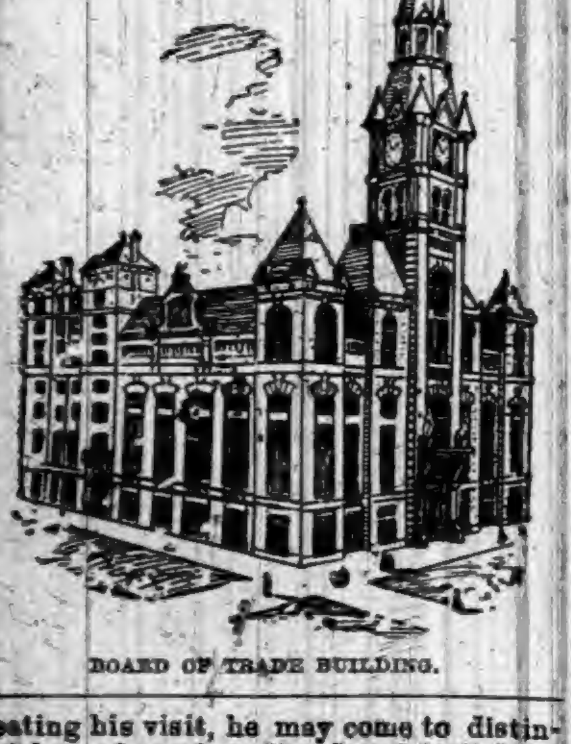
Chicago was founded on trade. It had its beginning as a post where goods were bartered with Indians, at many times their value, for the furs and pelts of animals. As the red man began to recede before the advance of civilization, it became a distributing point for the necessaries of white settlers. The West, seemingly as "exhaustless" as the East, from which Venice drew her splendor, continued her support. Thus trade increased, and with it came population, push, energy—and a great city was the result.

Of the institutions which have made the Chicago of the past, and are preparing for the building of a still more glorious Chicago for the future, the Board of Trade is entitled, perhaps, to the very foremost mention.

This is a theme of which, though much has been written, very little is probably understood. This is not because the subject is so intricate, but for the reason, probably, that so much is taken for granted, and passed by without explanation.

To write the history of the Board of Trade would be to write the commercial history of the Garden City. Suffice it to say that it had a beginning as small, in comparison, as the "acorns" from which the "tall oaks," in the old declamation, grew. A membership, which costs now several thousand dollars, was issued to the charter members at the very modest charge of $5. From insignificant quarters it has risen by gradations until it occupies a veritable palace.

The Board of Trade building stands on Jackson street, and occupies half a block. It is a majestic structure, rising to a vast height, its vane being 335 feet above the pavement, making the ten and twelve story buildings in the neighborhood look dwarfed in comparison. In connection with the lower part of La Salle street, which terminates at its granite front, this building presents an appearance certainly as fine as any similar structure in America.



BOARD OF TRADE BUILDING.

A stranger to the modus operandi, entering one of the galleries, looks down upon what seems a second Babel. Repeating his visit, he may come to distinguish words such as "buy" and "sell," but what is being done, and how, remains as great a mystery as ever.

But it is with the business and not the building that we have to do.

On the floor of the high-ceilinged hall, where the business of the Board is transacted, are a number of circular depressions furnished with steps, upon which traders can stand without obstructing each other's view. These are the "pits," and veritable pit-falls they have proved to thousands. This is the open market, where produce and provisions are bought and sold.

This is not done after the manner of an auction, with competing bids. One man is shouting, "Sell 10-87½;" another, "Buy 5-87;" which, in the phraseology of the pit means, that the one offers for sale 10,000 bushels of wheat, or corn, according to which pit it is in, at 87½ cents per bushel, and that the other offers one-eighth of a cent less for 5,000 bushels of the same staple commodity.

As scores, sometimes hundreds, are shouting at once, it is often impossible for the sharpest ears to distinguish the words of any one in particular. To make offers intelligible, a sort of deaf and dumb alphabet has been adopted. When a hand is thrust up with the palm outward it signifies sell; with the back exposed it means buy. Each finger allowed to remain upright stands for 5,000 bushels. A trader new to the business has, of course, much to learn and is often confused. In time, however, it becomes a second nature, and he knows almost instantly what is being said. In this he is largely aided by a study of the lips of bidders and comes to know the uttered words without having heard an articulate sound.

When an offer is accepted the parties make a note of the sale. At the same time a man wearing a gilt-laced cap and occupying an elevated box beside the pits make a memorandum of the transaction. These men, of whom there is one for each pit, are the official reporters of prices.

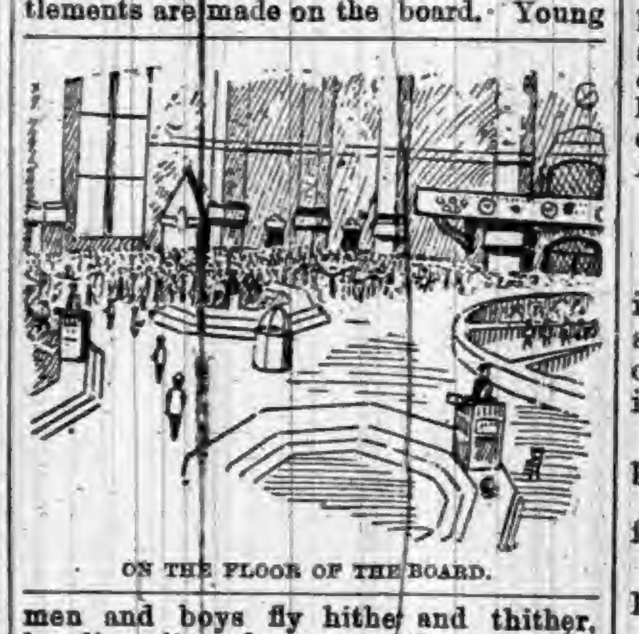
One portion of the floor is railed off, and here may be seen more than 100 telegraph operators engaged in receiving and sending dispatches. One man, the official telegrapher, occupies a commanding position and sends out, for the benefit of the commercial world, actual transaction the moment they are closed. It is upon these reports that the market is said to rise or fall.

At the south end of the great hall, in a conspicuous position, are huge dials upon which are indicated the fluctuations of the leading commodities. This is done by hands, as on a clock, which jerk about so rapidly that no one but an expert can learn anything from them.

Although produce to the value of many millions of dollars is sold upon the board for actual delivery, the great bulk of all the business done is of a speculative nature. A buys from B wheat, or other commodity for future delivery. If the price advances, and A sees fit to demand his goods, he makes a profit, which is settled by paying the difference in money. If the price declines the seller will be the gainer. Thus the transaction is only a wager as to the fluctuations of the article within a given time.

Margins are certain sums, so much per bushel of corn or tierce of lard, deposited by the parties to cover losses by reason of possible advances or declines. When the original margin has been swept away by fluctuations the fortunate party may call for an increase, which the other must put up if he wishes to maintain his credit.

The first day of each month, unless it chances to fall on Sunday or a holiday, is the day for settling the transactions of the preceding month which have not been before closed up. The ruling prices at the close of the preceding session form the basis of adjustment. These settlements are made on the board. Young men and boys fly hither and thither, handing slips of paper to others. These are in reality warehouse receipts, which show that the commodity is stored at a certain place and subject to the order of the owner. These receipts being negotiable, are handed from one to another and made to do service many times over, until they come at last to the hands of the men who are the real owners or carriers of the goods. Thus, vouchers calling for 100,000 bushels of corn may be made to settle differences aggregating many millions.



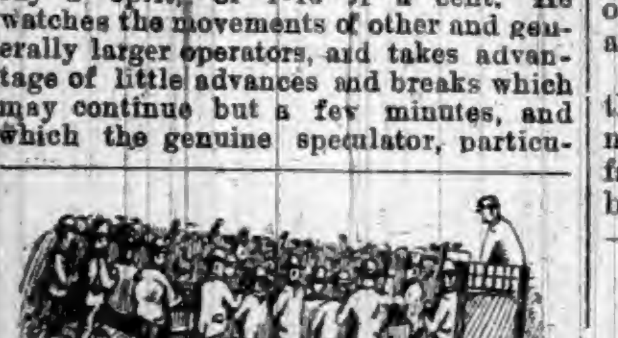
ON THE FLOOR OF THE BOARD.

It is only recently that deliveries were made on the board. Not very long ago they were required to be made at the different offices. Settling day then presented a lively scene. Young men, generally destitute of coats, flew rather than ran through the streets, dodged vehicles, darted into buildings, vaulted up flights of stairs, and tumbled down again in a mad endeavor to deliver their receipts before the striking of the ominous bell upon the Board of Trade Building, which marked the close of the business day. Many a broken arm or other serious injury has been thus received, and many a suffering youth, unmindful of pain, has hurried along to make his deliveries and save his employer from loss.

Like every other institution, the Board of Trade has a nomenclature peculiar to itself. Those who believe the market will advance, and play the game on that theory, are called "bulls," while "bears" are men who expect to see prices decline and accordingly sell that they may profit by the fall. A strong or rising market is termed "bullish," and "bearish" when falling.

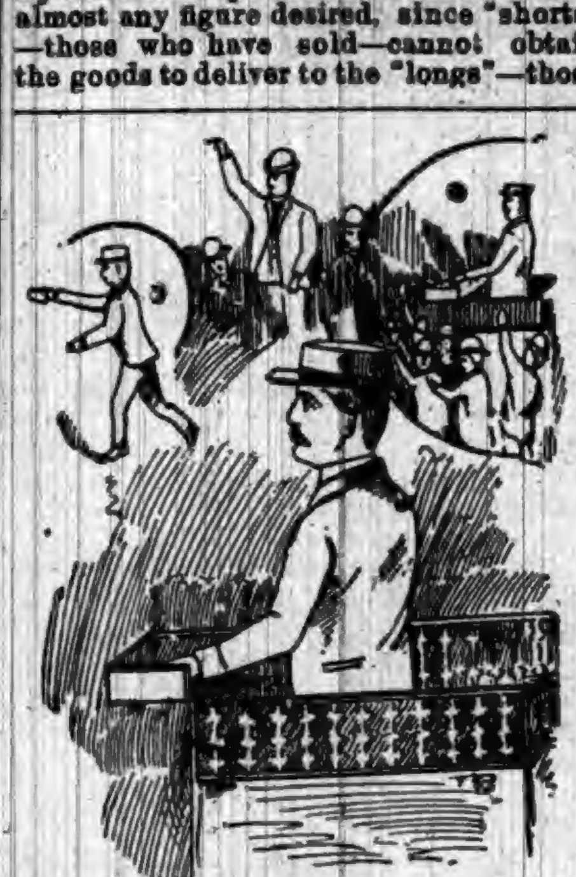
Bulls and bears, in the just sense of the terms, are your true speculators. They adhere to their theory of an advance or fall, and don't turn aside from it until convinced of their error.

The "scalper" may be termed the bushwhacker of speculation. He acts in the present. He is a bull or a bear as he can see a chance to nip a small profit, say a "split," or 1-16 of a cent. He watches the movements of other and generally larger operators, and takes advantage of little advances and breaks which may continue but a few minutes, and which the genuine speculator, particularly if he be a "plunger" or heavy operator, contemptuously ignores. The scalper is of a cowardly nature, possessed of but a small amount of "gimp" or snap.



IN THE WHEAT PIT.

The term "corner" is pretty generally understood, and is not confined to Board of Trade transactions. It means the controlling of the visible supply in the market of the particular commodity. By this means prices can be forced up to almost any figure desired, since "shorts"—those who have sold—cannot obtain the goods to deliver to the "longs"—those who have bought—without paying the price demanded.



OFFICIAL REPORTER AND TELEGRAPH OPERATORS

The trouble with corners is that they very often—in fact, in a clear majority of cases—fail to corner, and in that event the losses are commensurate with what the gains might have otherwise been. Not only are millionaires thus bankrupted but thousands of small fry, who have pinned their faith and invested their last dollar in the success or failure of the scheme, go down with them.

"Puts" and "calls" are terms of very general use. They are frequently called privileges. The buyer of a "put" pays a certain sum for the privilege of selling during a certain time, usually a day, a certain thing at a certain price.

A "call" is the privilege of buying on the same terms. They are sold for small sums, and the purchaser generally "drops" the amount invested. In cases of unusual fluctuation, however, large profits are made on "puts" and "calls." In the history of the Board, $10,000 has more than once been made from an investment of $100. A "straddle" is a combined put and call, and is taking chances both ways.

A large portion of the buying and selling is done by brokers. Many of these act for wealthy operators, who not infrequently have several brokers on the floor at the same time, operating, to all appearances, at cross-purposes. There are many tricks among speculators, and finessing is as useful on the Board of Trade as in a game of whist.

Many of Chicago's people speculate through a broker on the board. The real harvest of the latter comes, however, from the countrymen, or more properly, the residents of small cities and towns. These, dazzled by the fortunes of which they continually read as having been made in a day, are constantly pouring money into that insatiate hopper of speculation, from whence it passes into a mill, the tolls of which are exceedingly heavy.

Granting that the small outside operator is as likely to win as lose, and has capital to carry on his speculations, he is, in the long run, almost certain to quit a loser; for, by reason of continual grinding, the entire grist is consumed by the broker in the form of commissions—tolls.

Board of Trade men are, for the most part, a rollicking set. At times they act like a lot of schoolboys, playing on each other all manner of pranks. If one had the value of all the hats that have been destroyed on the Chicago Board of Trade, he would be a wealthy man. Sticking burning papers in hats, and emptying samples of flour over each other, are common amusements.

Many of the large fortunes of Chicago were amassed on the board, and many of the heaviest operators were once poor men, and that not many years ago, either.

Many a man, prosperous for a time, has gone down under a run of ill-luck, and never again got on his feet. The city abounds in men whom speculation has ruined, without leaving them the energy to earn a respectable livelihood.—Dwight Baldwin in Chicago Ledger.

A Proposition in Physics.

The husband of a professor of physics at a "young ladies'" advanced school was putting on his clothes the other morning, and his wife was lecturing on her favorite subject.

"The whole is always greater than a part," she remarked with confidence.

"Always?" he inquired, sticking his foot into his sock.

"Always," she answered with emphasis.

"I think not," he rejoined in a quietly aggravating tone.

"But I say it is," she asseverated.

"For example, my dear"—and he held up his foot—"my foot is a part of my body, but the hole in the sock is not larger than the part. You will observe that the part cannot get quite thorough it at this moment. But, my love," and his voice softened, "by to-night I think your proposition will be correct."

Then he put on his shoes and completed his toilet in the midst of a silence that could be bent double before it could be broken.—Merchant Traveler.

Wanted to Compromise.

Lawyer—But you made a statement exactly contrary to the one you now make, only a moment ago.

Witness—No, sir; I did not.

Lawyer—What do you mean?

Witness—I mean that you are telling a falsehood.

Lawyer—In other words, that I am a liar?

Witness—Yes, sir! That's it, exactly.

Judge—Hold on, here, hold on; we can't have this.

Witness—But, your Honor——

Judge—We can't have it, I say. I shall fine you five dollars for contempt of court.

Witness—All right, Judge. Just make it twenty-five and I'll give him a licking right here.—American Commercial Traveller.

Chicago Will be Safe.

New-Yorker—Just think of Chicago's criminal record. How could people attend a World's Fair in Chicago without running the risk of being robbed and murdered?

Chicago Man (confidentially)—Oh, there won't be any danger at all then, not a particle. Just as quick as the fair opens all the robbers will stop burglarizing and go to keeping hotels.—New York Weekly.

Wise by Experience.

Mr. Case (who has married his typewriter)—Well, my dear, I suppose I must be looking around for somebody to take your place in the office.

Mrs. Case—Yes; I have been thinking of that. My cousin is just out of school.

Mr. Case—What's her name?

Mrs. Case (sweetly)—John Henry Briggs.

A FRENCH electrician has found that the electric current retards the separation of cream and preserves the milk.

The Galician Wax Mines.

The wax mines or ozokerit deposits of Eastern Galicia, which a syndicate of American capitalists have leased or purchased, form one of the most curious fields of industry imaginable. They are at and around Boryslaw, which is also the center of the Eastern oil district of that part of Austria. They have been for generations in the possession of Polish Jews of the most avaricious class, who have worked them in the most primitive manner. The wax lies in beds, like clay, at depths of from 350 to 600 feet. Shafts are sunk to the beds. The sides are curbed with timbers, but in such a careless and unscientific way that they are constantly caving in and burying workmen in the depths. From four to six men are killed in this way every week. The owners of the mines persistently refuse to go to the expense of making their shafts safe, and the laborers are at their mercy.

The Boryslaw wax field is only fifty acres in extent, and upon that 10,000 shafts have been sunk. Twelve thousand men live and work on that tract. The owners of the deposits have made immense fortunes from the product, as it is very valuable, bringing eight cents a pound at the pits. Its use until within a few years was confined solely to making candles, but the manifold uses to which paraffine has been adapted has given this Galician deposit wider utility. The region is intensely Catholic, and holy days are constantly occurring, upon which occasion vast numbers of candles are used. The ozokerit lies in veins sixteen inches thick. It is dug out with shovels, and raised from the shaft with buckets and windlass. The owners are the only merchants, bankers and hotel-keepers in the region. Everything is mortgaged to them. The men shave their heads, leaving only a tuft of hair at each temple. The women also shave their heads, wearing mohair wigs instead of their natural head covering.

Chance for a Bargain.

Small Boy (rushing in)—Oh, mamma! I know where I can buy a double ripper sled awful cheap. Won't you give me some money?

Mamma (doubtfully)—How cheap?

"Well, I don't know. I haven't asked, but I guess I can get it for most nothing, 'cause Mrs. Nobbs hasn't any use for it any more."

"Mrs. Nobbs?"

"Yes. Johnny Nobbs had it, you know."

"But where is Johnny?"

"Why, in ridin' down-hill on it just now, he struck a post an' killed himself."—New York Weekly.

We'll Suppose a Case.

You are nervous and dyspeptic, your appetite flags, your slumber is broken or disturbed by uneasy dreams, or you court the sleepy god in vain. What shall you do? Try an alcoholic excitant to stimulate appetite, deaden the nerves at bed-time with a narcotic? Neither of these. Try Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It will, believe us, be more than a trial. You will continue to use this justly renowned nerve invigorant and stomachic. It is in the exigency supposed just what is wanted. It is a healthful stimulus to appetite and digestion, does not excite, but quiets the brain and nerves, is an excelent diuretic and a speedy reformer of a disordered condition of the liver and bowels. It counteracts a tendency to rheumatism, nullifies the prostrating effects of overwork, mitigates the infirmities of age, and hastens convalescence. Persons exposed to rough weather should use it as a preventive, as should also tired students and business men.

His Business-Like Way.

Young Mr. Bizz (briskly, to fair proprietor of photograph gallery)—I've dropped in, Miss Frame, without much preparation, in the style I usually do when I make up my mind I want anything. Can you take me just as I am?

Miss Frame—Certainly, Mr. Bizz. What style do you wish—cabinet or plane?

Mr. Bizz—What style? Great Cæsar! Did you think I'd come in with these old clothes on to have my picture taken? I'm asking you to marry me, Miss Frame.—Chicago Tribune.

Unparalleled Egotism.

Hoffman—I don't believe a word of that malicious story the fellows are telling on Adonis Greatshape.

Madison Squeer—What is it?

"Why, they say that at the last club entertainment, when the speaker quoted the words, 'Beauty unadorned is most adorned,' Donny ripped off his coat and called out, 'Take my clothes, there mister, I don't want 'em?'"—American Grocer.

A Woman in the Case.

There always is. She is the power behind the throne. A woman's influence over the man who loves her is often absolute. To wield so great a power to guide, strengthen, and help her husband, a woman's mind should be clear and healthy. It cannot be if she is suffering from any functional derangement. How many a home is made unhappy because she who should be its life and light is a wretched, depressed, morbid invalid! Wives, mothers, and daughters, why suffer from "female complaints" which are sapping your lives away, when Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will renew your health and gladden those about you? It has restored happiness to many a saddened life. Why endure martyrdom when release is so easy? In its special field there never was a restorative like the "Favorite Prescription."

TO CLEANSE the stomach, liver, and system generally, use Dr. Pierce's Pellets. 25 cents.

A Trifle Discouraged.

Captain (outward bound, to passenger)—Are you feeling any better to-day, sir?

Passenger (discouraged)—No, worse if anything.

"Oh, you'll be all right in a day or two, so don't give up the ship!"

"No, I'll hold on to the ship if I can, but by thunder, Captain, I've given up about everything else!"—Epoch.

IT is the sober man that hath no trouble with his night key.

A Lilliputian Railroad.

A wonderful railroad is the one which connects the towns of Bedford and Bellevue, Mass. It is nine miles in length, and is probably as unique as any on the globe. The distance is not so astonishing, except when the gauge of ten inches is considered.

In the short distance traversed by the pigmy it crosses eleven streams, with bridges from five to thirty-five feet in height. The rails weigh but twenty pounds to the yard, about the size of those used in the mines of Missouri and Illinois. The cars and engines are constructed so as to be very near the ground, insuring great safety. The cars are provided with single seats on each side of the aisle.

The car itself weighs but four tons, the weight of an ordinary car being twenty to twenty-six tons. The engine without the tender weighs seven tons, and runs with two passenger or freight cars at the rate of ten miles an hour. There is a smaller railroad than this in the United States—the one in Bucks County, Pennsylvania—but it is only kept as an expensive toy by a rich farmer, who has made a fortune out of oil.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Entirely Helpless to Health.

The above statement made by Mrs. S. H. Ford, wife of Gen. Ford, can be vouched for by nearly the entire population of Corunna, Mich., her home for years. She was for two years a terrible sufferer from rheumatism, being confined to her bed most of the time, her feet and limbs being so badly swollen she could scarcely move. She was induced to try a bottle of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup. It helped her, and two additional bottles entirely cured her. To-day she is a well woman.

Two Kinds of Girls.

There are two kinds of girls. One is the kind that appears better abroad—the girls that are good for parties, rides, visits, balls, etc., and whose chief delight are in such things; the other is that kind which appears better at home—the girls that are useful and cheerful in the dinning-room, the sick room, and all the precincts of home. They differ widely in character. One is a moth, consuming everything about her; the other is a sunbeam, inspiring life and gladness all along her pathway. Now, it does not necessarily follow that there should be two classes of girls. A slight education will modify both a little and unite their good qualities in one.—Catholic Standard.

$500. REWARD
COPYRIGHT, 1889.

So confident are the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy in their ability to cure Chronic Catarrh in the Head, no matter how bad or of how long standing, that they offer, in good faith, the above reward, for a case which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.

Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness, difficulty of clearing throat, expectoration of offensive matter; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Thousands of cases result in consumption, and end in the grave.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. This infallible remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs, "creams" and strong caustic solutions with which the public have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces perfect and permanent cures of the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic. It removes offensive breath, loss or impairment of the sense of taste, smell or hearing, watering or weak eyes, and impaired memory, when caused by the violence of Catarrh, as they all frequently are. Sold by druggists, at 50 cents. Manufactured by WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

That Tired Feeling

Has never been more prevalent or more prostrating than now. The winter has been mild and unhealthful, influenza epidemic and fevers have visited nearly all our homes, leaving about everybody in a weak, tired-out, languid condition. The usefulness of Hood's Sarsaparilla is thus made greater than ever, for it is absolutely unequaled as a building-up, strengthening medicine. Try it and you will realize its recuperative powers.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has removed my grip. I am 65 years of age and was all run down and discouraged. I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla and on looking myself over find that I am much better, in fact quite a chap. Of course the medicine will not discount my years, but it comes nearer to it than anything else." CHARLES R. [illegible], [illegible], Mass.

The marked benefit which people in run down or weakened state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but possessing just those elements which the system needs and readily seizes.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Builds up in a perfectly natural way, all the weakened parts, acts upon the blood as a purifier and vitalizer, and assists to healthy action those important organs, the kidneys and liver.

"My daughter received much benefit from the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla as an excellent tonic after a protracted attack of bronchial pneumonia." REV. F. H. ADAMS, New Hartford, Conn.

That Tired Feeling

"Last spring I was completely fagged out. My strength left me and I felt sick and miserable all the time, so that I could hardly attend to my business. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it cured me. There is nothing like it." R. C. [illegible], Editor Enterprise, Belleville, Mich.

Harrison Thou Art the Man.

(Chicago Herald.)

Silas M. Shepard, a prominent and entirely trustworthy Indianapolis republican, has been saying some very tart things about President Harrison. Soon after the last presidential contest Shepard's brother was indicted in the district court of United States for bribery in connection with the election, but the indictment had hardly been found before District Attorney Chambers had it dismissed. Mr. Shepard, in a recent interview, has given a remarkably straightforward and realistic statement of Chambers' action, and in doing so has seriously compromised General Michener and President Harrison himself. The following is his narrative:

When my brother was indicted I went up to Indianapolis and had a talk with Michener and United States Attorney Chambers. I stated explicitly that other hearts would ache before the matter was over, and turning to Attorney-General Michener, I said: 'If my brother is guilty of bribery, so am I, for I gave him the money, knowing for just what purpose it was to be used. And, more than that, President Harrison was in the room at the Dennison at the time we were talking about the matter, and I left the room with the remark: 'Probably you gentleman have some business to transact that I have no business to see.' If my brother is guilty, Harrison, you and I too are guilty, and I will make it warm for everybody concerned in this transaction if this prosecution goes on." I went home and the next thing I heard was that the indictment had been dismissed.

This is in line with the public conception of Mr. Harrison's attitude toward the Dudleyites. As the chief beneficiary of the latest Indiana purchase, the President cannot be held guiltless of participation in and knowledge of the methods used to "save" the state. He occupied too high and too important a place in his party organization to be ignorant of that party's inner workings. Perhaps we shall soon get at the whole truth.

Court Expenses.

Too many people think all the expense of our county goes out through the commissioners. Such is not the case. Many items of expense are provided for by the law, and are paid without consulting the board. Among these are the court expenses. These are often quite large, sometimes larger than necessary in a given case, and sometimes as in the case against a man last week, for shooting a rabbit, they should not be brought into court at all, but should be settled elsewhere. But the court officers are not to blame, as far as we know, so much as the people who make the cases. This should be kept in mind when we are disposed to complain, for as in ditch matters, most of the expense is caused by the people who demand the work and petition for it. However we give the general items of expense for the last, or January term.

Petit jury	$ 505 10
Grand jury	141 90
Riding bailiffs	141 50
Criminals	16 00
Printing	53 50
Jury commissioners	54 00
Clerk of court	159 25
Sheriff	95 50
Reporter	67 50
Meals for jury	13 00
Court room and grand jury bailiffs	61 50
Total	$1308 75

Of course this does not include many other items of expense that must necessarily be made, a part of which eventually comes out of the parties at law.

Kokomo Dispatch: The democrats throughout Indiana will receive with satisfaction the announcement of the candidacy of the Hon. A G. Smith, of North Vernon, for Attorney General, subject to the coming state convention. Green Smith needs no introduction to the Hoosier democracy, for who does not remember his courageous and stalwart democracy during the stormy scenes attending the session of the legislature that elected the Hon. David Turpie United States Senator over Benjamin Harrison two years ago? Green Smith is an able lawyer, an ex-state senator and acting lieutenant governor, a good speaker, and a big hearted, whole souled gentleman. He is competent, worthy, and popular with the masses. If nominated he would awaken enthusiasm all along the line.

Don't Be Humbugged.

The way the other fellow does.

You will find that the newspapers are full of great slaughter advertisements, giving you 1-3 or 1-2 off, trying to make you believe that they are going to give something for nothing. No house can afford to offer such discounts and do it in the square, straight forward honorable way. You know as well as we do, that these fellows play a confidence game. Either they rob people terribly most of the season or they fib it unmercifully at this stage, or both. As a rule it is both. What reliance can you place on such dealers? What can you expect from the deceptive goods they handle? Take a detective with you when you go to such places, the odds are against you every time.

We hope you don't place stock in this moss grown theory. The annals of trade prove that there is only one sure foundation for permanent success, and that is actual merit in merchandise. Good clothing, substantial fabric, thorough workmanship, style and fit, are the advertisements which make TRADE and keep IT.

Our way: Goods marked in plain figures and one price to all. Where a child can buy as cheap as a man that weighs a ton. Every garment guaranteed to you as represented, or money refunded.

Fifty Spasms a Day.

Had Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., lived two thousand years ago she would have been thought possessed by evil spirits. She was subject to nervous prostration, headaches dizziness, backache, palpitation and forty or fifty spasms a day. Though having been treated by eight physicians for years without success, she was permanently cured by one bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. A trial bottle of this new and wonderful medicine, and a finely illustrated treatise free at F. E. Davenporte's drug store, who recommends and guarantees it. 1

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

The New Election Laws.

Now and then we hear of a man who believes we have to vote this spring under the new, or "Australian" election law. No, we don't The new election law that is now in force, is the one intended to punish bribery and corrupt practices. But it has nothing to do with the manner of conducting election. We vote in the old way at the township elections this spring, as well as at the corporation elections in the various towns. So don't forget it. But next November at the state and county election we vote under the Australian law. This law goes into effect the first day of June. That will then give us two months to get ready for it, and learn the changes it makes in the method of casting ballots. The changes are not so great but that we can soon get used to them. Remember then, the new law goes into effect June 1, 1890.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

MR. W. P. JOHNSON, ATLANTA, GA.

Whose picture adorns the head of this column, is an extensive coal and wood dealer.

He said lately: "My business necessitates a good deal of exposure upon me, and last winter, owing to this fact, I was attacked with a very severe case of inflammatory rheumatism.

"What I suffered from this dread disease can better be imagined than described.

"I did everything I could to cure myself. I tried every means in my power and every remedy left me as bad or worse than I was before. I could not raise my hand to my head, and it looked as if, even if I were rid of the disease, its effects would CRIPPLE ME FOR LIFE.

"About four weeks ago I was persuaded to try Hunnicutt's Rheumatic Cure, and my relief was almost instantaneous. I am now on my fourth bottle, and I am as sound a man as there is in Georgia.

Information Given.

Some one in the Butler Record, who signs himself "Subscriber," asks for information about what we said of the flag of the United States being driven off the ocean. He says: "I would ask the COURIER what he means about putting a flag on a few isolated school houses in the south." We said nothing about school houses in the south. We spoke of school houses back in the country anywhere. As to what we meant, we made it plain at the time, and if the writer is not, as we suspect, ashamed to give his name, we will send him a copy of the article. We merely ridiculed the idea of straining at a gnat, by advocating the putting of a flag on obscure school houses, while the same persons had always favored the plan of driving our flag from the high seas. And here he asks again: "What do you mean by asserting that the republican party has driven all the flags from off the bosom of the ocean?" Again he misquotes. We did not say "all flags." We said the American flag. That is the only flag we care for. And again, in this case, we meant just what we said. Is it possible, that any DeKalb county citizen is so ignorant that he don't know that our flag has been driven from the seas? When Blaine returned from Europe two years ago, he had to come under a foreign flag. About four years ago, Gen. Lew. Wallace gave a lecture at Ft. Wayne. He had been minister to Turkey, four years. He said he had gone abroad and returned, in a ship with a foreign flag, and that in all the time he was at Constantinople, he did not see the American flag more than two or three times, though the spacious harbor, the "Golden Horn" was crowded with the "flags of all nations," except ours. We will give in brief, the cause of this. When the republican party came into power, about thirty years ago, we stood second in point of foreign commerce, among all the great nations of the world, only Great Britain being ahead. Now, we are nowhere. Even the little, dirty kingdom of the Sandwich Islands, can boast of more flags in foreign seas than can the great Republic of the United States. The cause is bad laws made by republican policy. A man who wants to go into trade with other countries finds he can buy his ship abroad about a third cheaper than he can here. But a law was made, that if he does buy such a ship, he can't fly the American flag. So he gets the King of the Sandwich Islands, or the negro government of Hayti, to let him take out papers under them. Then of course, he sails under their flag. Grand for an American, isn't it? If he buys an old vessel and repairs it, he can only use our flag, if his repairs are half the original cost. There has not been a year in thirty but the republican party had it in its power to change this state of things, but it would not. By allowing our people to purchase ships abroad, would have ended the trouble. Or by taking the duty off the things largely used in ship building, would have enabled our own ship builders to make vessels as cheaply as they can abroad, and that would have ended it. But no, "we will not give up any of our protective system" say the republicans. We hope Subscriber understands this. He wants us to be "explicit," as mere statements may not be true." Quite complimentary indeed! If he is as ignorant as he seems to be, he could not tell whether a statement is true or not. However, we wish to impress on his mind, that the COURIER does not make statements unless it has the facts to back them up. And besides, we are always willing to give the "subscribers" of republican papers, that information, they evidently cannot secure at home.

Rheumatism,

BEING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectually cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and no other, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.

"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H.

Union Township Caucus.

The democrats of Union township met in Ensley's Hall, Saturday, March 22, at 3 p. m., and were called to order by J. F. Aber, committeeman. On motion of D. D. Moody, Mr. Aber was made president of the meeting, and on motion of W. H. Dills, Cal. Husselman was made secretary. W. B. Brown offered a resolution that we reverse the usual order of nominations, and begin with committeemen, then constables, then justices, then assessor, and finally trustee. Carried. For the north precinct, Geo. Grund for town and Harry Reed for the country, were made committeemen; and in the south precinct, Ezra Ensley, and D. T. Smith were selected for the same positions, all unanimously. After some discussion, the meeting decided that the nomination of road supervisors should be left to the people of the country, who could meet as soon as the general caucus had adjourned. Nominations were then declared in order. It was decided that in voting for constables and justices, each ballot should have two names, and that the two that received the highest vote, should be declared nominated. Samuel McAnally, G. W. Link and L. S. Stoner were named for constables; S. W. Ralston, Jacob Walborn and John Harris for justices; O. P. Myers, John Treesh and H. A. Winslow for assessors; and R. S. S. Reed for trustee. D. T. Smith and W. B. Brown were appointed tellers. There being no opposition to Mr. Reed, he was nominated by acclamation. The vote for constables, showed: Stoner, 81; Link, 80; McAnally, 41. Stoner and Link were declared the nominees. For justices, the vote stood, Harris, 86; Ralston, 78; Walborn, 45. Harris and Ralston were declared nominated. Mr. Treesh declined to run for assessor and his name was withdrawn. So the vote between Myers and Winslow was, Myers, 73, and Winslow, 42, and Myers was declared nominated. After a stirring speech by the chairman, the meeting adjourned. The country voters, or a part of them remained, and nominated for supervisors, A. J. Carmer, H. J. Luce and H. H. Cupp for the three districts. The meeting then adjourned. All seemed satisfied that we have a strong ticket.

Township Tickets.

Several townships held caucuses last Saturday, March 22, and nominated democratic candidates. We give such as have been sent in.

UNION.

For trustee, R. S. S. Reed; for assessor, O. P. Myers; for justices, S. W. Ralston and John Harris; constables, G. W. Link and L. S. Stoner; supervisors, A. J. Carmer, H. J. Luce and H. H. Cupp.

SMITHFIELD.

For trustee, James O. Blake; Assessor, Wm. F. Till; Justices, A. M. Barnes and Eli Walker; Constables Alvin Forney and Solomon Link; Supervisors, John Penick, P. J. Albright, Hiram Brand, John Kiplinger. Douglas Kelly, was made committeeman.

BUTLER TOWNSHIP.

For trustee, Alex. Baltz; assessor, Daniel Heitz; justices, M. L. Hoffman, and David Gump; constables, Daniel Terry and Wm. Jackson. John Stonestreet was chosen committeeman.

CONCORD

For trustee, Byron A. Woodcox; assessor, Moses Perry; justices, J. F. Walker, Lewis Beery; constables, John Springer and John Scott; supervisors, Jacob Sechler, Thos. Ricketts, James [illegible], Jerry Erwin, James Hart, David Wasson.

NOTES.

Newville township democrats are to hold their caucus Saturday of this week. March 29.

Smithfield has a splendid ticket, and it will no doubt go through in good style. The democrats there, see the value of harmony, and have settled down to business. Good.

The democrats of Concord write: "The caucus at St. Joe, was the largest ever held in the township, and the best of feeling prevailed. All feel confident of a democratic victory. John Moody was selected committeeman for the south precinct and Frank Barney for the north. Wm. Simanton was chairman of the caucus and C. H. Brown secretary."

The democrats of Auburn have put up a good ticket, one that deserves a big vote and a big majority. Reed has made us a splendid trustee, Myers will be a good assessor; S. W. Ralston has proved an able justice, and Harris will be as good. Link and Stoner have both had abundant experience as constables, and have given good satisfaction. Carmer, Cupp, and Luce, have all been faithful and intelligent road supervisors. What better ticket could we ask for?

Butler township has done a wise thing, and selected a number one ticket. There had been some difference among the democrats there, and they had taken opposite views, in all honesty, we suppose. Now, they have a ticket made up of men on both sides, and there is no reason why any one should fail to support it. It appears as if both parties had made some steps toward a friendly solution of the difficulty. We think that right, and earnestly ask every democrat to stand by the men nominated. We have faith enough in them to believe they will.

DANGER.

The Ohio River Continues to Rise at Cincinnati and Many Streets Are Flooded.

A Cincinnati special, dated the 25th inst., says: At 10 o'clock this morning the Ohio River measured 56 feet 10 inches, and was rising at the rate of two inches an hour. Even with no more rain a 60-foot river seems inevitable, but with the cloudy sky and the mild temperature the outlook for more rain puts a most serious aspect on affairs along this mighty stream. Within an hour it will have passed the extreme point of the flood of a few weeks ago. The river is rising at all points below Pittsburgh. There is a modicum of satisfaction in the fact that the Kanawha River is falling both at Hinton and at Charleston, but the Little Kanawha River is higher than ever known. Here the most active work is in progress to remove goods from the narrow strip of the river front which is subject to overflow. Cellars have already been vacated, and first floors in many houses will soon be invaded by the flood. The experience of 1888, when the river reached 66 feet 4 inches, and of 1884, when the highest flood ever known measured 71 feet ¾ inch, shows that very little damage may be expected to brick and stone structures in Cincinnati. The few that crumbled then have since been replaced by more substantial foundations. Of course all wooden buildings must float but there are comparatively few of these that are within the flood territory. Many families in the tenement houses and cottages along the river front will be compelled to go into upper stories or vacate their quarters entirely. All the railroads except the Chesapeake and Ohio and the Kentucky Central have been compelled to abandon the Central Union Depot, and to establish temporary depots at points which can be reached. Mill Creek Valley is again a lake; and for the second time the gardeners find their spring work destroyed by the water. Railroad freight traffic is greatly interrupted, and on some roads must cease to-day within the city limits. Express goods will be carried so long as trains can get within hauling distance. In 1884, the nearest depot from the north was Ludlow Grove and Chester Park, which points were reached by canal boats. It is not expected that such an arrangement will be necessary this time, but all depends on the amount of rain-fall within the next few days.

Covington and Newport are cut off from the city now, so far as street-car traffic is concerned. The ferries also are obliged to stop because they can not find landing points.

Kilrain Out of Jail.

A dispatch from Richburg, Miss., says: Theoretically Jake Kilrain is a prisoner serving out a two months' sentence for an assault committed on one John L. Sullivan in Marion County; practically he is enjoying full liberty and the general hospitality of a sub-jailer. When Jake left this city for Columbia, the county seat of Marion, in company with Charles W. Rich, it was with the belief that the efforts of his friends to secure his release under the prison contract system had been futile. Jake was blue and so was Rich. The latter had conceived a warm friendship for the Baltimore pugilist and said he would keep Jake out of jail if it cost $1,000. It is understood that he paid the county a large sum for the prisoner's services.

Decisions of the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the judgment of the circuit from the eastern district of Virginia, granting a writ of habeas corpus to Wilson Loney, convicted in one of the State courts, of perjury. Loney, it was alleged, swore falsely in giving, before a notary public, testimony to be used in the Virginia contested election case of Weddell vs. Wise, from the Richmond district. The court says though notaries public are State officers, yet the testimony given in Congressional contested election cases is given in obedience to the laws of the United States and not of the State. This being the case, the accused should have been tried before a federal court and not before a State court.

Keep Out of Behring's Sea.

The President has issued a proclamation warning all persons against entering the waters of the Behring Sea within the dominion of the United States for the purpose of violating the provisions of section 1,956 of the revised statutes, which relate to the killing of otter, mink, marten, sable, or fur seal or other fur-bearing animals within the limits of Alaskan Territory or the waters thereof.

A Fatal Explosion.

A saw-mill boiler at Claypool's mills eight miles east of Newark, O., exploded. Engineer William Matthews was fatally injured. Several others were hurt.

Killed a Conductor.

Cecil M. English, a St. Louis discharged street car conductor, shot and killed James A. Fitzgerald, a conductor in charge of a west-bound car on Washington avenue. He was arrested.

Death of a Sheriff.

Perry Lewton, Sheriff of Adams County, Ind., died of consumption. Dr. C. A. Jelleff, Coroner, succeeds him.

A Loss to Science.

The Botanical laboratory at Lansing, Mich., burned. Dr. Beals' library and manuscripts were saved. The loss to science cannot be estimated.

TROOPS IN THE STRIP.

Uncle Sam's Warriors Start on the War-Path After Lagging Cherokee Boomers.

A special from Guthrie, I. T., dated the 20th inst., says: The patrol of the Cherokee strip by forces of the United States army began to-day. Gen. Merritt, commanding the department of the Missouri, issued orders to the effect early yesterday morning, and all day yesterday and a part of to-day troops of cavalry were on the march to this place. The forces included in the order were as follows: Troop G, fifty men, from Fort Reno, Capt. E. M. Hays, commanding; troop K, sixty men, from Fort Reno, Capt. A. E. Woodson, commanding; troop F, fifty men, from Fort Supply, Capt. George H. Paddock, commanding; troop I, forty men, from Fort Supply, Lieut. Andrews, commanding. These troops were massed at this point this morning and from here will march to four different points equi-distant from one another along the southern boundary of the strip. Thence they will march in squads covering as much ground as possible north through the strip, notifying the settlers who now remain of the President's notice, and forcibly evicting those who refuse to go voluntarily. After the full width of the strip has been thus patrolled the troops will return southward to different points in the strip, establish military stations and guard the land from invasion until it shall be legally opened to settlement by act of Congress and Presidential Proclamation. Troop I will return to Keystone, troop F to Ponca, troop G to Pond Creek and troop K to a point fifteen miles south of Kiowa. It is not expected that the military will encounter any resistance, for the settlers who remain are very few and seem peaceably inclined.

GENERAL CROOK DEAD.

The Great Indian Fighter Suddenly Called.

A special from Chicago, dated the 22d inst., says: Gen. George Crook, commander of the department of the Missouri, expired suddenly at the Grand Pacific Hotel at 7:15 Friday morning. Heart-failure is said to have caused his death.

The news of his death was a great surprise, as it was supposed that the General was in the very best of health.

The shock was all the more severe because Gen. Crook had been apparently in the best of health and spirits up to the moment he had retired the previous night. All day Tuesday he was at his desk at the army headquarters, performing his usual labor and directing the affairs of the division of the Missouri, of which he was the commander. He was in his usual happy frame of mind and wore his old-time smile as he greeted his friends. Thursday night, with his wife and her sister, Mrs. Reed, of Oakland, Md., he attended a small social gathering at the home of a friend, and after his return to the hotel chatted merrily in the corridor with some acquaintances. When he arose Friday morning he stepped at once into an adjoining room, as was his habit, to exercise with Indian clubs, dumb-bells, and other gymnastic devices, before putting on his clothes.

As Gen. Crook walked in the little gymnasium he called to his wife. He spoke quickly and Mrs. Crook jumped hastily from the bed. She ran into the room to find her husband had fallen to the floor.

Mrs. Crook called to her husband as she leaned over the inanimate body. Receiving no response she screamed, and, running to the door, called for aid. A moment later a score of guests and employes of the hotel were there in response to Mrs. Crook's repeated calls. The house physician was present almost instantly, but he saw at the first glance that Gen. Crook was already dead.

Major Ely McClellan, the army surgeon had already been summoned from headquarters, and he arrived with all haste possible, only to find that it was true that Gen. Crook was beyond medical aid.

The news was broken gently to Mrs. Crook and Mrs. Reed, who were led to the apartments of sympathizing lady friends. Maj. McClellan gave orders that no one but friends be permitted to see either of the ladies, and he at once telephoned Adjt. Gen. Williams, to whom he reported the facts, and who at once telegraphed to Secretary of War Proctor.

The cause of Gen. Crook's death was heart failure resulting from indigestion. He has been troubled in this way for many years.

Adjt. Gen. Williams, who assumed command immediately after Gen. Crook's death, has charge of the arrangements for the funeral. He is in communication with Secretary of War Proctor. It is Mrs. Crook's desire that the body be taken to Oakland, Md., for burial and her request has been forwarded to the Secretary.

CHIEF MAYES TO HIS PEOPLE.

Cherokees Informed That the Prospects for a Profitable Sale of Their Lands to the Government Is Good.

The latest information from the Cherokee Nation is that Chief Mayes, who is now in Washington in the interest of his people, has sent back home dispatches and letters, which say that the recent invasion of the Cherokee strip by the boomers and their destruction of the grass and other property thereon by fire, is having, with Congressmen and other United States officials in Washington, the effect of strengthening the cause of the Cherokees as regards the sale of these lands. He expresses the opinion that commissioners will be authorized to make the Cherokees and offer of a sum much in advance of $1,25 per acre, and nearer the approximate value, in which event he does not say what his own actions will be, but implies that the whole question will be laid before the Cherokee people for their action. He further says the cattlemen have obtained the service of one of the ablest law firms in Washington, who will represent them, and that the Cherokees ought to do likewise and carry their grievance to the court of the United States.

A THIRD CRASH.

The Pulling Down of a Dangerous Wall Starts a Fresh Fire, and It Rages Until After Midnight.

An Indianapolis special, dated the 20th inst., says: About 1 o'clock this afternoon the east wall of the Becker Block, adjoining the burned Bowen-Merrill building crushed down on top of the ruins of Monday evening's fire. For a time the wildest rumors of disaster were afloat, but after a full investigation it was learned that but two men had been hurt, though many had narrow escapes. Those injured were but slightly hurt. After the crash Mayor Sullivan inspected the ruins and ordered that the front wall of the Bowen-Merrill building be torn down. This was done and a half hour later the Becker building, a narrow four story structure occupied by a notion store, fell down in a heap. Then the flames broke out again in the ruins and up to 10 o'clock to-night have not been wholly extinguished, though a foot of water has been poured into the wreckage. There is no fear of further loss of life, though the three-story stone front building occupied by George W. Sloan, druggist, is regarded as unsafe, and there are fears that the dry goods house of H. P. Wasson may also succumb.

BLOWN TO FRAGMENTS.

Wagon-Load of Dynamite Explodes—The Driver's Remains Are Scattered Through the Fields.

A dynamite explosion occurred a few miles northwest of Winchester, Ind. A young married man named A. A. Bara, who has been engaged recently by the Electric Light Company, hired a two-horse rig and started to Camden, a village in Jay County, with about forty pounds of dynamite for the purpose of shooting a gas well, having previously deposited the deadly explosive a short distance from the route. When about four miles out the explosion took place. The unfortunate man was blown to atoms, portions of his remains in small quantities were scattered in every direction, the vehicle was blown to splinters, and the horses so fearfully injured that they will have to be killed. The concussion was felt at all the neighboring towns for miles away. Buildings in Winchester shook from bottom to top, and many mistook it for the shock of an earthquake. The unfortunate man's home is at Lima, O. He is 21 years old, and was only married last Christmas day.

Labor Questions.

Pittsburgh special: The result of the conference of the Executive Council of the Federation of Labor in New York has just been made public here. Vice President William Martin says no one trade will be ordered to demand the eight hour law, nor to strike to enforce the demand. Mr. Martin said it was left entirely optional with each trade whether they desired or thought they could secure eight hours for a day's work. It will also be optional with the trades whether they will go into the question or not. That they will do so is shown by the replies sent to the federation from most all trades, saying they desired to and were able to win for eight hours. As it is left to the strongest trade, Pittsburgh and Wheeling districts will be represented by the carpenters, first asking a conference with the builders, and if refused, demanding it. New York and Boston stonemasons will probably make the first break in those cities, to be followed by other strong organizations.

Royalty at a Feast.

Berlin special: The Emperor gave a banquet at the Schloss in honor of the Prince of Wales. The Emperor escorted Princess Frederick Charles into the banquet hall and the Prince of Wales gave his arm to the Empress. Among those present were the new Chancellor, Gen. Von Caprivi, Count Von Moltke and Count Von Waldersee. The Emperor proposed a toast to the Prince of Wales, expressing himself as pleased to see a representative of the British army in the uniform of a regiment named after Bluecher, who, with the Duke of Wellington, had mingled German and British blood on the field of battle. He hoped that their fleets and their armies would still continue to co-operate in the cause of peace. The Prince responded in German, expressing his thanks, and drank to the health of the Emperor and the welfare of the Empire.

Uneasiness Throughout Europe.

The Detroit Journal has the following cablegram: From time to time there have several things leaked out which indicate there can be no doubt there would have been a rupture long before between Emperor William and Bismarck, but for two deterrent conditions. First, the Chancellor regarded himself, and was regarded, as the creator of the empire. Second, the burden of the debt of gratitude of the Hohenzollern family to Bismarck rested heavily on the young ruler, and he could not afford an issue with the Chancellor too soon, as it might place him in an unpleasant position before his subjects. Bismarck is for peace, and William wants to be a second Frederick the Great. That there will be a war between France and Germany there can be no doubt.

The Pettit Case.

Lafayette (Ind.) special: In the habeas corpus proceedings in the Pettit case Dr. J. W. Yeager, family physician, testified that when called to see Mrs. Pettit, she told him to treat her for strychnine poisoning. She said there was poison in a cup of tea given her by her husband. In making a report to the health office, Dr. Yeager said Mrs. Pettit's death was caused by acute malaria. As to the poisoning he did not want to harrow the feelings of the relatives by stating his suspicions. He said that moral considerations had been brought to bear on him since, and he had changed his opinion as to the cause of death. He asked Mr. Pettit why he did not refute the charges preferred against him at the Methodist Conference, and Pettit replied that he could not without involving another person.

An Indiana Diamond Case.

W. R. Caldwell, Manager of the South Bend Jewelry Company, is in jail at South Bend, Ind., under a charge of purloining $2,000 worth of jewelry from Gustavus Lohr, a diamond broker of Chicago. A Chicago detective arrested Caldwell, but through a mistake in the requisition papers he was released. Caldwell then caused the arrest of Lohr at Laporte, Ind., on a charge of false imprisonment, but afterward telegraphed the officer to release him. Caldwell was subsequently arrested and will be held to await the proper requisition papers. Caldwell says Lohr pawned the diamonds, and they were never redeemed.

Another Railroad Wreck.

On the Madison Division of the Northwestern road, at Lavelle, Wis., a vestibule train which left Chicago at 6 o'clock was late and had orders to meet passenger train No. 4, at Lavelle, instead of Union Center, the regular meeting point. While No. 4 was heading in on the side track the vestibule train came along at almost full speed and struck the rear end of the smoking car, derailing it, and tipping it over on the side. The locomotive then ran into the next passenger coach several feet. No one was killed outright, but nine persons were injured. An unknown woman was taken out unconscious.

Killed His Man.

E. B. McCurdy, a conductor on the south-bound Louisville and Nashville road, was shot and seriously wounded by a negro, Jake Daniels, and in turn the conductor shot and killed the negro. This happened on the train near Bay Minette, Ala. The negro refused to pay the fare demanded by the conductor and the latter tried to eject him, but the negro resisted, drew a pistol and fired, hitting the conductor in the right breast. The conductor then fired four times, hitting the negro each time, then stabbed him with a pocket-knife. The negro died almost instantly.

The Floods in the South.

The crevasses at Raleigh, La., and Offutts, Miss., are certainly likely to effect seriously the railroads in their respective vicinity. The Mississippi Valley Railroad, Riverside division, is now under water at Lamont, Miss., and the track is being staked dow and wired to the trees to prevent them from being washed away. The Offutts crevasse causes this overflow now 500 feet wide. Unless it is closed very soon, this crevasse will flood large portions of Washington, Sharkey and Issaquena counties, the garden of Yazoo, Miss., covering an immense area.

A Mine Fire.

Hurley (Wis.) special: The first serious mine fire in the history of the Gogebec iron range is in progress at Germania mine, with no prospect of extinguishment short of an enormous loss of property. Five men are known to have lost their lives, and this number may be increased by the discovery of the bodies of others when the wreck caused by the fire is cleared away. The loss will reach far into the thousands, and the extent can only be known when the mine is reopened. Two bodies have been recovered. The others are still in the mine.

Probable Murder on the Steamer Bostona

Archie Turner, a colored roustabout on the steamer Bostona, was shot and fatally wounded by a white roustabout named Baker. The trouble originated over the theft of a pair of pants. Baker claims self-defense. He hails from Stanton, Ky., and Turner's home is at Gallipolis. Baker is in Jail at Pomeroy, Ohio.

Discovered Both Parents Dead.

Mrs. Mary McTaggart, of Indianapolis, was found dead in her bed recently by her daughter, Mrs. Ol Stout. She was aged 74. It is a coincidence that Mrs. Stout found her father dead in the same room and under similar circumstances several years ago.

Tokens of Governors' Widows.

Rt. Rev. Father Bessoines, V. G., upon the occasion of celebrating the semi-centennial of his church work in Indiana, at Indianapolis, was remembered by Mrs. Gov. Hendricks, who sent him a check for $100, while Mrs. Gov. Morton presented him with a large crayon portrait of her distinguished husband, now dead, the same handsomely framed. Both of these ladies expressed their warmest sympathy for the good priest, whose life-work in this State is familiarly known to them.

The Germania Mine Disaster.

Ashland, (Wis.) special: The loss by the Germania mine fire is greater than at first estimated, as the men had just struck a body of rich ore just below the fifth level is shaft No. 2, which is ruined by caving. It is understood now that the fire started from a candle dropped by a miner coming up for supper at midnight. It is impossible to get down in the mine at present, and searching for the bodies is given up until the mine can be cleared of smoke and water.

Affairs in Berlin.

Berlin special: The National Gazette says that Gen. Von Caprivi, the new Chancellor, has also been appointed President of the Prussian Ministry. The Gazette says that Count Herbert Bismarck persists in resigning the post of Imperial Foreign Minister and that he will be succeeded by either Herr Von Radowitz, German Ambassador of Constantinople, or Count Von Hatzfeldt, German Ambassador of London.

Woman's Fiendish Work.

Nellie Davis, a colored woman of Florence, S. C., became angry with her 15-year-old adopted daughter because of some trivial act of disobedience, and while the child was asleep in a chair Nellie saturated her clothes with kerosene oil and set fire to them. The girl was horribly burned from head to foot, and died from the effects of her injuries in an hour. The woman is in jail and expresses no regret.

Crossed the Border to Wed.

Thaddeus W. Baum and Miss Mattie Conklin, two well-known young people living near Ashville, Ohio, were quietly married in Toronto, Canada, recently. They are first cousins, and as the laws of Ohio prohibit the marriage of persons so closely related, they journeyed to a foreign land to have the knot tied. The bride is a sister of Miss Mary Conklin, whose suicide a fews weeks ago created such surprise.

Fourteen Houses Demolished.

A destructive cyclone passed over the village of Edgemoor, near Chester, S. C. Fourteen houses were blown down. James Miller, colored, was killed and several persons seriously injured. The roof of the Georgia, Carolina and Northern depot was blown half a mile away. Robinson & Brothers' establishment, and Dickey's drug store were totally demolished. Edgewood's new church was also destroyed.

Child Heart-Broken.

For being reproved at school, Margaret, the 12-year-old daughter of Lewis Markwell, suicided at Hillsboro, Ky., by taking arsenic. She was corrected at school by her teacher the previous day, and considered the reproof a disgrace. The trouble so preyed on her mind that she took her life. She left a note addressed to a younger sister stating the cause of her suicide.

Killed the Wrong Person.

At Braidwood, Ill., Joseph Nodak shot and killed the 14-year-old daughter of his brother-in-law, Miss Statsa Sokoloski, instead of the intended victim, her father. Nodak was drunk and crept up to the window of Sokoloski's house and fired through the window, where he supposed his victim was sleeping, instantly killing his daughter. Nodak was arrested.

Railroad Wreck in New York.

The express freight train on the Ontario and Western Railroad was wrecked at Rockland, N. Y. The train broke in two there, and the second section ran into the first, sending the cars in all directions. One car plunged into the station, injuring the telegraph operator, Augustus Chase, of Walton. A brakeman was fatally injured and has since died.

Closed Its Doors.

An advance of 150 per cent. in the price of soda ash caused the Canton, Ohio Glass Company to close its doors. Work will be resumed soon to fill present orders, but if the price of soda ash is not reduced, the company will go out of business. The factory employs 150 men and has been running night and day for more than a year.

Wreck on the Clover Leaf.

A freight train on the Clover Leaf Railroad was wrecked by the breaking of a car truck near Russiaville, Ind. Three cars of merchandise were totally wrecked and others badly demolished. A tramp was riding in a grain car, one of the destroyed, but was picked out alive. The delay was not very great.

McAuliffe Wins.

The fight between Jack McAuliffe and Jimmie Carroll for a purse of $12,500, offered by the California Athletic Club, was won by the former in forty-seven rounds.

The frantic mother picked up her child a few moments later, while the engineer coolly climed back into the cab, as if saving babies from being smashed under the wheels of his engine was a part of his business.

—A case which has attracted more than ordinary interest has been on trial in the Circuit Court at South Bend, on a change of venue from Elkhart County. Two years ago, at Elkhart, in a quarrel between Rem Scott and Con Crowly, the latter was fatally stabbed by Scott, who barely escaped being lynched at the time. He was tried for murder, and sentenced to a term of years in State's prison. The widow of Crowly then brought suit against Scott for $10,000 damages for causing the death of her husband. Both sides employed the best legal talent, and the case was hotly contested. The jury brought in a verdict of $100 and costs in favor of the plaintiff. Scott being a non-resident of the State at the time the crime was committed was in his favor.

S. E. Williamson, a farmer, residing near Galena, has returned from Philadelphia, where he has been to look after his interest in the estate of his uncle, the late Isaac Williamson, the eccentric Williamson who died in that city a few months ago, leaving a vast estate, amassed by years of frugality and close attention to business. Under the will of his uncle, Mr. Williamson was bequeathed an annuity consisting of the interest on $60,000, there being a provision in the instrument that after bequests, amounting to about six million dollars were paid, he, together with other heirs, was to receive a certain portion of the residue. The estate has been found to amount to much more than the sum mentioned, and consequently Mr. Williamson and his co-heirs will receive a sum that will render him one of the wealthiest men in Floyd County. There are several other heirs who will come in for a share of the rich estate.

A Scout's Nerve.

Biedler, the famous Montana scout who recently died, was in camp at one time and was fertile of resource in danger. One time at Miles City he stepped to the door of a saloon to find himself within twenty inches of a muzzle of a 44-caliber revolver in the hand of a noted desperado, on whose trail the deputy had often camped.

"I'm goin' to blow the innards out of your skull, you vigilante hound," quoth the bad man.

"Not with that thing," said 'X' (the scout's pseudonym) in a conversational but semi-querulous tone. "It ain't cocked."

The bad man threw up the pistol to see if Biedler was right, and made the mistake of a life, which ended right there.—Chicago Herald.

Don't Go Off Before You Are Ready,

Particularly on a long journey. Be fully prepared. You cannot, if you permit us to say, unless you are accompanied with the travelers' and tourists' vade mecum, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and prevention of digestion. Against seasickness, malaria, cramps and colics, badly cooked or unwholesome food and brackish water, nervousness, increased by travel, chronic biliousness and constipation, the Bitters is a sovereign preventive. It imparts a relish for food not altogether to your tastes, and prevents it from disagreeing with you. Never was there such a capital thing for the unfortunate dyspeptic who stands in dread of the best cooked meal. Stomach troubles induced by ill-prepared viands aboard ship, on steamboats, and railroad hastily bolted at railway restaurants, are promptly relieved by the Bitters, which gives a quietus also to rheumatism, kidney troubles and chills.

No Test Required.

Patient (very loud)—I am so completely deaf that I can hardly hear a pistol shot!

Physician—Then I suppose there's no use in testing. (Writes on a slate.) I will have to test your power of hearing. Meet me downtown at the Stock Exchange a few minutes before three. I want to see whether you can hear the noise at the closing of the Exchange!

Patient (after having read this invitation)—No need of that, Doctor; that's where I got deaf!—Puck.

New and Superb Dining Car Outfit.

The dining cars just completed for the Great Rock Island Route, not only embody all the latest improvements in general use, but especial and distinctive features of excellence, which render them unapproachably superior to ordinary dining cars. They will be placed on the Rock Island Route west of the Missouri River on and after March 23, 1890, and will impart the crowning grace of perfection to its solid vestibule express trains, through dining car service between Chicago and Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo. The Rock Island is the only line that runs two vestibule express trains every afternoon from Chicago to Denver. It is not only the fast line, but it is also the favorite to and from all the Colorado roads, with elegant day coaches, Pullman sleepers, free reclining chair cars and the finest dining cars in the world.

The Hired Man Has His Day.

Mrs. Kirkus—How awfully rigid and dogmatic Dr. Canonicus has become since he was made a bishop.

Mr. Kirkus—Yes; there is no danger now of his receiving a request for his resignation from the parish!—Puck.

LIFE IN DEATH.

BY E. B. LATTA.

A dear, dead child in its casket lay,
And a rosebud sweet had been borne away
From a garden near, and at love's command
The stem was placed in the lifeless hand.

And when it came to the funeral hour,
The fragrant bud had become a flower;
And friends bereft, though their tears they shed,
The scene beheld, and were comforted.

The preacher's heart was so deeply stirred
By fact so strange that had thus occurred,
He said, in tones that were low and mild,
While standing near to the death-cold child:

"An opened rose in the lifeless hand!
A spirit flower where the angels stand!"

THE STORY OF A TERRIBLE EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF AN ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.

By F. W. HUME.

CHAPTER V—Continued.

"It will be still more so before it's done. I found out from Lydia Fenny that Sarschine discovered her lover was about to elope with Lady Balscombe, so went to his chamber to prevent it. She arrived too late, as Lord Calliston had gone down to Shoreham by the ten minutes past 9 train from London Bridge Station. Instead of Lord Calliston she found Mr. Desmond, his cousin, and I suppose he told her she was too late, for there was a row royal, and she left the chambers at 12 o'clock or thereabouts. Desmond followed shortly afterward, and that was the last seen of her alive, as far as I know."

"Why? Didn't Miss Sarschine return home when she discovered Calliston had gone off with Lady Balscombe?"

"I can't tell you, sir; nor what took her to Jermyn street, unless she got lost in the fog, or there was another man in the case."

"Eh? Nonsense! what other man could there have been?"

"Well," said Dowker slowly, "there was Mr. Desmond."

"Pshaw!" said Ellersby, springing to his feet. "What rubbish! I've known Myles Desmond all my life, and he's not the fellow to commit such a crime!"

"Yet I understand before you found the body you met Mr. Desmond coming up St. James street?"

Spencer Ellersby swung round in a rage.

"Confound you!" he said, in an angry tone, "do you want me to give evidence implicating my friend?"

Dowker did not lose his temper.

"No; but I want to know what took place between you on that night."

"Simply nothing. He was in a hurry and seemed annoyed at my stopping him, but that was only natural on such a beastly night. I asked him to call on me here, and also asked where Calliston was; he told me yachting, and then went off. Nothing more took place."

"Humph!" said Dowker, thoughtfully. "It was curious he should have been there at the time."

"I don't see it at all. If you ask him I've no doubt he'll give you a good account of himself. Besides, he had no motive in murdering Miss Sarschine—he is in love with Miss Penfold."

"I don't say he deliberately murdered her," said Dowker, quietly, "but there might have been an accident. You see this?" taking the Malay kriss out of his pocket and unwrapping the papers.

"Yes—a dagger. Is that the——" said Ellersby, recoiling.

"No; but I shrewdly suspect it's the neighbor to it. Down at Cleopatra Villa there were a lot of these sort of things hanging against the wall, arranged in a kind of pattern. One side of the pattern was incomplete, and I found out from Miss Fanny that Miss Sarschine had taken one of the daggers with a view to trying it on Calliston if he did not give up his design of eloping. She was mad with rage or she would never have thought of such an idea. Well—cannot you guess what follows?—she has the dagger with her—doubtless shows it to Myles Desmond during her stormy interview with him, and leaves the house in a rage. He follows her to try and take such a dangerous weapon from her—meets her in Jermyn street—struggles to get it, and in the scuffle wounds herself; consequently she dies, and Myles Desmond keeps quiet, lest he should be accused of murder."

"Seems possible enough," said Ellersby, resuming his seat, "but I doubt its truth. However, the only thing to be done is see Desmond, and find out what took place at Calliston's rooms. But tell me, what are you going to do with that other dagger?"

"I want to find out if it's poisoned," said Dowker, handling it gingerly. If it is it will show that the other weapon was the one with which the crime was committed."

"Will you allow me to look at it?" said Ellersby, stretching out his hand.

"Certainly," replied the detective, and rising to his feet he walked across to Ellersby to give him the dagger. Unluckily, however, just as he was handing it to him he stepped on Pickles, who with a growl of rage made a bite at his leg. In the sudden start Dowker let go the dagger, which fell upon Pickles' back, inflicting a slight wound.

The detective gave a yell as the bulldog gripped him, but Ellersby pulled Pickles off, and Dowker, hobbling to a chair, sat down to nurse his wounded leg. It was not much hurt, however, as Pickles had got a mouthful of trousers instead of flesh.

Alarmed as Dowker had been by the accident, he was not more alarmed than Ellersby, who sprang to his feet with an oath and rang the bell sharply.

"Confound it!" he said, furiously; "if that dagger is poisoned the dog will die. How could you be such a fool?"

"You'd be the same, sir, if a devil of a dog bit you," said Dowker, sulkily, not at all displeased at having the question of the dagger tested at once. "I'm very sorry."

"Sorry be hanged!" said Ellersby savagely. "I wouldn't lose that dog for a hundred pounds. Here," to the waiter that entered, "send for a doctor at once—don't lose time, confound you!" At which the astonished waiter vanished promptly.

Meanwhile all this time Pickles was lying down trying to lick his wound, and evidently wondering what all the fuss was about. Dowker watched him intently, and in a short time saw the dog was becoming drowsy. Ellersby picked up the dagger and was about to hurl it furiously back to Dowker, when the detective jumped up in alarm.

"For God's sake, don't!" he cried; "I believe it is poisoned—look!"

Ellersby looked and saw Pickles trying to rise to his feet. He evidently knew something was wrong with him, for he commenced to whine and a glaze came over his eyes. His master knelt down beside him and dried the blood off the wound with his handkerchief, but it was too late. The dog opened his jaws once or twice, tried to rise to his feet, staggered and fell over on his side, to all appearances dead. On seeing this Ellersby jumped to his feet and began to rage.

"The devil take you and your case!" he said furiously. "You've killed my dog."

"I'm very sorry, sir," said Dowker, crossing and picking up the dagger; "it was an accident."

"An expensive accident for me," said Ellersby, bitterly; at all events, it proves the dagger was poisoned."

"Yes," said Dowker, in a delighted tone; "so the crime must have been committed with the other weapon, for if one was poisoned, it's only common sense to assume the other was."

He had apparently quite forgotten the loss sustained by Ellersby, for there was no doubt the bulldog was quite dead.

That gentleman looked at him in disgust.

"Oh, go to the devil," he said irritably, "and thank your stars I don't make you pay for this."

Dowker murmured something about an accident, then, slipping the fatal dagger, once more covered in paper, into his pocket, he took his departure. On his way down he met the doctor coming up, and once outside, he was beside himself with joy at having proved the kriss to be poisonous.

"And now," he said, "I'll call and see Mr. Desmond."

CHAPTER VI.

A LITERARY ASPIRANT.

Primrose Crescent lies just off Tottenham Court Road, and though a short distance away the thoroughfare is full of noise and bustle, everything is comparatively silent in this crescent. Milk-carts are the most frequent vehicles, and occasionally a rakish-looking hansom makes its appearance, while ragged mendicants sometimes pay the neighborhood a visit and troll out lively ditties in ginger-cracked voices. The organ-grinder is not an unknown personage either, and his infernal machine may frequently be heard playing the latest music-hall melodies as he glances round in search of the humble brown.

There are a good many boarding-houses to be found in Primrose Crescent, where city clerks, literary aspirants, and coming actors are to be found. A touch of Bohemianism pervades the whole street, and perhaps in the future neat tablets let into the walls of the houses will inform posterity that Horatio Muggins, the celebrated poet, and Simon Mephison, the famous actor, resided there. But fame is as yet far from the quiet street, and the dwellers therein are still struggling upward or downward, as their inclinations may lead them.

Mrs. Mulgy was the landlady of one of these boarding-houses, and by dint of hard work and incessant watchfulness managed to keep the wolf from the door; but, alas, the wolf was never far off, and it took all Mrs. Mulgy's time to keep him at his distance. The basement of her mansion was devoted to the kitchen, the presiding deity of which was a pale, thin-looking servant, with a hungry eye and a deprecating manner, who answered to the name of Rondalina, which sounded well and cost nothing.

It was about 11 o'clock and Myles Desmond sat in his sitting-room scribbling an article for a society journal, called Asmodeus, published for the express purpose of unroofing people's houses and exposing to the world their private life. Not that Desmond did such a thing, he would have scorned to violate the sanctity of private life, but he wrote for all kinds of magazines and papers, and as Asmodeus paid well, he now and then wrote them a smart essay on existing evils, or a cynical social story.

He was a tall young man, with reddish hair and mustache, a clever, intellectual face, perhaps not actually good-looking, but a face that attracted attention, and when he chose to exert himself he could talk excellently on the current topics of the day. His breakfast lay on the table, untouched, he having only swallowed a cup of coffee and then pushed the tablecloth aside to make room for his papers.

Myles looked worn and haggard, as if he had been up all night, and every now and then his swift pen would stop as he pondered over some thought. There was a ring at the bell below, but he took no notice. This was followed shortly afterward by a knock at the door, and Rondalina glided in, saying a gentleman wished to see him.

"Show him in," said Myles, not looking up. "Wonder who it can be?" he muttered, as Rondalina went out; "hang those fellows, they won't even let me have the morning to myself."

When the door opened he glanced up and saw that the new comer was not a friend, but a tall, gray man whom he did not know. Myles paused with his pen in his hand, and waited for his visitor to speak, looking at him interrogatively meanwhile.

Mr. Dowker—for of course it was he—closed the door carefully, and advancing to the table introduced himself in two words:

"Dowker—detective!"

If Myles looked haggard before, he looked still more so now. His face grew pale, and he shot an inquiring glance at his visitor, who stood looking mournfully at him. Then, throwing down his pen in an irritable manner, he arose to his feet.

"Well, Mr. Dowker," he said a little nervously, "you want to see me?"

"I do—very particularly," replied Dowker, coolly taking a seat, "and believe you can guess what it's about."

Myles drew his brows together and shook his head.

"No. I'm afraid I can't," he said coldly.

"The Jermyn street murder."

Myles gave a kind of gasp, and turned away toward the mantelpiece, ostensibly to fill his pipe, but in reality to conceal his agitation.

"Well," he said, in an unsteady voice, "and what have I to do with it?"

"That's what I want to know," said Dowker, imperturbably.

Myles Desmond glanced keenly at him, lighted his pipe, resumed his seat at the table, and leaning his elbows thereon, stared coolly at the detective.

"You speak in riddles," he said quietly.

"Humph!" answered Dowker, meaningly; "perhaps you can guess them."

"Not till you explain them more fully," retorted Desmond.

It was evidently a duel between the men, and they both felt it to be so. Dowker wanted to find out something which Desmond knew, and Desmond on his side was equally determined to hold his tongue. The cleverest man would win in the end, so Dowker began the battle at once.

"The woman who was murdered was Lena Sarschine."

"Indeed!" said Desmond, with a stare of surprise. "May I ask how you know?"

"That is not the point," retorted Dowker quickly. "I have satisfied myself as to the identity of the murdered woman—you were the last person who saw her alive."

"Is that so?"

"Yes, at Lord Calliston's chambers, between 11 and 12 o'clock on Monday night."

"Who says I saw her?"

"Mrs. Povy."

Myles Desmond's lips curled.

"You seem to have obtained all your information beforehand," he said with a sneer; "perhaps you'll tell me what you want to know from me?"

"First—did you see Miss Sarschine on Monday?"

"Yes! I did, but in the afternoon, not at night."

"But Mrs. Povy said she called on you there on Monday night."

"Mrs. Povy is mistaken, I did not see her."

"Did you see anyone at that time?"

"That's my business."

"Pardon me," said Dowker ironically, "but it's mine also. You had better answer my questions or you may find yourself in an uncommonly awkward fix."

"Oh! So you mean to accuse me of Lena Sarschine's murder?"

"That depends," replied Dowker, ambiguously; "tell me what you did on Monday night?"

Myles thought a moment, and seeing his perilous position resolved to answer.

"I went to the Frivolity Theater, then to the office of the newspaper Hash and afterward——"

"Well?"

"I went along to Lord Calliston's rooms, about half-past ten."

"I thought so; and why did you go there?"

"Not to commit a crime," retorted Desmond, coolly, "but only to arrange some papers for my cousin—he had gone down to Shoreham by the 9:10 train."

"Did you see him off?"

"No."

"Then how do you know he went?"

"Because he said he was going."

"With Lady Balscombe?"

"I know nothing about that," said Desmond, coldly, "he went—as far as I know—by himself. I was at his chambers to arrange his papers, and after I had done so I left."

"Did no one call while you were there?"

"Yes," reluctantly.

"A lady?"

"Well, a woman," evasively.

"Miss Sarschine?"

"No, it was not Miss Sarschine; that I can swear to."

"Then who was it?"

"No one having anything to do with this case—a friend of my own."

"I must know the name."

"I refuse to tell you."

Both men looked steadily at one another, and then Dowker changed the subject.

"Why did you quarrel with your friend?"

"That is my business."

"Oh! And what time did your friend leave?"

"Shortly after 12."

"And you?"

"Went a few minutes afterward."

"You came home?"

"After a time—yes."

"Where did you go in the meantime?"

"I refuse to answer."

"Then I can tell you—down St. James street."

Myles Desmond uttered an oath, and asked, sharply:

"Who told you that?"

"No one; but Mr. Ellersby met you coming up shortly after 2 o'clock."

"Yes, I did meet him there."

"Why did you not go straight home?"

Desmond seemed to be trying to think of something—at last, with an effort, he said:

"I was afraid my friend might get lost in the fog, and followed her down St. James street, then I lost sight of her, and after a time came up St. James street, where I met Ellersby. I did not see my friend again, so I came home."

"You did not see your friend after she left Lord Calliston's chambers?"

"No, I did not!" said Desmond, with a sudden flush.

"That's a lie," thought Dowker, eying him sharply; then he said aloud:

"You have answered all my questions except the most important ones."

"I have answered all I intend to answer."

"Then you refuse to give me the name of the woman whom you saw on Monday night?"

"Yes!"

"Mrs. Povy is certain it was Miss Sarschine."

"As I said before, Mrs. Povy is mistaken."

"Do you know I can arrest you on suspicion?"

"You have no grounds to go upon."

"You were the person who last saw the deceased alive."

"Pardon me. I deny that I saw the deceased at all on that night."

"Mrs. Povy can prove it."

"Then let Mrs. Povy do so."

Dowker grew angry—the self-possession and coolness of this young man annoyed him—so he resolved for the present to temporize.

"Well, well, Mr. Desmond, I suppose you can give a good account of yourself on that night?"

"Certainly, to the proper authorities."

"Good morning," said Dowker, and walked out of the room. When he got into the street he strolled along a little way, thinking deeply.

"Confound him! He knows something," he said to himself, "and refuses to tell. I won't lose sight of him, so I must get that little devil, Flip, to look after him. I'll look him up now, and start him at once."

Just as he was about to put this resolution into execution he saw the door of the house he had just left open, and the servant came out with a piece of paper in her hand, which the keen-eyed detective saw was a telegraph form.

"Hullo!" said Dowker to himself. "I wonder if Mr. Desmond's sending that. I'll just find out."

Rondalina went along to the little postoffice at the end of the street, and turned in. Shortly afterward Dowker followed, and, going to the counter, took a telegraph form as if to send a telegram. The girl was attending to someone else, and Rondalina, with the telegram opened out before her, was waiting her turn. Dowker dexterously leaned across her to get a pen, and glanced rapidly at the telegram, which he read in a moment:

"Penfold, care of Balscombe, Park Lane:
"Meet me Marble Arch three o'clock.
"MYLES."

Dowker sent a fictitious telegram, and then strolled leisurely out.

"Hum!" he said, thoughtfully. "That's the girl he wants to marry. I wonder what are his reasons for seeing her today. I'd like to overhear their conversation. Can't go myself, as he knows me, so Flip will be the very person."

And Dowker departed to find Flip.

The Escurial.

One of the most remarkable structures in the world is the Escurial Palace, in Spain. It is an immense pile of buildings situated near Madrid, and has sometimes been called the eighth wonder of the world. It was built by Philip II., as a mausoleum, in accordance with the will of his father, and served at once many purposes, as a palace, convent, treasury, tomb-house, and museum. It was begun by Juan Bautista de Toledo in 1563, and finished in 1584. Its name, according to some, is derived from Escoriæ, the dross of iron mines which still exist here. The building was begun on the anniversary of St. Lawrence, and, according to the tradition, was made to assume the shape of a gridiron, the instrument on which that saint is recorded to have suffered martyrdom. This story, however, is now believed to be an invention of later date. The huge and somber structure, standing on an elevation of 2,700 feet above the level of the sea, is part and parcel of the mountain out of which it has been constructed. It is built of granite in the Doric order, and was till lately the country palace and mausoleum of the Spanish sovereigns, a part of the edifice being used for educational purposes. It is now, however, but a mere wreck, and being deprived of its monks and revenues, and exposed to the mountain storms, is constantly subject to injury.

Superstitions About Babies.

In Ireland a belt made with a woman's hair is placed about a child to keep harm away.

In Spain the infant's face is swept with a pine tree bough to bring good luck.

Garlic, bread, salt and steak are put into the cradle of a new-born babe in Holland.

In America the child is handed over to a nurse with instructions to "raise it on the bottle."

In Scotland it is said that to rock the empty cradle will insure the coming of other occupants for it.

The Grecian mother before putting the child in the cradle turns three times around before the fire while singing her favorite song, to ward off evil spirits.

The Turkish mother loads her child with amulets as soon as it is born. A small bit of mud well steeped in hot water prepared by precious charms is stuck on its forehead.

Welsh mothers put a pair of tongs or a knife in the cradle to insure the safety of their children; the knife is also used for the same purpose in some parts of England.

The London mother places a book under the head of the new-born infant that it may be quick at reading, and puts money into the first bath to guarantee its wealth in the future.

Roumanian mothers tie red ribbons around the ankles of their children to preserve them from harm, while Ethiopian mothers attach bits of asafœtida to the neck of their offspring.

At the birth of a child in Lower Brittany the neighboring women take it in charge, wash it, crack its joints and rub its head with oil to solder the cranium bones. It is then wrapped in a tight bundle, and its lids are anointed with brandy to make it a full Breton.

Among Vosges peasants children born at a new moon are supposed to have their tongues better hung than others, while those born at the last quarter are supposed to have less tongue, but better reasoning powers. A daughter born during the waxing moon is always precocious.

A Link with the Past.

My grandmother, whom I recollect clearly, died in 1850, in her ninetieth year, when I was seven years old. She, as my father frequently told me, had a clear recollection of grand-uncles of hers who were known to have fought at the battle of the Boyne. Thus, should I live out "three score years and ten, I shall be able to say in 1913, that I saw one who knew men who fought at the battle of the Boyne, thus linking the year 1690 with 1913, a period of nearly two and a quarter centuries, the century of Elizabeth to the, probably, past Victorian age.—London Standard.

ROBERT C. SCHENK, of Ohio, the well known soldier, politician and author of the much ridiculed "poker rules" died last week.

DETROIT will build a big bridge over the river to connect with the Canada side. It will be of iron, 2,000 feet long, and in two spans, 140 feet above high water.

THE Chicago World's Fair bill passed the House in its present form on Tuesday. It gives the date of beginning as April 1, 1893. The vote was 202 to 49 Judge McClellan voted for it as before.

CANDIDATES on the democratic side are looming up in Pennsylvania. Ex-Senator Wallace wants to try his chances for governor. But we can't see what use it will be with 75,000 majority against him

CONGRESS has no right to make laws to district states for congressional purposes. All the rights that congress can claim, are those given to it by the states when making the national constitution. And this right to boss the districting was not one of them. The bill should be killed so it will stay killed.

THE New York Star publishes a statement derived as it claims from official figures, that shows that Indiana mortgages have increased 135 millions in the last fourteen years. According to this our farmers are not getting rich under a high protective tariff, as fast as the protected nabobs of the eastern states are. It is this state of things that the Press attempted to excuse last week.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR JONES of New York, played Speaker Reed on the senate under his charge one day last week. He came into the chamber and finding but thirteen members "in sight" adjourned them to a given day, saying there was "not a quorum in sight." This turns on Reed's rulings, and is probably about as arbitrary. We suppose he thinks what is sauce for the goose is for the gander.

THE Record admits that those patent editorials are not original. Then why did not he and all other republican editors using them, give credit to the one who did write them? Everyone of these papers published them without a word of credit, thus giving their readers to believe they were original. They certainly could have written articles as good, for these patent things are very silly. We duly objected to the deception.

THE Butler Record is greatly mistaken when it claims to have answered our question as to whether the tariff does not raise prices. The Record has done no such thing. It has gone off to talking about this, that and the other—advising the farmers not to produce so much, and all that sort of thing, but it has not touched the question. "If the price is not enhanced how is the home manufacturer protected?" This is the very part he can't answer.

THE Lagrange Register kicks some on the appointment of editor Rerick, of the Standard, to be postmaster there. It can't see why Mr. Sefton who had 440 good republicans on his petition, should be set aside and the place given to Rerick, who had no backing. Bro. Hewitt must remember, however, that Harrison is a pronounced civil service reformer. See letter of acceptance, and read the party platform. These documents were made on purpose to be seen and to be read.

BLAIR'S Educational Steal Bill has been defeated in a republican senate. Let us all stop and chalk up a long white mark over one huge steal that has been sat on by that body. Seventy seven millions was a little bigger—just a trifle bigger, than they were used to. Two years ago it passed the senate by a vote of 39 to 20. This time it was lost by 31 to 37. As long as the House was democratic, it was sure of defeat there. But now with a republican House, people began to fear that the steal would be accomplished.

GEN. GEORGE CROOK, of the United States army, commander of the district of Missouri, died at Chicago, Friday morning of heart disease. He had just arisen, had bathed, and was practising with dumb bells when he fell over. He called to his wife to come to him, saying he could not breathe. This was the last he said and in a few minutes he ceased to breathe. He was appointed to his present position by Cleveland, when Gen. Terry went on the retired list. He was originally appointed to West Point, from Ohio, and became a leading figure in the rebellion. Later he has been largely engaged in fighting and controlling our western Indians. He made the great raid into Mexico when Geronimo, was captured. A great gap has been made in the now lessening row of the great soldiers of the age. His body was taken through here to Columbus, Ohio.

BISMARCK resigned his office of "president of the cabinet" for the young emperor William last week. Various reasons are given by the press reporters, but possibly not the right ones. Bismarck was popular with the old emperor, but with the son, who reigned but a few months, and the grandson, who is now on the throne, he has not got along as well. One reason assigned is that the emperor wants to keep up a military establishment that looked for war, while Bismarck favored a peace establishment. Another is, that the chancellor was getting too old, and another, that he could not agree with the emperor as to the settlement of the estates of one of the princes. At all events the "iron chancellor" is out after being a leader in his nation for thirty years. But no doubt the emperor will find other counselors as able, as honest and more scrupulous.

What a Farmer Must Know.

Recently a mechanic writing to the Chicago Herald, claimed that a farmer need not know much, or be at much expense to start in business. The Herald editor answered like this:

"A farmer must learn several trades and acquire much scientific knowledge He has as many purely mechanical operations to perform as the carpenter has He must know how to sharpen tools of all kinds, hang a gate and grindstone, repair harness, mend rakes and forks and put up fences. It requires more skill to build a hayrick or lay bundles of grain in a stack so they will shed the rain than to put a roof on a building. More kinds of machinery are now used on a farm than in any ordinary manufactory, and a field hand must understand the construction and use of all of them.

He must also know how and when to plant, cultivate and harvest twenty kinds of crops, each requiring different treatment. He must be a practical, if not a scientific botanist. He must know how to milk, take care of young stock, train colts and treat the diseases of domesticated animals. He must know how to shear sheep and put up their fleeces. He should know how to transplant seedlings, strike cuttings, prune grapevines, and do budding and grafting. He must know when and how to spray apple trees and potato vines in order to kill injurious insects, and understand the art of protecting vines from frost and young trees from animals. He must be a butcher, for he is required to slaughter steers, calves, pigs and sheep, and to cut up and cure their meat. This is a trade in itself. More skill is needed to lay drain tile than to side up the walls of a house or lay a floor."

It proved to be an incipient burglary in Mr. Linkenfelter's store This, together with the infant earthquake of the minister's morning talk slightly unnerved the congregation. And they sought the quiet of their homes, wondering whether March 23, 1890, was Sunday or not.

THE FAMOUS CLOTHIER

"SELLING AT COST."

NINE times out of ten that sign is a fraud. The public knows that selling at cost is not what the merchant is in business for. Loss puts nothing in his purse and he can't live on it. They smell a fly in the ointment and detect a colored gentleman in the fence. But about once in ten times that sign is genuine. There are many reasons why the questions of profit and money-making are for the time minor ones. The merchant does not expect to live on his loss. He has figured out that loss is inevitable on a certain class of goods and has wisely concluded to make a virtue of necessity, and lose voluntarily his profits rather than be compelled to lose more. It's like a captain with a ship richly freighted. A storm comes up; the vessel labors; the chances are that all will be lost. The captain orders up a part of the cargo and throws it overboard to save the rest. Just the position of the merchant. Here's been a bad season; hard winds; no chance of making port, now, with this line of goods. The dead stock is as heavy as lead. Out with it, then, at cost! Better lose profit than principle. Better sell at cost than hold at hazard. That's Laemle's fire. This has been, and is a GENUINE cost sale. Its not of choice, but of necessity; not to advertise, but to lighten the ship. It's a sale of only those goods which it would be a loss to carry over, both from the room they occupy and the money locked up in them. You can buy these goods just as cheap as you could buy them in the great wholesale ware-house, or factory. They will pay you from 25 to 33 per cent on any money you put into them, even if you have to keep them until next winter. You can keep one garment in camphor, where the Famous can't keep five hundred. Can you make bigger interest than 25 per cent? There is not much more to say. If you will come in and see them, and note the prices, you will buy them and remember that this is

A Genuine Cost Sale.

Although some of our WOULD-BE competitors cry, "don't go there, you will be humbugged, they are liars and thieves." This is because they carry a

A BIG

Chattel mortgage on their stock, and on account of this are bound hand and foot and are COMPELLED to buy of those holding the same, and at prices that no merchant, who can buy where he pleases, would be willing to pay. The consequence of all this, is just this: They cannot sell as low as we do, and will stop at nothing, to hinder you from buying where you can get the most value for your money. Yours Resp'y.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The current (April) number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly contains fully a dozen elaborately illustrated articles, any one of which is worth buying the magazine for. "The Senate and its Leaders" is discussed in bright, gossipy style by Frederick Daniel, and nearly a score of portraits and views accompany the text. Wm. Hosea Ballou describes the Tennessee Blue-grass region and its thoroughbred horses, together with the historic homes of President Polk and Andrew Jackson. The wonders of Edison's perfected phonograph and graphophone are brilliantly set forth in Arthur V. Abbott's paper entitled "A Voice from the Past," with the best pictures that have ever been published in connection with this subject. An excellent account of the Union League Club of Chicago, with its palatial new home, is furnished by Lieutenant Bassett. Alfred H. Guernsey's series of historical papers on Frederick the Great is continued; Sophie Worthington gives "Notes on Nuremberg"; Andrew S. Fuller studies "The Domestic Life of Prehistoric Americans" in their pottery ware; the celebration of the new Constitution of Japan is illustrated and described in an interesting letter; and the history of "The Umbrella" is as entertaining as it is seasonable. The short stories and poems of the number are by favorite magazine writers, including Lucy Hooper, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Charles Henry Webb, Francis B. Currie, and others.

T. J. Lindley, Hortonville, Hamilton county, fell down stairs at his home and was badly injured.

Two Doses.

J. W. Spellman, a prominent merchant of Elkhart, Ind., says: Two doses of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup completely cured my child of a severe attack of croup. I have used a great many different croup medicines but have never found any so efficient as Dr. Marshall's, which makes it a very neccessary article for the family. Yours,

"There's Many a Slip."

"Oh, Murder!" exclaimed Miss Julia Judd,
"As her rubber came off and stuck in the mud,
"I'd rather "La Grippe" by wetting my feet,
Than cut such a figure in walking the street."

"These 'gums have been going flipperty flop,
And I felt so ashamed, I thought I would drop,
"Now one has come off!" and then I heard her
Say lots of queer things: the loudest was 'Murder."

Then she went back as red as a lobster,
To stoop in her corsets was no light job, Sir!
She balanced herself on one little foot,
And struggled on 'tother her rubber to put.

"The plague on all rubbers!" the fair maid said,
"They're sure to come off, and I'm always in dread,
They'll do so when walking before a young man,
Who'll aid, sympathize, and flirt if he can.

All this made Flora McFlimsey feel grand,
For she had good rubbers of "Colchester" brand,
With "Adhesive Counters," that new style of shoe,
Which never slips off whatever you do.

So Flora walked on with pleasure and pride,
Her rubbers clung fast, did she jump, run, or slide
And advised Miss Julia as she came abreast her,
To try the new rubber made in "Colchester."

You can buy these most desirable goods at the price of the price of the common rubbers, at

The Eckhart Carriage Co. has recently received an order for five buggies from Phoenixville, Pa., the old home of Mr. Eckhart. Eckhart will soon make a trip to Pennsylvania in the interest of the Company and will no doubt find his trip very profitable to the Company.

The literary entertainment at the Junction Saturday evening was the finest given this season. The program was quite long and it took some time to execute it. But the best part of all was the drama in five acts entitled "Who was Guilty." Joe. Morr, as Guy Dorman, and Miss Wise as Lady Lillian were a complete success. The whole concluding with a gorgeous tableau, which gave a beautiful effect to the last act. That a literary is not a good thing is yet to be proven.

The Waterloo Cadets were called "into service" by a bogus telegram from this place, and were put to a good deal of trouble, all of which to an outsider looks like a piece of nonsense. If the most of these boys would give as much attention to the real business of life, as they do to playing soldier, they would be of more service to themselves and the country would be just as safe. We agree with the editor of the Press, that "this kind of soldiering needs a considerable modification in times of peace."

The Dispatch leads the other republican papers this year in the onslaught on "he debt." This week, we presume all their other papers will follow suit. They have no other stock in political trade and cannot rise to any higher level. We always welcome this fight on "the debt," as it gives us a good excuse to call attention to a few facts. First as to the "town debt." The last republican administration left this town so far in debt, that orders accumulated till they filled the desks of many business men, and became a "drug" on the market at 85 cents on the dollar. The Dispatch men were not here then, and of course no republican has informed them of this. It is the pleasant duty of the COURIER, to keep everybody well posted, and we throw out these few facts for their benefit. Besides the debt they left little or nothing to show for the money expended. We had no fire engine, not a single fire cistern, though they had some part of the hook and ladder business lying around somewhere, and thirty or forty old kerosine oil lamps, the posts of which were being used for hitching and finally for kindling wood. There were no street crossings but old wooden ones and the town generally had a kind of dead ripe appearance. We do not know that the board was dishonest. But they had evidently fooled away the money. Now, under several democratic administrations, we have redeemed all this paper, are left with a fine fire engine all paid for, about $2,500 worth of fire cisterns, a building for engine and council, a barn, a good team, valuable cement crossings, and much other material. Then, too, we have had good street lamps then gas lamps, and now electric lights. Our town orders sell close up to par, and the credit of the town is good. By all means let us have a dicussion of the town debt. We will also have some remarks about the other debts as we have occasion and space.

We see our friend, J. A. Marlow, county superintendent of Sullivan county, will be a candidate for state superintendent of instruction. That is the right way to do it. Promote a man who has already been in the work and is familiar with the duties of the office. We hope he will get the nomination and the election.

The Lagrange Democrat is still roasting their county superintendent who had been acting as agent for school supplies, in the face of the law, which forbids him to have anything to do with such things. The same superintendent was opposed, of course, to the new school books. His county has defied the law in this respect just as its superintendent did in the other. No doubt he has been to blame in both.

D. McNab, a former well known citiz of the Junction writes us from Durant, Miss. He is now located there in business and may remain some time. Durant is 240 miles north of New Orleans, near the center of the state. The weather there, he says, was clear and freezing at the time he wrote, and he does not think spring will come much earlier than it will here. It will be remembered he moved from here to Decatur, in this state where he has been till lately.

The Record says: "The COURIER has never been able to show that the tariff cheapens the prices of farm products, although we have an unanswered challenge for it to do so." Well, now, this is the first we have seen of this unanswered challenge." But we have been ready for it for some years The tariff does cheapen the price of farm products: (1) Republican papers including the Record, say it cheapens. (2) The action of a protective tariff destroys the farmer's market, and that makes him take lower prices or none at all. Before high tariff times we sold wheat, pork, etc., all over the world. Now France and Germany exclude our pork products, and levy a tax on all our wheat that comes into their country. All this impedes business, and in some cases destroys our market. Similar conditions confront us to a greater or less extent all over the world. Hence our products, kicked from one market to another, must be sold at reduced prices (3) This feeling of antagonism, which the tariff has created against American trade, has been so worked as to build up a counter production of articles that we formerly sold to them. This feeling built up the wheat raising in India, for the English made up their minds, they would get their wheat there, the country being under their control. Now they produce millions of cheap wheat and as the price of wheat is fixed in England, we have to come down completely to their terms (4) We see all over the United States, that farm products are at only about half what they used to be. Even the farm lands are getting cheaper. To what else but the tariff can we lay this, when we see the protected industries getting richer? Let the Record study these things.

The Higgins Concert Saturday evening was excellent. The company is much above the average, and our people were delighted. We are glad to say they were greeted with a full house. So they will be if they come again.

The Dispatch calls a county or state debt a "trust." Rather a poor definition. A trust, is a combination of manufacturers, producers, or dealers in a certain article, in order to control the out-put, production or price of the article in question. The Dispatch's party upholds trusts. Is it getting ready to defend debts?

Purdy, the well driver, has driven a new well for himself at his residence in the southeast part of town, and has got a fountain. The water flows out in a strong steam, and rises about four feet above the ground. The flow is by actual test over 200 gallons an hour. Auburn has many flowing wells, but this is by far, the strongest one we have struck. Mr. Purdy thinks he can now have all the cold water he needs.

There is no court this week, and several of our leading lawyers are over at Albion trying the noted Brandaberry will case, which comes up before Judge Adair this week. It is the case of Coffee vs Hamman, to break a part of the will. Hartman and Penfield are at Albion as the attorneys for Hamman, and Rose and Blair, are for Coffee, as well as a lawyer from Decatur. It will be a closely contested case, and legal men are taking a great interest in it.

The Dispatch would like to see county officers receive a fixed salary instead of fees So do a great many other people. And that would be the law to-day but for the great desire Benjamin Harrison had to be returned to the United States senate. A change in our constitution was under contemplation for some years, and finally passed both houses of our state assembly. Two years later it had to be submitted to the assembly again, and would no doubt have been passed the second time. Then it would have been submitted to the people, and no doubt, ratified. Then county officers could have been salaried. They would have been elected for four years, and several other good things could have been done. But Harrison wanted to be made senator, though he knew, as did everyone else, that the legislature showed 76 democrats and 74 republicans on joint ballot. He said all along he was going to be chosen in spite of the two majority against him. And so he got his friends to work for that end. A struggle came on that consumed the entire session. The democrats had a majority of two, and were right in defending that majority. The republicans had no right to attempt to defeat that narrow majority. Had they and Harrison had the honesty to respect a majority, the legislature could have gone on, and elected a senator in two days. Then the other proper work could have been done. But the great civil service reformer, Harrison, scoffed at the idea of being balked by a paltry majority of two. The fight all winter prevented the passage of the constitutional amendments. So we have to thank the republican party for the present condition of things for no one else is to blame. We like to have republicans call our attention to this point.

Jesse Zent, who has been spending some time in South America was here over Sunday visiting his brother I. M. Zent and other friends. He had been on this journey in the interest of agricultural implements made in this country.

Leonard Shipe, of Fairfield, was down here Wednesday paying his rent, and took advantage of the time and called up to have a chat with the COURIER and paid his subscription in advance, just as all the good democrats of Fairfield are doing.

The terrible gale of Tuesday played havoc with things in general. The air was full of paper, boards, hats, signs, etc. Cowan Sisters' show case was blown down and one of the large glass was broken, the hats and ribbons got out and started on an advertising tirade of their own, but Virge DeWitt and Clint Headley came to the rescue and put an end to this scheme, as they want to sell a little more steak before purchasing spring hats for their better halves.

Wayne last week, where they were enabled to select the latest seasonable styles in millinery goods. The stock of goods will be on next week, and every one interested in the purchase of spring goods are invited to call and examine the stock and prices.

The republicans had their township caucus at Waterloo last Saturday and gave Trustee Hine the grand snub by nominating Oscar Dennison. It was a close vote. Hine losing it by only 1 vote. The change was a surprise to most people, as it is always conceded that a trustee is entitled to a second term, whether he was appointed or elected. Hine's friends are quite sore over it, we are told. He is a good man, and made a good trustee as far as we ever heard, though his defeat in caucus would show that he has offended somebody, some of the bosses perhaps.

The Wabash Extension.

We are informed that the Executive committee of the Board of Directors of this new enterprise will meet to-morrow (Friday) for the purpose of employing a corps of engineers to make the preliminary survey. There are quite a number of moves being made in railroad circles which to friends of our new road, seem to indicate a preference for our route. But the movers and officials of both roads are very reticent, and although we are not permitted to know the inside workings, we have faith in the local directory of our extension, that they will protect our interests. As citizens we should give them encouragement and such financial aid as we can. Let no one be backward or throw cold water on the enterprise. The road will go into Chicago on some line, and we should see that our chances are properly looked after.

Bad Accident.

Jim. McDowell had his hand mutilated in a "shaper" at the factory of the Auburn Windmill Co., yesterday afternoon. He was brought to Dr. Swarts' office, where the doctor assisted by Dr. Casebeer dressed his wounds. He loses the thumb and a part of first and second fingers of the left hand. It is a great misfortune, for Mr. McDowell is a hard working, industrious man. All sympathize with him.

IT is related of Bishop Potter that he was taken to task by a few of his denominational brethren on the charge of exhibiting a conceit of himself at variance with the spirit of humility. "It is not conceit," said the Bishop; with that ponderous bearing that silenced opposition "it is not conceit, brethren; it is the consciousness of superiority."

THE naming of vessels of the navy is regulated by law. Vessels of the first class are required to be named after States, those of the second after rivers, those of the third after the principal cities and towns, and those of the fourth as the President may direct. The law is not always observed as closely as it ought to be, but in the main it governs naval nomenclature to-day.

MRS. WALLACE, the mother of Gen. Lew Wallace, declares that when Adam and Eve fell they fell upward, as it was the best thing that could happen to them to cause them to labor for their bread; and I believe it would be a fall upward if many a woman who now has ample time to complain to and about her servants should be obliged to take hold earnestly of some real work, and to keep at it.

MRS. A. F. WOOD, of Kennebunk, Me., a lady who has been lame for several years, went to the barn loft to gather some eggs, and in sliding down upon the hay with her lame leg, hearing something crack, she felt she had broken some bone. She called to her husband for help, and when he came and helped her up she found she could walk better than before. The ligaments which had adhered to each other by non-use were broken apart, improving her lameness.

SHOP girls and saleswomen are crying out against overwork and underpay; housekeepers are lamenting that money will not hire neat and competent domestics. Overwork and underpay mean, in many cases, demoralization and ruin. Girls work in the factory and the store for what a desirable domestic could earn, but they must pay for their lodging and board, while these are supplied to her. Why should this be so when it is quite as respectable to make bread as it is to sell ribbon?

AT Mumbles Head, Wales, a crowd awaited at a church the arrival of a bridal party. After a long delay the bridegroom's friend went to the house of the bride to see why she did not come. They were warned off, and found that the bride's parents, being opposed to the match, had, after she was dressed for the ceremony, locked her in her room while one of the family mounted guard at the door and threatened to shoot any one who approached. The wedding was postponed.

RECENTLY in Spain a man was executed for murder twenty-four hours after a reprieve had been actually signed by the Queen and forwarded. The affair has occasioned so much excitement in Spain that the Government has drawn up a bill to give to a telegraph message, in such cases, the force of a formal written order. In this case the authorities charged with the execution were notified by telegraph that the reprieve had been signed and was then on its way, but they insisted that they were powerless to delay the execution in the absence of the formal document.

GENERAL BOOTH, the English commander of the Salvation Army, is a practical old soul, and while we may not all of us endorse his radical hostility to the game of foot ball, there is something in his advice to the Salvationists with reference to the matter which is worthy of general admiration. His instructions to his followers in this country are in substance that if they want muscular recreation they might better scrub their neighbor's houses, "instead of kicking a bloated leather sphere about to no useful end." The beginning of the scrub game directed by the General will be awaited with undisguised interest. It may result in a whitewash for somebody.

OUTSIDE of the Porta Stabiana at Pompeii, in a stratum of cinders, have just been found the impressions of three bodies and a tree. Casts taken of them show the bodies to have been those of two men and a woman. One of the men was in a kneeling position and the other stretched flat on his back. The woman lay face downward with her arms stretched out. The tree, of which casts of foliage and fruit, as well as of the trunk, were obtained, was of the species laurus nobilis, known to have produced a round-shaped fruit that ripened toward the end of autumn, and, from the form and size of the fruit, it was evidently ripe when the tree was buried, which goes to confirm the theory that the great catastrophe took place in November of the year 79, B. C., and not in August as has been supposed.

A NEW device for stealing pocketbooks and hand-bags in the street is rather ingenious. The actual thief arranges matters so that he passes the intended victim just as his female confederate, who has been walking exactly in front of her stops suddenly, and allows the owner of the object to be stolen to run against her. The victim is either sorry for her own carelessness or indignant at the confederate's apparent stupidity. In the former case she apologizes, in the latter the confederate salutes her in such language that she hastens away frightened and ashamed, and in either case she is too much occupied to notice when her purse is snatched from her fingers or her bag is cut from her arm. Beware of the women who are suddenly struck with admiration of something in a shop window, and pause abruptly to admire it, creating more or less confusion by the movement.

A Watchful and Benevolent Gander.

"I saw," said General Philip Cook, yesterday, "a statement in The Constitution about some geese carrying water about in gourds. That story is good, but I can beat it."

"There lived in Macon County," continued the General, "some years ago a gentleman who is dead now. But years before he died he had a gander that was a wonderful bird. The gentleman lived in Montezuma; was rich and of great intellectual force, but before he died he lost his money, and then took to taking a drop too much. About that time a great big white gander attached himself to the judge, and they were never seen apart. The gander would follow the judge about like a dog, when he entered a house the gander would sit on the front step and wait until he came out.

"When the gentleman, as it sometimes happened, was overcome by his toddy, the big bird would sit by until he recovered, and if anybody came near he had the gander to fight. He'd blow and puff worse than a dog, and nobody wanted to tackle him.

"The gentleman was devoted to his companion, and fed him just as regular as he ate himself. When he went from Montezuma to Oglethrope a long trestle had to be crossed, and that bird would follow the gentleman across every time.

"There are hundreds of people in Macon County who remember the gentleman and his gander perfectly, and they will all vouch for the truth of the story."—Atlanta Constitution.

He Sold His Teeth.

A South-street pawnbroker was amazed on Saturday when a poorly-dressed man walked in, and putting his right hand to his mouth, drew forth a nice-looking set of false teeth, which he laid on the counter.

"Well, what is it?" gasped the pawnbroker.

"What can I get on 'em?" said the man, carelessly nodding toward the teeth.

"What! on your teeth?"

"Yes, on my teeth."

"Why, man, you won't be able to eat."

"I know that."

"You do, eh?"

"Yes, perfectly. I can't get anything to eat. Consequently my teeth are of no use to me. 'Tis true, I might keep them for ornamental purposes, but being a poor man, I can't afford that. Then, again, when I get angry I might indicate that such was the fact by 'showing my teeth,' but, alas, that doesn't pay either."

As the shades of night began to fall the two, the pawnbroker and the man, were still negotiating, the man trying to argue the superior quality of the molars and the pawnbroker persuasively proving that deeth were really a drug in the market.—Philadelphia North American.

LYING TO THE SOLDIERS.

ALL PLEDGES MADE BY THE REPUBLICANS IGNORED.

The Surplus Given Away to Subsidy Lobbyists—No Effort Made to Pass the Service Pension Bill—Mr. Bynum Calls Attention to the Republican Bad Faith.

[Washington special to Indianapolis Sentinel.]

In an interview had by me with Representative Bynum, regarding pension legislation during the present session, Mr. Bynum said:

"I have been satisfied ever since the President delivered his first message that the Republicans did not intend to redeem their promises to the soldiers. They were very profuse in promises, but when it comes to performance they are faithful only to the moneyed interests, from whence comes campaign boodle. Mr. Peters, of Kansas, in opposing the world's fair bill, said the estimated revenue for the coming year was, in round numbers, $450,000,000, and the regular expenditures would be $406,000,000, to which must be added $25,000,000 for deficiencies and $10,000,000 for miscellaneous, making a total necessary expenditure of $441,000,000, leaving a surplus for next year of only $9,000,000. Now, if they repeal the tobacco tax, a deficiency of $20,000,000 will exist; but, in addition, they propose to refund to the States $17,000,000 of direct tax collected from people who could afford to pay the same during the war; grant from five to ten millions to steamship lines, as subsidies, and appropriate from twenty to forty millions for public buildings, and pay ten millions French spoliation claims. Now, where is the money to come from to pay additional pensions? The tariff is already above the revenue standard, and every increase on most articles will reduce instead of increase the revenue. I observe that Gen. Alger stated to the soldiers at Columbus that 'a service pension bill will not be passed by this Congress; that the East and South are opposed to it.' No effort has been made to pass such a bill. The committee had never considered, much less reported, a service bill. Under the new rules it can report at any time, and the measures reported can be taken up at once, and yet, with these advantages, no efforts are being made to carry out the promises made to the soldiers.

"The above bills of which I have spoken—such as the direct-tax bill, public building bills and French spoliation claims—have either been reported or favorably considered by the committees having them in charge, and will be pressed before the House at an early date, but no pension bills of any consequence are even heard of. The Republicans have complete control. They have devised rules and forced their adoption, by which they can turn out a Democrat or pass a subsidy bill in thirty minutes; and yet they are silent upon pension bills. The dependent bill, which they denounced as a pauper bill and an insult to the old soldiers, when passed by a Democratic House, is all the President recommended in his message, and, with a few minor bills of no consequence to the great body of the soldiers, is all that the Republicans will permit to come before this Congress. They are never enthusiastic in behalf of the veterans, except when in the minority in Congress, or seeking votes.

"Conscious that there would be no money to pay the soldiers, when the Republicans get their pet schemes through, I proposed the amendment I offered to the rules, allowing amendments or provisions on general pension bills granting new pensions, for raising the money to pay the same. Gen. Alger exposed the opposition to my amendment when he said that the East was opposed to further pension legislation. It is clearly evident that without additional revenues additional pension legislation cannot be had. The East is opposed to additional pensions, because it fears that a graduated income tax will have to be levied to pay the same. The amendment I offered did not require that bills for new pensions should contain provisions for raising the revenue. It only provided that such a provision could be ordered. If there was plenty of money to pay such proposed increase, no such provision would be necessary, and would not be offered. Without some appropriation the bill would not likely be reported to the House. The Committee on Invalid Pensions would say we must not pass bills until the Committee on Ways and Means provided the revenue, and the Committee on Ways and Means, when asked to increase the revenues, would say that we already have a sufficient income to meet all our demands, and that to increase taxes in anticipation of new expenditures not yet created would be unwise. The amendment was broad enough to allow the means necessary to be raised in any manner. If an income tax could not be provided, a provision for the issuance of bonds, or greenbacks could be incorporated, and if it had been adopted, the Committee on Invalid Pensions could have reported any of the bills promised to the soldiers with an estimate of the amount required to pay the same, and we could have provided the means in the bill, and passed it in a single day. Not a single Republican, however, supported my amendment, and it was defeated. The East was opposed to it. The Eastern Republicans don't propose that any more money shall go to the West, even in the way of pensions.

"The invitations given to the soldiers last campaign inviting them to the feast that was to be prepared by the Republican party have been recalled, and they will not be seated at the banquet tables which are being spread by this Congress. They will be given a few crumbs, after the corporations and rings have been pampered to their satisfaction. They can come to Washington later on and look into the empty vaults of the treasury after the surplus has been carted away by the lobbyists, who are now rejoicing that a Congress has been organized for action upon the millions of dollars of State claims and fraudulent schemes that could not stand the scrutiny of Democratic Congresses."

Gerrymandering and Republican Pharisaism.

It is touching to witness the holy horror of the Republican leaders over the threatened action of the Democracy in Ohio respecting the redistricting of that State. A correspondent of the New York World thus exposes their Pharisaism:

In the Congressional election of 1888, the following Northern States cast votes for candidates for Representatives of the two great political parties as follows:

State.	Rep. vote.	Dem. vote.
Connecticut	74,584	74,920
California	124,816	117,729
Iowa	211,598	179,887
Illinois	370,473	348,278
Michigan	236,370	213,449
Minnesota	142,492	104,385
Massachusetts	183,892	151,855
Nebraska	108,425	80,552
New York	648,759	635,757
New Jersey	144,344	151,493
Ohio	416,054	396,455
Pennsylvania	526,091	446,633
Rhode Island	21,958	17,530
Wisconsin	176,533	155,232
Totals	3,386,399	3,074,165

The 3,386,399 Republican votes elected 126 Republican Congressmen. This was an average of not quite 26,900 votes per Congressman.

The 3,074,165 Democratic votes elected only forty-seven Congressmen. This was an average of 65,408 votes per Congressman.

The net Republican plurality in these fourteen Northern States of 312,234 is represented in the present Congress by a net Republican majority of seventy-nine members. Of these seventy-nine extra members the election of seventy-four is due to the remarkable gerrymandering skill of those most holy, Puritanical politicians, who stand aghast when they contemplate the suppression of the votes of their brethren at the South.

If the Democrats of these fourteen Northern States are adequately and fairly represented in the lower house of Congress by forty-seven members a proportionate representation of the Republicans of the same States would allow them only fifty-one instead of their 126 members.

If the Republicans are only fairly and adequately represented by their 126 members, a proportionate representation of the Democrats of these States would give them 114 members instead of the paltry number of forty-seven.

If a constituency of 26,900 Republican voters is entitled to one Representative, what good and sufficient reason can these monopolists of morality give for limiting the representation of their Democratic neighbors to one member for every 65,408 voters?

If the will of the people of these fourteen Northern States were not stifled by the most infamous gerrymandering, if this will were permitted to find expression fairly and honestly in the lower house of Congress, the Republicans would have only ninety instead of 126 of the 173 members from the above States, while the Democrats would have eighty-three instead of forty-seven. This would take thirty-six members from the Republican side of the House and place them where they honestly and fairly belong. Instead of having a majority of nine members in the present House the Republicans would be in a minority of sixty-three members.

While enjoying the products of this clean-cut steal our Republican brethren, almost of one accord, stand on the public highways and on the street corners with outstretched arms thanking God that they are not as other men are. Their representatives in Congress propose to perpetuate this steal by the passage of the Wickham or Hoar bill to keep in full form for another Congress the present Republican gerrymanders. They propose to retain the present districts of Ohio, by which 26,000 Republican voters can elect a member, while it will require 79,291 Democratic voters to do the same thing.

ONLY USED THE NEGRO.

SENATOR JOHN SHERMAN'S FRANK ADMISSION.

The Ohio Senator Practically Owns Up that Black Men Were Enfranchised Not as a Matter of Right but for Political Reasons.

Icy old John Sherman thawed out in the Senate the other day, during a hot political debate, and he and Senator Butler had a set-to which provoked cheers and shouts in the galleries. Mr. Eustis started the rumpus by referring to statements made by Mr. Hoar in reference to the Southern States, one being that in Louisiana and in some other States there were laws which made it a penal offense for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black, and that there was another law in Louisiana which provided for the sale of colored men for a certain time out of work, and that the former master should have the preference in the purchase. He said there were no such laws, and any pretense that there was only illustrated with what recklessness and destitution of the sense of responsibility Republican Senators spoke of Southern affairs. Mr. Hoar admitted that he had erred about Louisiana, but said a law of this charter existed in Mississippi. Mr. Eustis asserted that all reconstruction measures and amendments were adopted by the Republican party with the object of Africanizing the South and maintaining political supremacy, and this he characterized as the "greatest crime ever committed against civilized communities."

Mr. Sherman then made a long speech in defense of reconstruction measures, saying the laws passed by some of the Southern States had been so unjust to the colored people and white Republicans that the people North became convinced that the object was to overthrow the results of the war and deprive the freedmen of the rights of citizenship, and Congress had therefore reluctantly armed the negro with suffrage as the only remedy fitted for the case. Negro suffrage had not turned out as had been expected on account of the measures adopted to deprive the negro of his rights. Congress could not exercise any control in the local affairs of the South, but there should be a law that would protect the right of suffrage, and that it be executed with such power that no man would dare expose himself to its penalties.

Mr. Butler said the debate had shown that suffrage had been conferred upon the negro of the South not because he was entitled to it or qualified to exercise it, but because of certain laws passed by some of the Southern States. The admission would throw light on future discussions as to the rights of the negro to vote in the South. Mr. Butler spoke of the exclusion of the colored men in the Northern States from all political office. He believed the great body of the people North were kindly disposed toward the South, and warned the Senator from Ohio that whenever he attempted to carry out his threat of another crusade upon the South through supervisors and United States marshals, for the purpose of dominating elections there, he would have a fire in his rear from the men who had carried their money and their industry into the South. In conclusion, he insisted that the people of the South were far more interested in an orderly, humane, honest settlement of the question than the people of the North.

How the Farmer Can Be Helped.

Since the depressed prices which the farmer now gets are likely to prevail for an indefinite period, it may well be asked what can be done to improve his situation. Since unrestrained competition and a steady increase of production result in a large surplus which must be sold abroad, Congress cannot legislate to secure better prices for what farmers have to sell, although it can do much to reduce the cost of the goods and wares they are compelled to buy. It can protect the farmers from the rapacious trust combines. It can legislate so they need not pay monopoly prices for sugar, woolen clothing, blankets, furniture, glass, paint, nails, binding twine, tools, and implements. Congress cannot increase the price of agricultural products, nor protect farmers from severe competition in their industry, but it may justly take something from the artificial gains of excessively protected industries in order to cheapen living to the largest, most laborious, and most deserving class of the population, and the one on whose well-being national prosperity most depends. Especially may Congress legislate to make manufactured goods cheap enough so the farmers can buy them, when such a policy is favored by the workmen in the favored industries, who persistently declare that they get no higher wages, because their bosses have two profits, than if they had only one, and in consequence are vigorously voting the free-trade ticket.—Chicago Tribune (Rep.).

Dreads Discussion.

Mr. J. S. Runnells, President of the Marquette Club, does not favor a joint debate on the tariff question with the Twenty-fourth Ward Tariff Reform Club. He says: "I think the people get enough tariff talk during the political campaigns."

Herein is Mr. Runnells in perfect harmony with the high protectionists. They do not wish to talk about the tariff except at times when the subject may be complicated with other political questions, and then they want to do all the talking.

To discuss the tariff as a separate issue at a time when people have leisure to hear and read the arguments on both sides and to reflect upon them would be dangerous.

The protectionists are able politicians, whatever may be their rank as economists.—Chicago News.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted On.

IN the Senate on the 18th inst. Mr. Sherman, from the Committee on Finance, reported a substitute for the bill against "trusts" in restraint of production, and it was placed on the calendar. Immediately after the morning business the consideration of the urgent-deficiency bill was resumed, and after several minor amendments had been agreed to the bill was passed. The Senate then took up the Blair bill, and Senator Hawley spoke in opposition to it and Senators Moody and Chandler in its favor. The following Senate bills for public buildings passed: Spokane Falls, Washington, $100,000; Walla Walla, Washington, $80,000; Saginaw, Mich., $250,000; Sioux Falls, S. D., $250,000; Tacoma, Washington, $100,000; Deadwood, S. D., $200,000; Seattle, Washington, $100,000. The Senate then adjourned. In the House considerable time was devoted to the consideration of the appropriation for the payment of invalid pensions for the coming year. The result was a political debate, in which Mr. Peters, of Kansas, waxed eloquent over the virtues of Corporal Tanner. The House adjourned with provision for two and a half hours' additional debate before the final vote will be taken on the question.

IN the Senate, on the 19th inst., the resolution offered by Mr. Voorhees several days before, as to agricultural depression, was taken up, and Mr. Voorhees addressed the Senate in relation to it. He spoke of the deep, strong current of anxiety, discontent, and alarm prevailing in the farming communities, and said that he proposed to aid them in the inquiry as to the causes of the existing depression. Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, replied, and read a letter showing the comparatively low prices of farm products and the high price of manufactured goods before the war. The Blair educational bill was then taken up, and Mr. Pierce spoke in opposition to it. Mr. Evarts and Mr. Call addressed the Senate in support of the bill. The Senate bill appropriating $200,000 for a public building at Norfolk, Neb., was reported and placed on the calendar. Mr. Allison, from the Finance Committee, reported back, with amendments, the House bill to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue and it was placed on the calendar. Adjourned. In the House Mr. Cooper, of Ohio, a member of the Committee on Elections, called up the Maryland contested case of Mudd against Compton. Mr. Lacey, of Iowa, opened the discussion with an argument in support of the claims of the contestant. Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Greenhalge, of Massachusetts, advocated the case of the contestant, and the case of the sitting member, was upheld by Mr. Moore, of Texas, and Mr. Gibson, of Maryland. Pending a vote the House adjourned.

IN the Senate on the 20th inst. Mr. Cockrell presented the protest of the Pork Packers' Association of St. Louis against the bill for inspection of meats, declaring the bill to be unnecessary and injurious to the stock raising and curing interests—more injurious even than the German and French prohibition. The education bill came up as unfinished business. After debate the Senate proceeded to vote on the bill and amendments. The first vote was on the amendment offered by Mr. Moody (S. D.) that the illiterates among the Indians shall be included in the calculations. Mr. Hawley in opposing the bill read a table of appropriations to be made for the next fiscal year, showing an aggregate of expenditures of $523,000,000, against an estimated revenue of $450,000,000, making a deficit of $73,000,000. Mr. Moody's amendment was agreed to. The Senate then proceeded to vote on the third reading and engrossment of the bill. When the vote was concluded and it was know that it had resulted against the bill Mr. Blair changed his vote from yea to nay so as to make a motion to reconsider. The result was then announced as yeas 31, nays 37. Mr. Blair made a motion to reconsider the vote, which motion was entered, and after an executive session the Senate adjourned. In the House, Mr. Henderson (Iowa) presented a resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa urging legislation against the adulteration of lard. Referred. On motion of Mr. Gear (Iowa) a Senate bill was passed (with an amendment striking out the appropriation clause) for a building at Burlington, Iowa, at a limit of cost of $100,000. The House then resumed the consideration of the Mudd-Compton contested-election case. Mr. Moore (Tex.) offered a resolution declaring Compton entitled to the seat. This was defeated—yeas, 145; nays, 155. The majority resolution, declaring Mudd entitled to the seat, was adopted—yeas, 159; nays, 145. Mr. Mudd then appeared and took the oath of office amid much applause from the galleries. Mr. Morrow (Cal.) moved that the House go into committee of the whole for the further consideration of the pension-appropriation bill. Mr. Morrow's motion was then agreed to, and the committee immediately rose and the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 21st, after the introduction of numerous petitions and memorials, on motion of Mr. Sherman the bill to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production was taken up for consideration. The substitute reported by Mr. Sherman from the Finance Committee on the 18th instant was read; also an amendment that was offered by Mr. Reagan. Mr. Sherman then addressed the Senate. He said that he believed that trusts and all combinations of a like nature were injurious to the people, who were compelled by them to pay advanced prices for articles in which they dealt. He had no doubt of the constitutional right of Congress to deal with this class of subjects and to prevent combinations of this sort. Mr. Allison followed Mr. Sherman in favor of the bill and Senators Vest and Hiscock spoke against it. The Senate adjourned with the understanding that a vote on the trust bill would be taken early in the week. The House, in committee of the whole, considered the pension appropriation bill. The bill was finally reported with a few slight amendments and passed. The House also passed the bill retiring John C. Fremont with the rank of Major General, and the bill for the relief of Albert G. Emory. Also the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs appropriating $25,000 for the purchase of 2,500 tents for the use of families driven from their homes by floods along the Mississippi River. The House then adjourned, and at the evening session passed private pension bills.

Frivolities.

Der Floh: Lady—How much did you get at your last place at Counselor B.'s? Cook—Ten florins. Lady—That is not too much; I think it will suit me. Cook—Yes, but the reason why I had so small wages was that the missus used to give me piano lessons. So if you're agreeable, mum——

Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly: Husband: "These trousers that I want to wear on the fishing party have not a single suspender button on." Wife (sweetly): "Then, John, if your party is drowned I shall be able to identify your body from the others." Husband (savagely): "No, you won't either; the others are all married men, too."

Hartford Post: "You had better wear your smoked glasses to-day; the snow glare will make your eyes ache, I fear," said a young wife to her John as he stepped out for his morning walk to business. "No, my dear, I think not. I have been looking at you so much lately, that the brilliancy of the snow cannot dazzle me." But this sort of complimentary nonsense will wear away after a few years of married life.

New York Weekly: Baby spirit (up in heaven): "So I must go down to earth and get born, must I? What am I to be, a man or a woman?" Guardian angel: "Let me see. You have many talents, have you not?" "Yes, indeed, ever so many. I can keep track of forty things at once, have my thoughts on one thing and do a dozen other things correctly, sleep with one eye open, and on waking up at any time have full possession of all my faculties in an instant." "'Tis well. You shall be a woman."

Harper's Bazar: A mathematical demonstration: Danvers: "Come, Markham, you surely are not going to propose to that absurd Miss Leavenworth, are you?" Markham: "Why, man, she has a dozen splendid farms out in Kansas." Danvers: "Yes; and she's at least 42." Markham: "Oh, you miss it by about fifteen summers, my boy." Danvers: "You are being deceived, old man—wofully. I heard her describing the 14-year locusts, and she said nobody could tell her anything about them because she had seen them three times."

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

THE LITTLE PEOPLE.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

A DREARY place would be this earth
Were there no little people in it;
The song of life would lose its mirth
Were there no children to begin it.

No babe within our arms to leap,
No little feet towards slumber tending;
No little knee in prayer to bend,
Our lips the sweet words lending.

The sterner souls would be more stern,
Unfeeling natures more inhuman,
And no man to stoic coldness turn,
And woman would be less than woman.

Life's song, indeed, would lose its charm,
Were there no babies to begin it;
A doleful place this world would be,
Were there no little people in it.

HE THREW UP HIS HANDS

CAPTURING AN IOWA DESPERADO AND MAN-KILLER.

"Big Sam" Was a Tough Customer, but He Quailed in the Presence of "Old Jack"—An Episode of the Early Settlement of Iowa.

WHEN Iowa was admitted to the Union as a State there were within her borders many rough characters, who had left their quiet homes in the older States and sought the wild West in a pure spirit of adventure. Most of these men, though brave to a fault, were peaceably inclined, and rarely participated in those brawls and affrays which are of such frequent occurrence in frontier communities. Unfortunately there were others who were never so happy as when engaged in knock-down arguments or shooting scrapes. To terrorize a town or a neighborhood was their delight. These were the "bullies," the "desperadoes," the "terrors," as they were variously characterized. It was one of these pests of good society that has prompted the penning of this little sketch.

Shortly after the admission of the State a brutal and unprovoked murder was committed at old Fort Des Moines by a notorious desperado known as Big Sam.

Big Sam was one of many of that class who spent their summers in the mountains and drifted back to the border of civilization to spend their winters. While the majority of them were honest plainsmen, Big Sam was a ruffian of the most pronounced type, and was never so well satisfied as when bullying some inoffensive stranger.

His latest victim had been a young man from Ohio but lately arrived in the country. Refusing to dance in a saloon for Big Sam's amusement, and calling him a cowardly ruffian when the bully threatened him, was sufficient to raise Big Sam's anger to the killing point, and he shot the young man dead on the spot.

Realizing that for once he had carried things too far, and that vengeance was about to be visited on him by a neighboring vigilance committee, Big Sam fled to the then straggling village of Council Bluffs. The news of his crime soon followed him, and also the announcement that the Governor had offered a reward of $500 for his arrest.

Several local officers attempted his arrest without success, for he was very watchful and suspicious of all who approached him. Besides, he had badly wounded one officer who had attempted his arrest. The desperado was disturbed no more after this third attempt, and he became quite bold and full of swagger.

Stopping at the De Koven House in Council Bluffs at the time was a man who, like Big Sam, wintered in the settlements and summered in the mountains.

Unlike Big Sam, Old Jack was no desperado. He was nervy and grit clear through, and he would go two or three miles any night to spin a marvelous yarn of border adventure, to some company of westward-bound emigrants, or do them a kindness.

Old Jack was seated in the bar-room of the hotel one morning when a couple of officers came in. As they stepped up to the bar one of them remarked:

"I wish we could take that fellow. It would be a pile in our pockets if we did, but it's most too risky a job for me."

"Yes," remarked his companion, "a fellow might get him, and again he might not; but I would like to see him punished for so cowardly and unprovoked a murder as that was."

"Who is it you are talking about?" asked Old Jack, rising and walking toward a window looking out on the street.

"Why, Big Sam, of course," was the reply. "There he goes, now, into that saloon over across the street."

Old Jack glanced across the street and saw the burly figure of Big Sam enter the saloon and pass toward the bar.

"Well, he don't look like such an awful bad man; what has he done?" asked Jack.

Thereupon one of the officers briefly outlined the crime for which Big Sam was wanted.

"Well, a fellow that would kill another that way ain't fit to run loose. Just you deputize me, and if I don't get him for you just see that I get a decent plantin'; that's all I ask," said Jack.

"Agreed," said one of the men, "but just remember the risk you run, and you are under no obligations to do it."

"Never mind that, only give me the papers," replied old Jack.

He was forthwith deputized, and pinning a star on his vest underneath his coat, he crossed the street and walked into the saloon which Big Sam had entered a while before. Stepping to the bar, he called for the drinks, then remarking in casual way that he did not like to drink alone, he turned toward the man seated at the stove and said: "Come up, stranger, and drink with me."

"I don't care if I do," responded Big Sam, as he arose and swaggered up to the bar.

They both drained their glasses. As old Jack put his hand down to return to his pocket the change he had received from the bartender, he let the money fall to the floor, and, dexterously whipping out his pistol, he had Big Sam, who was leaning back against the bar watching him closely, covered before he realized what was coming.

"Throw up your hands, and be quick about it," commanded Jack; "you're my man now," and he pushed aside the lapel of his coat and showed his star.

"Don't!" he exclaimed, as Sam's hand started to drop, "don't, or I'll kill you."

Up went the hands, for big Sam saw he had met more than his match.

"Here, barkeeper, just step around here and put these bracelets I have in my pocket on the gentleman's wrists, will you?" said Jack, addressing the dispenser of drinks. The man complied.

"Now, open the door for us and you can have that change on the floor for your trouble," said Jack.

"Now, Sam," he said, as the door swung open, "just walk over to the De Koven House, ahead of me, that's as far as we'll go now."

Sam complied, and at the hotel he was turned over to the waiting officers, who deprived him of a couple of revolvers and an ugly-looking knife.

As old Jack surrendered the star he remarked that "he was done with it."

"Well," remarked big Sam, "if I had known you were doing this for fun, somebody would have died."

"Well, I guess you know who would have died," was all old Jack replied.

Big Sam was taken to the scene of his crime, where he suffered the full penalty of the law.

LOVELAND, IOWA.

Honest with Himself.

"What I most admire about him," said the friend of an eminent man, "is his perfect truth. He not only speaks truthfully to others, but he is incapable of deceiving himself."

But many are the men and women who do deceive themselves, calling dishonor prudence, and false dealing excusable, "under the circumstances." A school-girl was one day talking over a burglary which had taken place in a neighboring house, and ended with the declaration that, in her own case, she should be frantic if a man walked off with her watch in his pocket.

"But I always hide it at night," said she.

"I don't see what good that does," said a school-mate. "He might put a pistol to your head and ask for it, as that one did when Mrs. Forbes would not give up her diamonds."

"But I should tell him I hadn't any watch," said the first speaker, coolly.

"Why, May Ellis, tell a lie!"

"It wouldn't be a lie. Before I spoke I should give it away, in my mind, and then take it back again after he had gone."

"Well," put in another girl, "I should rather lose a watch than twist my mind round quite as much as that," and so would any absolutely sincere person.

A celebrated beauty used to view herself, when dressed for a party, in large mirrors, under the strongest possible light. Hair and complexion received the most merciless inspection.

"If I satisfy my own eyes, then I am ready for those of other people," she once said, after such a critical survey. She never deceived herself by a hasty glance at apparent perfection; she demanded of herself even more than others would ever demand of her.

Another, and a very different woman, was proverbially satisfied with her own appearance, even though she was more than ordinarily plain.

"How can she be so vain?" exclaimed an acquaintance one day.

"Vain! she isn't," retorted another. "Did you ever go into her bedroom? I thought not. Well, her mirror is in a dark corner, and its pleasing obscurity has softened and flattered her features for so many years that she doesn't dream they are ugly."

But to judge and direct our own souls, let us use a strong light and clear mirror. We cannot afford to soften the outline of an evil action because we ourselves choose to commit it. We must not, in honor, gild even the smallest vice because it is our own.—Youth's Companion.

Going the Wrong Way.

Ex-Governor Andrew Shuman entered the smoking car on a Chicago and Northwestern train the other afternoon, says the Chicago Tribune, and took a seat facing toward the engine. The seat ahead of him was turned over. Mr. Shuman was smoking a good cigar and had an evening paper in his hand. As he settled back an Irishman, with a clay pipe in his mouth, entered the car. His breath was redolent with bad whisky and red eye tobacco.

"Good avenin', Misther Shuman," said the Irishman, as he sat down on the seat opposite.

"How are you, Pat?" said Mr. Shuman.

"Noicely, t'ank you," was the reply.

Pat had probably hoed the garden for Governor Shuman at some time, and he was presuming on old acquaintance. He leaned over, blew a little bad breath and worse tobacco smoke in Governor Shuman's face, and asked:

"How's t'ings in Ivanston, sor?"

"Very nicely," replied Governor Shuman, trying to open the window to get a breath of fresh air.

Pat leaned over again and allowed another whiff of red eye to circulate around Governor Shuman's head as he said:

"Oi am glad to hear it, sor. Now, Oi'd like to ax you——"

But Governor Shuman was desperate.

"Where are you going, Pat?" he asked abruptly.

"Ivanston, sor," was the reply.

"Evanston!" exclaimed Governor Shuman. "Why, you're going the wrong way. Can't you see you're faced toward Chicago? Turn the seat over."

The Irishman gave a start, turned around and looked toward the engine, and then glanced out of the window.

"Be hivens, you're roight!" he exclaimed. "Oi'm faced the wrong way. Thank you Misther Shuman."

He turned his seat over and Governor Shuman buried his head in his paper and enjoyed the rest of the trip. In fact, he was seen to smile once or twice.

Got a regular cracksman in the company, too, you know; just out of the penitentiary, and he opens a safe on the stage. Great success. Crowded houses everywhere. THE WIZARD OF MENLO PARK.

An Incident of Thomas A. Edison's Early Career—His Birthday Gift.

THOMAS A. EDISON recently celebrated his 44th birthday at his home at Menlo Park, N. J. The employes of the Edison Phonograph Works, in honor of the occasion, made and presented to him the most perfect phonograph possible. They worked on the machine for over two months. Every part of the instrument capable of it is plated with gold and silver, and the parts are finished to the utmost possible limit. Attached to the machine is a water-motor of improved construction that has been one of the recent triumphs of the great inventor, and that runs the machine steadily and noiselessly with a minimum consumption of water. The case is of rare inlaid woods, and is a marvel of painstaking workmanship.

The phonograph, if not the most useful, is certainly the most wonderful of all the wizard's wonderful inventions. When it was first exhibited at the New York Academy of Sciences, a few years ago, a murmur of admiration was heard, which was succeeded by repeated applause. Some of the skeptical members started the rumor that the Academy had been mystified by a clever ventriloquist, and repeated experiments were required to convince these incredulous persons that no chicanery was used, and that the "talking machine" could be readily manipulated by anyone.

Edison's birthplace is Milan, Ohio. While yet a boy in his teens, telegraphy took great hold upon him, and having one day snatched a station-master's child from in front of an approaching train, the grateful father taught him telegraphy, and from that time he became a systematic student. His ready ingenuity suggested all sorts of adaptations. One day the ice jam broke the cable between Port Huron and Sarnia (on the Canada side); the river at that point being a mile and a half in width, all communication by telegraph was cut off. Young Edison seized the valve of an engine that controls the whistle, which he tooted into long and short notes, like the dots and dashes in telegraphy. "Hello, Sarnia, do you get me?" he tooted; no answer. "Hello, Sarnia, do you hear what I say?" A third and a fourth time the message was sent over, and finally came the answer from an engine on the other side; the connection had been made, and communication easily carried on until the cable was repaired.

Edison's many inventions are legion, but his phonograph, megaphone, the quadruplex and duplex systems of telegraphy, his telephone—which alone netted him over one hundred thousand dollars—the electric railway and incandescent electric light, are but a few of the best known of his most wonderful and valuable inventions.

IN an English theater, recently, the orchestra between the acts was playing very loudly, and two ladies in the front row were endeavoring to converse at the same time. They had to raise their voices considerably, and as the orchestra suddenly reached a low passage the voice of one of the ladies became cruelly distinct just as she remarked, "I wear silk underclothes."

Then a friend advised Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He tried it and was saved. "I feel very much indebted to Hood's Sarsaparilla for I believe it is to the use of this medicine that I owe my present health. In the spring I got so completely run down that I could not eat or sleep, and all the dreaded diseases of life seemed to have a mortgage on my system. I was obliged to abandon my work, and after seeking medical treatment and spending over $50 for different preparations, I found myself no better. Then my wife persuaded me to try a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Before the first bottle was gone I began to amend. I have now used two bottles and have gained 22 pounds. Can eat any-improve digestion, purify and enrich the blood, cleanse and strengthen the system and build up the flesh, if reduced below the standard of health, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal.

TO SHARPEN THE APPETITE,

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, nervous prostration or exhaustion, hot flushes; alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and diversity of the symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions, for a reasonable length of time.

"Golden Medical Discovery" acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening and healing their diseases. It cures all humors, from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula, Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings" and Enlarged Glands.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only Blood and Liver medicine, sold by druggists, guaranteed to benefit or cure in every case, on fair trial, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The New School Books.

Much money has been saved to the people of this county. A partial report is now published showing how the new law has worked in the counties where it has been given an honest trial. The reports are from county superintendents, in each case. We give all that we have space for, beginning, of course, with good old DeKalb, and showing in each case how much has been saved as compared with the old law.

And all this, at a time when the new books have been in use only from three to six months, will give one an idea of what it will be in five or ten years, and when an entire new series is in use. At present we have got only a part of the text books under the new law. In addition to these reports, several counties have passed resolutions endorsing the new system, and the state Grange at their annual meeting in December passed a resolution unamously, affirming the new law. To show once more that there is no politics in this matter, and that the new books were considered equal to the old, by as able teachers as those who compose our State Board of Education, we add here the resolution by which the board unamously adopted these books on the 10th day of last July examining them.

WHEREAS, The series of arithmetics submitted by the Indiana School Book Company and entitled "Elementary Arithmetic" and "Complete Arithmetic" of the "Indiana Educational Series," is, in the judgment of this board, fully equal in size and quality as to matter, material style of binding and mechanical execution to "Ray's New Series of Arithmetic," named as the standard in the law above mentioned:

Resolved, That the bid of said company be accepted and a contract be made with said company in accordance with the law aforesaid.

WHEREAS, In the opinion of this committee the series of readers known as the "Indiana Educational Series," and offered in the bid of the Indiana School Book Company, are equal in size and quality as to matter, material, style of binding and mechanical execution to the Appleton series named as a standard in the law above quoted:

Resolved, That the bid of the Indiana School Book Company be accepted, and the aforesaid series of readers be adopted and a contract be entered into with the said firm to furnish said books for the use of the schools of Indiana.

The above resolutions were adopted by a practically unanimous vote. The following members of the Board were present and voted:

Harvey M. LaFollette, President, Superintendent of Public Instruction.
L. H. Jones, Superintendent of Indianapolis Public Schools.
David S. Jordan, President of Indiana University.
W. W. Parsons, President of State Normal School.
J. W. Layne, Superintendent of Evansville Public Schools.
W. H. Wiley, Superintendent of Terre Haute Public schools.
Alvin P. Hovey, Governor of Indiana.

Gerrymanders.

We often have occasion to differ from republican editors. The gerrymander question is one instance. Some years ago we tried to make them believe that Indiana was "gerrymandered" or districted in a very unfair way. They thought it was all right, as it gave them a big advantage in congressmen and in both branches of the legislature. In the whirligig of time, however, the democrats got on top, and just at this particular time, the state was to be re-districted. We gave them a dose of their own medicine, though we did not rub it in quite as bad as they had done to us. They squealed aloud, and spared not. And ever since then, we have been unable to make them see that a gerrymander is as fair for one as it is for the other. They can readily see that it is the cutest thing on record if done by republicans, but extremely bad and stupid if done by the democrats. We naturally take the other view of it, and hence these frequent disagreements. Now the same thing that happened in Indiana has just happened in Ohio. The Buckeye democrats have for years sent only five out of twenty-one members of congress, though they should in fairness have sent ten, while republicans sent eleven, for the state voted about that way. They often complained of this unfairness, but each time, the republicans would put the thumb to the nose and wink, as much as to say, "What are you going to do about it?" Now, however, there has been another "whirligig" this time, in Ohio. And now, the democrats there have turned the tables and propose to give the republicans about six of the twenty-one members. And at once all over the land goes up a cry by republicans, over the "great wrong." How silent they have been however, all these previous years! It was such a silent silence, that it bore a very suspicious look. It was the silence of the burglar, who is afraid he will wake you up before he gets your spoons into his pocket and gets clear of the house. But it was all right till the boot got onto the other foot. Now, as a last resort, they call on congress to come to their aid, and that right speedily. How will this better the matter? Is congress above suspicion when it comes to political matters? Hardly. Will they district the states in a more honorable way? By no means. The party in power, will district and "gerrymander" the entire Union, just as a given party now gerrymanders its own single state. It would be changing off a small wrong for the sake of securing one much larger. It will drive off the petty thief who takes a nickel from you, but will admit the burglar who goes through your pockets and cleans out your house. The secret, however, of this great desire to have a national, instead of a state gerrymander of districts, is that the national congress is now republican. That shows how earnest these would-be-considered reformers are. One hand has lost its cunning, and they now want to get the other hand at the political pie. The plan is as dishonest, as it is contrary to the principles on which our government is founded.

Obey the Law.

It is about time that people who have been opposing the new books, should see where they stand. Every delay made costs the people money. Everyone of the old books sold into the schools last fall instead of the new, represents its entire cost as a useless expense. Now, they will have to keep that book and besides, buy a new one, and the book bought last fall will be the one they don't need. There can be but little complaint made however, as to this county. The trustees have generally gone to work and made the matter as easy for the people as they could, and so have put in the new books. A few have come short, however, perhaps through a mistaken idea as to their duty. Our own board, have done little or nothing, we are sorry to say, and of course, they cannot do anything now during the present year. But they should see to it, that during the coming summer vacation, the proper steps are taken to put the right books in, when the fall term begins. Don't let us have any more delay or expense. We have faith enough in the board to beleive they will now go forward fearlessly in the discharge of a plain duty. Newville township seems to have taken an independent view of the matter, or else has tried to make it a political business. At all events, the books have not been put into the schools. True, trustee Chiesman made his order, as required by law, but evaded his duty by selling the books to other townships and letting his own go on with the old. In Waterloo, a few of the new books were put in, but afterwards discarded from some cause, putting the people to needless expense. But now all must see, that further delay or opposition to a plain law must cease.

Flavor of Bread.

There is no baking powder which produces such sweet, and tasteful food as the Royal Baking Powder. One of the greatest of the claims of the manufacturers of this powder is that it leavens without fermentation or decomposition, and that the exact equivalents of its constituents are used, whereby a perfectly neutral result is obtained, which invariably guarantees that particular and peculiar flavor in bread so much desired and appreciated by all. In fact the oldest patrons of this powder declare that they get not only a superlative lightness of the bread, but that the biscuit, cakes, muffins, etc., never taste quite so sweet or so good as when they are raised by the Royal Baking Powder. This comes from its perfectly uniform combination of the best and purest materials, as has been shown to be true by the recent examinations made by both the United States and Canadian governments, which reveal the fact beyond a question that the Royal Baking Powder is the most scientifically compounded of any in the market. The Royal gives a delicions flavor to the bread.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

A parrot in a hospital at Pittsburg got drunk on a half cup of alcohol left in her reach and shocked the inmates with her profanity.

DRUNKENNESS—LIQUOR HABIT—In all the world there is but one cure, Dr. Haines' Golden Specific.

It can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it, effecting a speedy and permanent cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. Thousands of drunkards have been cured who have taken the Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and today believe they quit drinking of their own free will. HON. GREEN SMITH.

(From the North Vernon Sun.)

It is with pleasure that we announce to the democrats of this state that Hon. A. G. Smith will be a candidate for attorney-general at the next democratic state convention.

Mr. Smith needs no introduction to the people of Indiana, for his name is familiar to every household in the state, and he is known throughout the Union.

Green Smith served four years in the Indiana senate with such brilliant results as to win the confidence and admiration of the democratic party of the whole country.

His course in the senate of 1885 won for him the presidency of that body, and he carried off that honor only after a bitter contest with some of the politicians of his own party, assisted by a storm of abuse from the republican press and party that for a time seemed to completely obscure his political life. But two years later he arose from the dust and smoke of partisan hate as the leader of his party in a contest where defeat would have been a dishonor.

In that contest it was the policy of the republican party to destroy a democratic majority of two on a joint ballot in the general assembly and re-elect Ben. Harrison to the United States Senate.

It was the determination of Green Smith to preserve that majority and elect a democrat to succeed Mr. Harrison. And well he did his work. On this line the battle was waged with unabating zeal and fought to a finish. General Harrison personally managed his own campaign but had to surrender his sword to Green Smith.

No man was ever abused so much by the republican party. No one ever suffered so much from maledictions and detraction. But neither abuse or detraction, nor the threats of personal violence or the presence of armed mobs, were sufficient to move him from the course he had adopted.

The contest of the general assembly of 1887, its grand achievements and lasting results, will never be lost sight of.

Hon. C. L. Jewett, in a public address, once said that "Green Smith, throughout the dangers of that exciting contest, was the stone wall of democracy.

Gov. Hill, of New York, once said: "Yes I carefully watched that contest, and it has often occurred to me since that, while it costs millions in some of the western states to elect a United States senator, in Indiana it only requires the courage and stubborn democracy of Green Smith."

Mr. Smith is a lawyer fully equipped for the place.

As a democrat, he deserves it, if anybody does.

And this time he will "get there," and the state will go democratic, too.

Poor Expenses.

How would it suit those who think our expenses for poor are too high, to study over the following resolutions adopted at their March term by the Board of Commissioners of Boone county, Iowa? Read them anyhow.

Resolved: That the present financial condition of the tax payers of Boone county, calls for the most economical expenditure of the county funds.

Resolved: That the overseers of poor in Boone county, are hereby instructed to order or furnish nothing for the paupers under their care except where it is positively necessary. Clothing and shoes to be cheap and serviceable, and articles of food to be confined to flour, meat, potatoes and salt, and no articles that may be classed as luxuries except in case of sickness. Orders for supplies or board for people able to support themselves not to be given at all.

Resolved: That overseers of the poor be required to itemize the different articles ordered for paupers and specify the the quantity and quality of each article and this order must be presented to the Board of Commissioners with the bill of goods furnished. When this is done it will not be necessary for the overseer to O. K. the bill.

Resolved: That people furnishing supplies on orders from overseers of poor are warned that their bills will be subject to dissaproval if they furnish unnecessary or high priced articles of any sort.

Coughing

IS Nature's effort to expel foreign substances from the bronchial passages. Frequently, this causes inflammation and the need of an anodyne. No other expectorant or anodyne is equal to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It assists Nature in ejecting the mucus, allays irritation, induces repose, and is the most popular of all cough cures.

"Of the many preparations before the public for the cure of colds, coughs, bronchitis, and kindred diseases, there is none, within the range of my experience, so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For years I was subject to colds, followed by terrible coughs. About four years ago, when so afflicted, I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and to lay all other remedies aside. I did so, and within a week was well of my cold and cough. Since then I have always kept this preparation in the house, and feel comparatively secure." —Mrs. L. L. Brown, Denmark, Miss.

"A few years ago I took a severe cold which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continual use of the Pectoral, a permanent cure was effected."—Horace Fairbrother, Rockingham, Vt.

Farmers Tired of Ingalls.

A dispatch from Topeka, Kansas, sent to a Chicago Daily, says:

"Forty of the fifty-nine delegates in attendance at the Farmers' Alliance meeting here last night voted in favor of a resolution declaring against the re-election of John J. Ingalls to the United States senate. The meeting was a secret one, and every effort was made to keep from the public the nature of the resolution adopted. When the resolution in regard to Senator Ingalls was read a large majority of the delegates set up a cheer which made the windows rattle. A long discussion followed, the friends of the unpopular statesman urging upon the delegates that to adopt such a resolution would do great harm to the republican party, to which most of them belonged. This consideration seemed to have little weight with the delegates, however, one of them remarking caustically that he had in the past shown a great deal more regard for the party named than it had ever shown for him. He had voted the republican ticket for many years, but was beginning to think it was high time to vote for his own interests now, and he meant to do so. It was in vain that the friends of Senator Ingalls entreated, and even threatened. The resolution was put upon its passage and agreed to. It is as follows:

Notwithstanding the fact that John J. Ingalls has represented Kansas for eighteen years in the United States senate, it is a difficult matter for his constituents to point to a single measure he has ever championed in the interest of the great agricultural and laboring element of Kansas, and we will not support, by our vote or influence, any candidate for the legislature who favors his re-election to the United States senate.

The other resolutions, which were adopted without a dissentient vote were as follows:

1 We demand a legislative enactment apportioning the shrinkage of farm values that are under mortgage obligations, by reason of contractions of the circulating medium, or other unjust legislation between the mortgagor and the mortgagee in proportion to their respective interests at the time the mortgage was drawn.

2 We demand that congress appoint a committee to investigate the original bill relating to national bonds, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the word "for" was erased and the word "after" substituted, making the bonds payable with the premium of 28 or 30 per cent.

3 We demand the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people."

IN GREAT PERIL.

Thrilling Experience of the People on the Steamer City of Paris.

Queenstown special: The stern of the steamer City of Paris is deeply sunk, and her bows are high out of the water. A number of steam pumps are at work on the ship, but they are hardly gaining on the water which is flowing into her. The accident by which the City of Paris was disabled was caused by the breakage of the low-pressure cylinder of the port engine, the flying pieces of metal forcing the bulkhead and disabling the starboard engine. The passengers became panic-stricken when they found that the ship was making water and that there was a possibility of the vessel foundering. The water, which flooded the engine compartment, was forced through the injection tubes, which, it is alleged, the engineer during the excitement had neglected to shut. The starboard engine was shattered almost to pieces, the port engine-room was filled with upward of two thousand tons of water, and the port engine was entirely useless. Terrible consequences would have ensued but for the bravery of the second engineer, who, at the risk of his life, enveloped as he was in hissing steam, managed to shut off the steam, thus saving the machinery from total demolition, which would have happened had the engines continued working. He then escaped unhurt. Statements by passengers, which are similar to other accounts of the accident, are to the effect that there was a loud crash followed by an explosion. The ship quivered and the engine thumped. The vessel leaked rapidly from the hole in her bottom. The officers calmed the excited passengers. The conduct of the crew was admirable. The weather was fine and there was no wind. During the sixty hours that the steamer drifted she kept showing distress signals, sending up rockets and burning flares.

On Friday morning the Adriatic was sighted. She offered to convey the passengers to New York, but the offer was declined. The Adriatic then proceeded and sent the Aldersgate to aid the City of Paris. Three tugs joined the disabled vessel to accompany her to port. The passengers held a meeting at which they returned thanks to Providence for their delivery. They also expressed their appreciation of the exemplary conduct of the captain and crew and raised a subscription of £600 for the Liverpool and New York Mariner's institute.

A later dispatch just received from Queenstown states that the water flowing into the City of Paris, is gaining on the steam pumps. It is probable that the number of pumps will be increased, and if it is then found that they can not hold their own against the water the steamer will be beached to prevent her from sinking. Her cargo will be transferred to other vessels. Tugs are in constant attendance to tow the City of Paris to Liverpool in the event of the divers succeeding in lessening the leak.

Fire in a Convent.

Milwaukee special: Fire started in the St. Joseph Convent, a four-story structure located on the outskirts of the city, and spread so rapidly that before the fire department could reach the scene the fire had gained such headway that their efforts to subdue the flames were futile and the building burned to the ground. Three inmates of the convent were injured by jumping from the burning building, one fatally. Two firemen were also slightly injured by falling walls. The fire mysteriously originated in the boiler room. Loss on building and contents, $60,000; insurance $30,000. The names of the injured are: Sister Blanka, back broken; jumped from the roof; will die.

Mary Werner, (novitiate) jumped from the fourth story; injured internally; will probably recover.

Rose Minet, (novitiate) jumped from the fourth story; limbs and arms bruised.

Lieut. Chase and Jacob Webber, of fire company No. 4, slightly bruised by falling walls.

A Foul Murder.

Last week Lizzie Johns, a young lady who had been an inmate of Florence Stevens' house of ill-fame, at Lima, Ohio, died in such a manner as to lead to the belief that she was murdered. The coroner's inquest developed that such was the fact. William Murray, a machinist of Cincinnati, was arrested, charged with a murderous assault upon the girl, but at the trial he was proven innocent. Officers arrested a man named Frank Krontz, a Swede, who has been fully identified as the guilty party by the Stevens woman. Krontz admits being in the house, but denies the assault.

A Ghastly Discovery.

A ghastly discovery was made the other morning in Bloody Run, a small stream in the eastern part of Detroit, which takes its name from a historic tragedy. Boys playing in the block discovered human remains in a hole which is being filled up. The ghastly fragment is that of the left side of a man's body with one leg attached. The head was missing. The section of the body was removed to the morgue. The fact that the flesh remains on the bones leads the coroner to believe that the body was not cut up by medical students.

Accident at Butler.

Edward Aldrick, stationary engineer at the Wabash shops, at Butler, Ind., in attempting to pinch a boiler engine washing machine off its center was struck on the right side of the head with a bar and severely hurt. He will recover.

Vice-Admiral Rowan Dead.

Vice-Admiral Stephen Rowan, United States Navy (retired), died of Bright's disease at the Ebbitt house, Washington.

A TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.

An Explosion in a Chicago Sugar Refinery Plant Causes Loss of Life and Property.

There was a disastrous explosion in the Chicago Sugar Refinery Company's plant at Chicago. Four men were fatally hurt and twenty others severely burned. Spontaneous combustion is supposed to have been the cause. Twenty-seven men were at work in the starch room. General Manager Arnold Behrs had just entered when there was a tremendous clap, followed by flashes of fire and rumbling of falling timber. Shattered portions of the building and machinery were hurled in every direction and the workmen found themselves beneath a mass of debris which was soon ablaze. With the aid of eighteen fire engine crews, a score of bruised and bleeding victims were rescued. Four men were killed. General Manager Behr and the foreman received very fearful burns about the face and hands. The others injured are: Hanson Trape, John Gilliger, Oscar Schultz, Fred Kraft, Peter Grant, Anton Hallock, Joseph Oswald, George B. Vorax, and six others whose names are unknown. The loss on the buildings, stock and machinery is about $10,000.

DEATH AND DESTRUCTION.

Mark the Path of the Fiercest Air Monster of a Century.

A special from Louisville, dated the 28th, says: The Falls City, which sat so proudly on the banks of the turbulent Ohio but twenty-four hours ago, giving no thought to danger, is to-night mourning the loss of 300 of her citizens whose lives went out in the twinkling of an eye, and her sons and daughters are standing around the bedsides of hundreds of others who were injured, many of them fatally, in the terrible disaster that has overtaken her. The calamity came without warning and it found men and women engaged in their usual avocations, and many seeking pleasure only to find the halls of their gaiety and mirth turned suddenly into the most terrible of sepulchres. Early in the evening the clouds, west and southwest of the city had a threatening aspect, and a brisk wind with rain prevailed for two or three hours, but although the violence of the storm increased as darkness approached, no alarm was excited.

About 8 o'clock the clouds were seen to mass themselves to the southwest firmly. Half an hour later the blast came with terrific effect, the culmination as it were of all its threatenings of hours before. Just west of New Albany, the Ohio bends to the south and it was here and on the Indiana side that the storm assumed the proportions of a cyclone and started upon its devastating course. Crossing the river at a point just below New Albany, it struck the suburb of Portland and unroofed several houses; and, apparently fed by the partial destruction, it struck the city at Seventeenth and Broadway and took a direct northeast course, striking the squares in its path at the angles, and extending about one-half square in width.

Each square brought it nearer to the business portion of the city until it struck Main and Eleventh.

Here its track was broadened until it covered three squares, passing out of the city at Seventh street, where it crossed to the Indiana side.

The space traversed was not less than three miles and on every side widespread destruction was visible. Massive buildings of brick and stone were crushed and scattered on every side and hardly a residence fell that some of the inmates were not killed or injured.

The cries of the survivors and the groans of the injured mingled together and added to the appalling desolation of the scene.

At first there could be no organized effort at rescue. Hundreds of homes had been demolished, husbands and wives, parents and children had been separated, and each, knowing nothing of the condition of the other, ran frantically from place to place looking for the lost.

Large crowds from other districts soon assembled and inaugurated a search, but the means were inadequate and the heart-rending cries that broke the air completely unmanned the searchers. As if to add to the horror, fire at once broke out in all parts of the devastated district and the bewildered firemen did not know which, of the half dozen places, to go to first. The Terrell & Deitz House on Eighth street, Sim's furnishing house, the colored Odd Fellows' hall, and Zeegan's saloon, all some distance apart, were on fire at the same time.

The streets are thronged. There are at least a hundred familes homeless in the streets. One woman told how that very evening her husband had paid to the Building Association the last dollar they owed upon their house, and now all that remains is a confused mass of brick and mortar. Hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of goods lay last night upon business streets at the mercy of thieves. At many places towering walls of brick are oscillating in the air, ready to descend at any moment. These points of danger are guarded by the police and a military company called the Louisville Legion, who drove the surging crowd back at the point of the bayonet. At the entrances of the various "dead rooms" stand a breathless mob clamoring for admittance, but all are invariably refused unless it be to identify some relative or friend. The search for victims is going steadily on and each hour adds to the already long list. At many places the men labor in great danger. Chief Engineer Herman visited the waterworks and found that the stand pipe had been completely blown down, but no other damage. This will soon leave the city without water. No pumping can be done and there is only about water enough in the reservoir to last for five days. The police, aided by the Louisville Legion, 250 strong, are busy guarding property. There is considerable diversity of opinion as to the property loss. The lowest estimate is put at $1,000,000, the highest at $3,000,000, and the best, grounded upon the facts presented, place it at two and one-half million.

At Metropolis, Ill., between 200 and 300 houses were demolished and it is thought 100 people were killed.

The destruction at Jeffersonville is estimated at $500,000.

At Belleview, Ky., a white man and two negroes were burned to death in the debris of a ruined building.

At Grand River, Ky., a hotel, eight houses, and a bridge over the Cumberland were destroyed, two men and a boy were killed and seventeen people injured.

From various places in Tennessee, a few death are reported, while buildings were shattered and blown down.

Late dispatches state that the tornado struck the town of Bowling Green, Warren County, Ky., and completely wiped it out. As the wires are down no detailed report can be obtained.

THE INDIANAPOLIS HORROR.

Report of the Coroner's Investigation as to Its Cause.

Indianapolis special: Coroner Wagner has completed his investigation of the disaster connected with the Bowen-Merrill fire, which occurred on March 17, and which resulted in the killing of twelve firemen. The verdict in each of he cases, twelve in number, was alike, with the exception that the deaths did not occur on the same day. The finding was as follows: "Anthony Voltz came to his death March 17, 1890, through injuries received from falling timbers and bricks at the Bowen-Merrill fire, (March 17), while in the discharge of his duty as a member of the fire department, the building collapsing after the fire was under control. The Bowen-Merrill building was constructed at different periods, having been enlarged to accommodate an increased stock and weight on a foundation not so intended by its original builder, the changes and additions culminating in a superstructure depending in part for its support upon adjoining buildings equally faulty. Building experts and the owner declared on oath they would not now erect such building. The fire, while the immediate agent, was not of itself sufficient to cause the collapse, I find that the building was of faulty construction. The testimony is unanimous that the fire department, from Chief to pipemen acted promptly and intelligently. I find that the Chief has the fullest confidence of his men and that he and they deserve the commendation of the community. To prevent further calamities I recommend to the proper authorities the appointment of a competent building inspector."

AFTER THE EXCITEMENT.

It Is Thought That the List of Dead Will Be Increased as the Search Progresses—The Loss to Property.

A special from Louisville, dated the 31st, says: After the first excitement had somewhat subsided, a new feature has presented itself, which seems likely to increase the horror of the great catastrophe. It was thought late last night that the dead would not exceed 150 persons, but such will not be the case. In the streets to-day, were scores of fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters weeping and appealing piteously to the police and militiamen on duty to give them some account of their missing relatives. The scene about the Falls City Hall was heartrendering. Crowds of people filled every available space and inquiries thick and fast were made of the relief corps at hand regarding friends and relatives still missing. While over eighty bodies have already been recovered, it is almost certain that as many more remain. A city official who was in charge of affairs there to-day, said that it was safe to say that at least a hundred more bodies would be found.

"I know," said he, "that they must be there. One would only have to stand here and hear the many inquiries made by people who have friends that are still missing to be convinced. I have been on duty here ever since early this morning, and have been besieged with questions on all sides by people who claim relatives in the ruins."

There were nearly two hundred people in the Falls City Hall at the time of the disaster, and it is evident from the condition of the ruins that few, very few, indeed, escaped.

The workmen, who number hundreds, are at work removing all the debris, and expect soon to reach a point where the remaining dead are supposed to be. In the third story back hall is where the dancing class of children were when the building fell. How one soul could escape could not even be imagined. There are still a large number of the children missing, and are certainly yet beneath the mass of ruins. While the work is being pushed, thousands stand around with abated breath, expecting momentarily some horrible revelation.

Among the throng of people are mothers wringing their hands and crying to God in their mental agony and suspense.

The loss to property will not be less than $3,000,000.

It Dropped.

A tremor of the earth and a sinking of the houses in the northern part of Wilkesbarre, Pa., demonstrated the fact that a cave-in had occurred somewhere in the Conygham mine. A party of nine explorers made a descent into the workings, but did not deem it advisable to approach near to the cave. They find that the cave is in a direct line with the recent settling under the Lehigh Railroad shops, and round-house. As far as can be learned the settling in the interior is undoubtedly wide spread and has caused great damage. The mine is operated by the Delaware and Hudson Coal Company.

No Bail for Pettit.

Judge Langdon, in the Pettit murder case, at Lafayette, Ind., overruled the motion to strike from the records so much of the evidence as related to acts or declarations of Mrs. Whitehead, done or made in the absence of Pettit, and thereupon decided that the petitioner had not made out a case such as was bailable under the State constitution, and remanded Pettit to jail. The petitioner excepted, and an appeal was granted to the Supreme Court. The habeas corpus proceedings was mainly to ascertain the State's evidence.

A Fatal Runaway.

At Madison, Ind., Capt. Henry Tower and his business partner, Charles Cravens, were driving on Main street, when their horses became frightened at a passing street-car and ran away. The lines broke and the animals becoming uncontrollable both gentleman jumped. Cravens received a slight injury but Capt. Tower is dangerously hurt. The team ran upon the sidewalk, running over and possibly fatally injuring Miss Alice Yater, of North Madison.

A Young Wife's Troubles.

A few weeks ago John Weirich, jr., of Shipshewana, near Goshen, Ind., quarreled with his young wife, as the result of which she returned to her father's home. Her troubles, however, so preyed on her feelings that the other morning she sought relief in suicide, taking a large dose of strychnine. Upon being told of her action Weirich went nearly insane with grief. He condemns himself as the sole cause of the trouble, for he betrayed her before marriage.

Divorce Courts Too Slow.

At Sandusky, O., William Doolin, whose wife applied a few days ago for a divorce from him, got drunk, went to her house and assaulted her with an ax. The woman managed to escape alive, but was badly bruised. Doolin was arrested and held for trial.

INDIANA HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crime, Casualties and General News Notes.

Station Agent Found Robbed and Dying.

Poseyville, twenty-eight miles from Evansville, is excited over a probable murder. The victim is W. A. Traynor, station agent of the P. D. & E. He was found one morning recently, lying face down, in a trench between his house and the depot. He was unconscious, and when first picked up was thought to be dead, but life was still perceptible. Lying near was a shot-bag, with which he had probably been assaulted, as there were marks on his face and head of blows received from such a source. His trowsers pockets were turned inside out and rifled of their contents. It is thought by the attending physicians, that he cannot recover. Aside from the direct injury from the blows on his head and face, exposure to such a night as it was is enough by itself to kill him. The circumstances of the affair can only be surmised, but the probabilities are that Mr. Traynor was followed to the place where he was found by a gang of tramps who have been lounging around the depot for a couple of days, and when in a secluded spot they made the attack, and after robbing his pockets threw him over into the ditch for dead. How much they succeeded in getting is a mystery, but they must have been scared before concluding their search, as an express package containing $9 was found in his inside coat pocket and his watch was also secure.

Ex-Governor Cumback's Revenge.

Hon. Will Cumback is 61 years old. He has always been an advocate of "woman's rights"—that is, of the right of women to do as they please so long as they do not detract from the pleasures and enjoyment of the sterner sex. The prevalent custom at Greensburg, his home, of the ladies entertaining alone—giving "hen parties," if you please—has not met his hearty approbation, and forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. Hence, there was a commotion when the fair sex was barred the pleasure of meeting their husbands, sons, and lovers at a brilliant gathering at the elegant home of the ex-Governor on his birthday. Several days ago about one hundred gentlemen each received a neat card on which was engraved: "Will Cumback, at home Monday evening, March 24, 1890, at 6 o'clock. If you can't come, say so." At the upper left-hand corner was the picture of a fine-looking rooster, under which were the words: "This is not a hen party." The gathering was a merry one, and many lonely women spent the evening at home sorrowfully realizing that revenge is sweet—to the other side.

Some months ago he was struck in the breast with a pitched ball. At the time he experienced no serious pain from the accident, but later he gradually began to grow weak, and was compelled to go to bed, from which he was never able to rise.

—Natural gas was struck at Rockport at a depth of only 560 feet. The flow is a strong one and almost odorless. It is by far the strongest well in Southern Indiana, and the gas men believe the force will be increased by going deeper. The town is wild with excitement at the prospects for a boom. Bells were rung, whistles blown, the bands paraded the streets, stores and public buildings are decorated with flags and everybody is happy.

The team ran upon the sidewalk, running over and possibly fatally injuring Miss Alta Gates, daughter of Geo. Gates, of North Madison, who had come to town for medicine for a sick sister. —A bold plagiarism has just been unearthed at Crawfordsville. Perry Martin, of that city, and a senior in Wabash College, took the $40 Baldwin prize at the oritorical contest, but it is now known beyond a doubt that his oration was taken word for word from the interstate prize oration delivered by R. M. LaFollette, of Madison, Wis., in 1879, at Iowa City. The proof is certain, for copies of the two speeches have been compared. It was thought at the time that the speech, the subject of which was "Iago," was beyond the calibre of the speaker, and an investigation led to the discovery of the fraud. R. M. LaFollette, author of the original "Iago," is a cousin of Martin and represents the Madison, Wis., district, in Congress. Martin has left the city.

Recently the firm secured the services of a detective and the other night one of the firm, the detective and two other men secreted themselves in the store. Shortly after 12 o'clock two men were heard prying at the back door, and after little trouble they gained an entrance. When in the act of plundering the store the detective and his assistants rushed upon them and captured Lemuel Crockett, while the other unknown person escaped, after swimming a canal and having the contents of a revolver emptied at him. Crockett is a brother-in-law to Lee Morgan, who is now serving a seven-year sentence in the penitentiary for committing several burglaries, and when taken to Richmond said that if he was imprisoned would turn State's evidence.

—Josiah Hackert, of Goshen, has been given a verdict of $1,200 against the Lake Shore Railroad for the death of his son, an employe of the road, who was knocked from the top of a freight car by a low bridge.

MR. BALFOUR'S REMEDY.

HOW HE WOULD APPEASE THE IRISH TENANTRY.

His Land-Purchase Bill Introduced in the House of Commons—The Measure Discussed by the Metropolitan Press—Parnell Interviewed on the Subject.

London cable: In the House of Commons Mr. Balfour introduced his Irish land purchase bill. It facilitates the transfer of land and improves methods of purchase, making them cheaper and more rapid than those provided by the Ashbourne act.

Purchase is made voluntary. There is no risk to the British taxpayer, although British credit is utilized. The maximum advances allowed the buyer is fixed at twenty years' rent less local rates paid the landord.

The total of the advances which may may be made under the bill is in amount £33,000,000. The provisions of the bill had been kept secret and the detailed statement and explanation of Mr. Balfour were listened to with the deepest attention.

Mr. Gladstone followed Mr. Balfour. While unable to pronounce at once on so elaborate and comprehensive a measure, he said he felt compelled to admit that the government had followed a courageous policy.

Mr. Balfour promised on the part of the government an unbiased discussion of the merits of the bill.

The Post, referring to the land-purchase bill, says that the plan for obtaining the needful security is complicated and artificial, while any organized resistance to its operation would in the end involve a recourse to drastic measures. If it can be bettered nobody is more likely to welcome the fact than Mr. Balfour. Unless this is done it deserves the treatment due the only feasible scheme under public notice.

The Daily News says that a more elaborate and complicated measure than the land-purchase has seldom, if ever, been introduced in Parliament. One thing stands out clearly from the tangled labyrinth—that British credit may be pledged to the extent of £33,000,000 for the benefit nominally of the Irish tenant, but really for the benefit of the landlord.

The Chronicle says the scheme is comprehensive and ingenious, and if the opposition approach the question in the spirit of Mr. Gladstone's remarks, with the view of bettering Ireland rather than of damaging the government, we may get a scheme that will go far toward solving the Irish question.

The Times, commenting upon the land-purchase bill, says: "We do not like to commit ourselves, without having seen and studied the bill, to a decisive judgment. Doubtless there are some provisions which are open to comment. But upon the whole the bill seems to prompt the creation, in process of time, of a peasant proprietary on a very large scale without practically involving the British exchequer or the tax-payers in any additional risk whatever."

Dublin cable: The Freeman's Journal prints the report of an interview with Mr. Parnell on the subject of the land-purchase bill. He said the bill was absurd and objectionable in the highest degree. The liability which the English tax-payer will not incur it is coolly proposed to transfer to the Irish cess-payer. That the object of the government is to inflate the value of the Irish lands to an inordinate extent is clearly disclosed in Balfour's speech. A fatal defeat of the measure is that it proposes to give no local control over its administration. In that respect Mr. Parnell said it is a long way behind Trevelyan's bill.

Mr. Davitt is equally pronounced against the bill as an insidious proposal to give the landlord more than the value of his land.

Mr. Sexton says the bill is less favorable to the tenant than the Ashburne act.

YATES ON BISMARCK.

No Longer Will the Prince Play the Part of a King.

Edmund Yates London cable to the New York Tribune says: "The Berlin correspondents of the London press have dilated on the physical resemblance between the new Chancellor of the German empire and Bismarck. There is, indeed, a striking personal likeness except in one particular, and that is the voice, which has not been pointed out. Nothing astonishes those who see and hear the late Chancellor for the first time so much as the apparent incongruity between his physique and the weakness of his speech.

"Gen. von Caprivi, on the other hand, has a clear, sonorous voice, strengthened by much use in the open air. It was in the summer of 1866, during the Bohemian campaign, that Caprivi first came into notice. He was intrusted with the revision of all telegrams to newspapers. While taking care to satisfy his military superiors, he was not less successful in winning the favor of newspapers, even of those representing democratic views.

"The Emperor has made a good choice in his new chancellor. He will not attempt to overthrow the personality of his master, whose purpose is not to diminish his own brilliancy by employing ambitious and clever ministers. Gen. von Caprivi, moreover, is a bachelor. The Bismarck gatherings in Wilhelm strasse, where, in the midst of a small circle of parliamentary stars, the Prince played the part of a king, will be known no more, nor will those famous diplomatic dinners on the old Emperor's birthday, when the Princess would light the cigarettes of any plenipotentiary whose favor was to be cultivated, be seen in the old Prince's garden-room again."

WAR WITH THE BROTHERHOOD.

The Federation of Labor and the Boston Players' Club Quarrel.

Boston (Mass.) dispatch: The carpenters at work on the Boston players' grounds were ordered to quit by the Carpenters' union, and all but seven of the eighty employes went out.

According to walking delegate Clincard of the Carpenters' union, the Federation of Labor had been given to understand that in payment of its indorsement the brotherhood would see to it that contracts were let out only to such contractors as would agree to employ union labor, pay union wages, and enforce the union working day.

It is claimed that not only has the brotherhood club of Boston failed to conform to the requirements of the union, but that the brotherhood managers of the other cities have practically ignored the indorsement of the labor organizations and the wishes of the Carpenters' unions in Chicago and Philadelphia.

Telegraphic Brevities.

COLE & KNETT, silk manufacturers of Paterson, N. J., have assigned. Liabilities, about $85,000.

THE Grand Army of the Republic has bought a tract of land comprising the Cedar creek battle-ground.

ALL the wire-nail works in the National association which shut down two weeks ago have resumed operations.

R. M. KING, a Seventh-Day Adventist of Obion county, Tennessee, has been fined $75 for working in his fields on Sunday.

JOHN S. FARLOW, president of the Cincinnati, Sandusky & Cleveland railroad, died suddenly at his residence in Newton, Mass.

The Impassable Ten-Word Limit.

"It is curious," said the ancient citizen yesterday, "what strange things we hear in the cars, and in what queer channels people's minds run. In a ride of ten miles this morning, occupying thirty-five minutes, four young women, just across the aisle from me, occupied the entire time in discussing the wording of a telegram which they designed to send. One of the four had left her wallet behind, and desired to telegraph for it to be sent after her.

"'Now, we must get it in ten words,' said one. 'Let's see. Go to top bureau drawer in my room, get pocketbook, take to train—'

"'That's too long,' interrupted another. 'You don't need to say in my room, for of course your drawer is in your room.'

"'Go to top bureau drawer, get pocketbook—'

"'Purse, say purse.'

"'Go to top bureau drawer, get purse, take to train—'

"'You want to say something about being in a hurry, so they will deliver it at once, right off.'

"'Get purse from top bureau drawer, take train, please deliver. How would that do?'

"'Why not say haste, or immediate, or hurry?'

"And so they went on and on and on to the end of the chapter, until the people about them could think of nothing else save top bureau drawers and pocketbooks, and they did not cease until the train ran into the station at Boston. What queer people there are in this world—especially women."—Boston Advertiser.

The Same Name.

Some years ago a very rich resident of Boston—a several-millionaire, in fact—was considerably bothered because there lived in town a man whose name was exactly the same as his—Barton Tucker, we may call it at a venture. After he had stood it a good while, Mr. Barton Tucker, the millionaire, sought out his namesake, and found that he was a teamster, and a poor man at that.

"Is your name Barton Tucker?" asked the millionaire of the truckman, who had just completed taking the feed-bags off his horses' noses, and was preparing to move on.

"That's my name, sir," said the truckman.

"Well, it's my name, too. I came to see you and make a proposition to you. You see, your letters come to me, and I dare say some of mine have come to you, which isn't pleasant for a man of my responsibilities. Now I want to ask you a plain question."

"Fire away!"

"How much money would it take to induce you to go before the Legislature and get your name changed to something else?"

The truckman gave a long whistle, and then he said—with a big oath, if the truth must be told—as he mounted his seat:

"It would take a darned sight more money than you've got, Mr. Barton Tucker! Git up!"

Then his conveyance lumbered away down the street, leaving the millionaire to reflect that a poor man's name may be as dear to him as a rich man's.

A Disappointment.

A New York landlord, who was in a tight place financially, sent his son, a rather fresh young man, to the tenant to collect the rent. On the young man returning in a hilarious mood, the father exclaimed:

"Thank Heaven, you are back, and with the money, I hope."

"He couldn't pay all of it right then, so I consented to take half of it."

"That's all right. Give it to me."

"He didn't have it."—Texas Siftings.

GENTS—This is to certify that I had what is called sciatic rheumatism so badly that I was all drawn over to one side. My hip sank in so that you could lay your hand in the cavity, and I could do no work for over one year. I tried some of the best physicians and did almost everything I could hear or think of, and nothing did me any good until I purchased a bottle of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup of Hines & Son, druggists, Van Wert, O. Four bottles cured me and have never had it since.

LITTLE KATE—A SONG.

BY J. B. SALISBURY.

It was down by the hedge-row that little Kate wandered,
Little Kate, Little Kate,
Full many strange things in her wise head she pondered,
Little Kate, Little Kate.
There was joy in her voice, there was mirth in her eye,
And she cast sundry glances around her so shy
That the birds caught her secret, and twittered and warbled,
"He is coming, dear Kate—why are your cheeks marbled,
Little Kate, Pretty Kate?"

Her heart was as light as a bird when it's winging,
Little Kate, Pretty Kate,
And she sang a sweet lay—'twas restful the singing,
Little Kate, Pretty Kate.
"My Harry is coming, my sailor, to-day,
For his ship lies at anchor over there on the bay;
Soon his strong honest heart will beat firmly 'gainst mine—
He's my king, I'm his kingdom, and love is the wine,
I am Kate, Little Kate."

But her Harry returned not—'neath the green seas he's sleeping,
Little Kate, Little Kate,
While the elves and the fairies above him are weeping,
Little Kate, Pretty Kate.
Alone she still wanders by the hedge-row and thorn,
And sighs: "He is coming, it may be at morn;
He will ask the kind queen of the fairies to bring,
To bring him to Lathmoor to hear Kitty sing,
Little Kate, Lonely Kate."

THE STORY OF A TERRIBLE EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF AN ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.

By F. W. HUME.

CHAPTER VII.

A JUVENILE DETECTIVE.

Flip was a small, dried-up looking boy, born and brought up in a London slum. He had no parents—at least, none that he could remember—and had he been asked how he came into existence he would probably have answered, Topsy-like, that he "growed." His mother and father had both deserted him at an early age, giving him nothing to remember them by, not even a name, so he was thrown on the world a squalling brat. Nevertheless, he managed to get along somehow to the age of fifteen, at which period of his life Dowker chanced on him and his prospects began to improve.

Dowker underneath his drab exterior concealed a kind heart, and, having met Flip one night in the rain, had taken compassion on the miserable morsel of humanity and given him a cup of coffee to warm him and a roll of bread to satisfy his hunger. Flip was so touched at this disinterested kindness that he attached himself with dog-like fidelity to the detective and tried to serve him to the best of his small ability.

Having had to fight his way in the world, Flip had developed a wonderful sharpness of intellect at a very early age, and Dowker turned this hunger-educated instinct to good account, for he often set the little urchin to follow cabs, run messages, and do other small matters which he required. Flip performed all these duties so well and promptly that Dowker began to take an interest in him, and set to work to cultivate this stunted flower which had sprung up amid the evil weeds of the slums. He had a meeting place appointed with Flip in Drury Lane, and whenever he wanted him went there to seek him out. Flip listened to his patron's instructions carefully, and, having a wonderfully tenacious memory of an uncivilized kind, he never forgot what he was told. In return for services rendered, Dowker gave him a shilling a week, and on this small sum Flip managed to exist, with occasional help from casual passers-by.

Every one in London knows Drury lane, that quaint, dirty narrow street leading to the Strand.

Flip was sitting considering at the edge of the pavement, with his feet, for sake of coolness, in the gutter, and his eyes fixed on three dirty pennies lying in his own dirty drown palm.

"Wot's h'up, guv'nor?" he asked, with a leer. Flip's leer was not pleasant—it had such an unholy appearance. "More larks—my h'eye, I thort I'd never twig you agin. 'Ave you bin h'over the gardin-wall arter a prig?"

"Hold your tongue," said Dowker, sharply. "I want you to do something for me—are you hungry?"

"Not much," said Flip, coolly, "but I don't mind a 'am san'wich."

Dowker cast a sharp glance at the ragged little figure walking beside him. "Where have you been getting money?" he asked.

"My h'eye, it's a rigler game," said Flip, rubbing his grimy hands together, as they turned into a ham and beef shop. "I'll tell yer all—'am I'll 'ave, an' bread."

Being supplied with these luxuries at the expense of Dowker, Flip stuffed his mouth with a liberal portion, and then began to talk.

"Larst Monday," he began.

"Ha," said Dowker, suddenly recollecting the date of the murder, "yesterday?"

"No, the Monday afore," said Flip, "it were at nite, h'awful foggy, my h'eye, a rigler corker it were. I was as 'ungry as a bloomin' tyke an' couldn't find you nohow, so h'up I goes to Soho to see h'old Jem Mux, you knows 'im, guvnor, the cove as keeps the 'Pink 'Un.'"

"Yes, the sporting pub," replied Dowker.

"Same game," said Flip, "'e gives me summat to eat when I arsks it, so I goes h'up to cadge some wictuals. I gits cold meat, my h'eye, prime, an' bread an' beer, so when I 'ad copped the grub, I was a-gittin' away h'out of the bar when a swell cove comes in—lor', what a swell—fur coat an' a shiny 'at. Ses 'e to the gal, ses 'e, 'Is that 'ere sparrin' comin' orf this evenin'?' 'Yes,' says she, 'in the drorin'-room.' 'Right you h'are,' ses 'e. 'I want to see it afore I leave Hengland. I was a-goin down to my yotsh,' ses 'e, 'but I'll put it orf till to-morrow, as I wants to see this set-to,' then 'e twigs me, an' ses 'e, 'Are you cold?' ses 'e. 'Yes,' ses I. ''Ungry?' 'Not much,' ses I. ''Ere's some tin for you, you pore little devil,' an' Im blessed if 'e didn't tip me a sov, so I've been livin' like a dook on it since I sawr you—nice game, ain't it, guv'nor?"

During this recital Dowker had not paid much attention till Flip spoke of the yacht, then he suddenly pricked up his ears, for it dawned on him that this unknown benefactor of Flip's might possibly be Lord Calliston.

"Monday night he was going out of town," murmured Dowker, "but he was always a sporting blade, so perhaps he stopped for this fight and then went down next morning. I wonder where he met Lady Balscombe. Ah, well, it's nothing to do with the murder at all events; but I'd like to know if he really did leave town on the night."

Then he turned to Flip.

"Did the swell see Jem Mux?" he asked sharply.

"Rather," said Flip, an' Jem 'e called 'im my lord, so 'e must 'ave been a bloomin' blindin' toff."

"My lord," repeated Dowker thoughtfully. "Oh! no doubt it was Lord Calliston. I wonder if he's had anything to do with the death of his mistress; it's curious if he stopped in town all night that he didn't go back to his chambers. About what time was this?" he asked, aloud.

"About nine," said Flip, promptly, "or harf-past."

"Nine," echoed Dowker; "then in that case he must have stayed in town all night, as the last train to Shoreham is about half-past. I'll look into this business, but meantime I want to find out Desmond's little game."

Flip had now finished his meal, and was waiting impatiently for instructions from his chief.

"Wot's h'up, guv'nor?" he asked, his black beady eyes fixed on the detective.

Dowker glanced at his watch.

"It's about 2," he said, replacing it, "and I want you to meet me at the Marble Arch about a quarter to 3."

"Wot for?"

"To follow a lady and gentleman and overhear what they say," said Dowker; "I'll show you whom I mean. Don't lose a word of their conversation and then repeat it all to me."

"I'm fly," said Flip, with a wink, and then this curiously assorted pair departed, Dowker to his office for a few minutes, and Flip to wend his way to the rendezvous at Marble Arch.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE LANGUAGE OF LOVE.

May Penfold was a very pretty girl, tall and fair-haired, with a pair of merry blue eyes, and a charming complexion. Her parents died when she was young, and left her to the care of Sir Rupert Balscombe, who certainly fulfilled his trust admirably. He had her well educated, both intellectually and physically, so when she made her debut in London society she was much admired. An accomplished musician and linguist, a daring horsewoman, and a kindly disposition, it was no wonder that she was much sought after; but when added to these gifts it was also discovered that she possessed twenty thousand a year in her own right, she became the catch of the season, and many were the attemps made by hard-up scions of noble houses to secure her hand in marriage.

But alas, for the contrary disposition of womankind, she would have none of the gilded youth, but fixed her affections on Myles Desmond, a poor Irish gentleman, with nothing to recommend him but a handsome face, a clever brain, and a witty tongue. In vain Lord Calliston asked her to be his wife; she coolly refused him, telling the astonished nobleman that neither his morals nor his manners were to her liking, and informed Sir Rupert that she intended to marry Myles Desmond.

The baronet was furious at this declaration, and as May was under age and could not marry without her guardian's consent, he forbid Myles the house, and ordered his ward not to speak to him. But see how the duplicity of love can circumvent the watchfulness of guardians. May and Myles met secretly in the park, at garden parties, and at balls, whenever they chose, and so cleverly did they manage their meetings that Sir Rupert never for a moment suspected the truth. He wanted his ward to marry Calliston, but when that fickle young man ran off with Lady Balscombe he changed his tune altogether, and had May been clever enough to have taken advantage of his dismay, he would doubtless have consented to her union with Myles, despite the disadvantages of the match.

At this time of the year there were comparatively few people in town who knew her; nevertheless, for the sake of safety, she dressed herself plainly in a dark dress and wore a thick veil which concealed her face. Thus disguised she had no fear of being recognized, and arrived at the rendezvous about five minutes past three o'clock. There she found Myles waiting for her, and they walked together into the park, feeling perfectly secure from interruption or detection. But they did not know that they were being shadowed by a small ragged boy who was apparently playing idly about them.

Dowker, recognizing Myles, pointed him out to Flip and departed at once, lest he should be seen by Desmond; so when Flip saw May join the young Irishman he knew it was the couple whose conversation he was there to overhear, and followed them promptly.

Myles and Miss Penfold walked a short distance into the park and then seated themselves for a while—two ordinary-looking figures, not calculated to attract much notice; for, the day being cold, Myles was muffled up in a large ulster, and May's dress, as previously noticed, was not conspicuous.

Flip sat down on the grass at the back of them, apparently engaged in spelling out a dirty newspaper, but in reality drinking in every word the lovers uttered.

They were continuing a conversation begun when they first met.

"Does this man suspect you?" said May, evidently referring to Dowker.

"I'm afraid so," he replied, gloomily, "and I cannot open my mouth to defend myself."

"Why?"

"Because my only defense would be an explanation of the events of that night, and I cannot explain."

"Why not?"

He remained silent, at which the girl turned pale.

"Is there any reason—strong reason?"

"Yes."

"Is that reason—a woman?"

Myles bowed his head.

Mis Penfold grew a shade paler and laughed bitterly.

"A pleasant reason to give me," she said, with a sneer. "I have given up all else for your sake, because I thought you loved me, and you—you—talk of another woman to me."

"This is nonsense," he answered, impatiently. "There is no love in the case; it simply involves the breaking of a promise given to a woman, and you would be the last to ask me to do that. Can you not believe in my honor?"

May looked at him doubtfully.

"Can I believe in any man's honor?" she replied, sadly.

"That depends who the man is," answered Myles quietly. "It is simply a case of Lovelace over again:

> I would not love thee, dear, so much,
> Loved I not honor more.

It is absurd—quixotic—ridiculous—to talk about honor in these days, I grant you, but unfortunately I inherit loyal blood, and—well, I must ask you to trust me till I can speak."

"And you will speak?"

"Yes, if it comes to the worst," he replied, with a slight shiver.

The girl gave him her hand, which he took and pressed slightly, so thus mutely they made up their quarrel.

All the foregoing conversation about honor was Greek to Flip, who, after some cogitation, came to the conclusion it was a scene out of the play. But now they began to talk on a subject more suited to his comprehension.

"May," said Myles, "I want you to tell me all that Lady Balscombe did on—on that night."

"The night when she eloped?"

"Yes."

"Let me see," said May, knitting her pretty brows, "we went to a ball—to Lady Kerstoke's."

"At what time?"

"Between nine and ten."

"And what time did you leave?"

"Very early—about half past ten; in fact, we were there only a few moments. Lady Balscombe said she had a headache and went home. You know our house is only a few doors away. I expect she only went there to avert suspicion as to her elopement."

"What happened when she came home?"

"There was a woman waiting to see her in her boudoir."

"A woman?" repeated Desmond; "who was she?"

"I don't know; I didn't even see her. She saw Lady Balscombe and then left the house between eleven and twelve."

"How do you know?"

"My maid told me."

"And what time did Lady Balscombe leave?"

"I don't know. I did not see her again that night. She went to bed because of her headache, and, I suppose, departed early in the morning to catch the train to Shoreham."

"Where was Sir Rupert all this time?"

"He had been down in Berkshire, but arrived some time before 12—he and Lady Balscombe had quarreled lately, and occupied different rooms. Besides, he went off to his club on arriving in town, so he could not know of her flight till the morning."

"Did she leave a letter for him?"

"I suppose so; but why do you ask all these questions?"

"Because I want to save my neck, if possible. The woman who was murdered is said to be Lena Sarschine, whom I saw during the day. I saw a woman in Calliston's rooms on the same night, whom the detective thinks was the same person. Now, between the time I left the chambers and the time I met Spencer Ellersby I was wandering about the streets and, as I spoke to no one, I cannot prove an alibi. Ellersby met me coming up St. James street, and the scene of the crime was not far off, so, if I am arrested, circumstances will tell very hard against me. Nobody will believe my assertion that I did not see the dead woman that night, and I cannot prove it without breaking my promise."

"I see what you mean, but what has Lady Balscombe to do with it?"

"Simply this: I am anxious to find out if Calliston really left town on that night, because I want to know if he had anything to do with the death of his mistress. He left his chamber to catch the ten-minutes-past-9 train from London bridge; but did he catch it? I think not, because he would not have left town without Lady Balscombe, and, from your own showing, she did not leave her house till early on Tuesday morning. So I think Calliston must have remained in town at some hotel, where she joined him, and they went down to Shoreham by the first train in the morning."

"But you don't think Calliston killed this woman?"

"No, I don't think so," he answered, thoughtfully. "I really don't think so, but I would like to have all his movements on that night accounted for. As for myself, I am in a very awkward position, for, if arrested, I cannot extricate myself from it till Calliston returns."

"Why?"

"Because, till his yacht comes back, I cannot prove my innocence."

"But you are innocent?"

"How can you doubt me?"

"I was certain of it."

"I hope the jury of twelve good and lawful men will be as certain," he replied, grimly, as he walked away.

Flip followed them at a distance, but only caught scraps of conversation which seemed to him to be about trivial matters. So, with all the conversation he had heard in the Park indelibly inscribed on his brain, Flip darted away to give his patron an accurate report, and thus add another link to the chain which was gradually encircling the murderer of Lena Sarschine.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Dream Life.

While it is well known that the most abstruse problems have been worked out in sleep, and the most astounding plots found in dreamland, still the majority of dreams yield nothing that can be converted into every-day power. A fool is not turned into a wise man when he goes to sleep, though the opposite of this does sometimes seem to be true.

Said a distinguished woman, "I made up the most exquisite bit of poetry in my dreams. It comforted me unspeakably, and as I awoke I repeated the words mechanically over and over again: 'The cow was struck with an inverted toadstool, and there's the end of it.'" That was the poem!

An artist of repute heard terrible groans, followed by piercing yells from the next room, where a friend was sleeping. Thinking that a burglar must be murdering the man, he jumped to the rescue. He found his friend sitting up in bed, asleep, but sobbing and crying like a baby. After a few vigorous shakes, and stern appeals to his manhood, he managed to bring forth the following appeal:

"Don't you come! It will get you, too! Get out of the way! It's dreadful!"

"What is the matter?" demanded the artist.

"Boo-hoo!" the dazed dreamer wailed. "I have been in such awful danger! Boo-hoo!"

"It's all right, old fellow! Tell me what it is."

The crying man sat up in bed. He wiped his eyes with the sheet, gulped down a sob, and feebly said:

"Oh, I've had such an awful time! I've been chased all around by a piece of brown paper!"

That Settled It.

A negro went into a newspaper office and said that he wanted to subscribe for the paper.

"What is your name?" the clerk asked.

"De Hon. Mr. Stephen Patterson, sah."

"Where do you want the paper sent?"

"Let me see. Send it down to de Jones plantation."

"Yes, but what is the name of the postoffice?"

"Dar ain't none."

"But we'll have to send it by mail. What is your nearest postoffice?"

"Er place called Hamilton."

"All right, I'll send it there."

"No, sah, doan do dat."

"Why?"

"Caze I'se ergin de postmarster at dat place an' I ain't gwine ter trade wid him."

"You wouldn't be trading with him."

"Yas I would, an' I has er mighty good cause not ter fling no bizness in dat man's hands. Come er 'lectioneering ergin me in de church, he did. I wanted ter be er deacon, an he beat me, an' I ain't gwine ter paternize his house. Send dat paper down to de Jones plantation."

"We can't do that."

"Wharfo! Ain't you got er boy roun' yere?"

"Yes, but we can't afford to send him all the way down there merely to carry one paper."

"All right, sah, den we kain't trade. 'Lowed dat you wanted ter sell yo' paper, but ef you don't, dat settle it. Good-mawnin'."—Arkansaw Traveler.

THE highest mountain on the globe is not, as is generally supposed, Mount Everest, but a lofty peak on the Isle of Papua, or New Guinea. This monster, which lifts its snow-capped summit far into the clouds, was discovered by Captain A. J. Lawson, of London, in 1881. According to Lawson, this new claimant for the championship is 32,763 feet in height, being 3,781 feet higher than Mount Everest, which is only 29,002 above the level of the Indian Ocean. This New Guinea giant has been named Mount Hercules.

LAND Speculator—Is the land around here of the first quality? Old Farmer—I guess so. It's s-tony enough to suit me, anyhow.

WIFE—Are you going fishing today? Husband—Yes, my dear. Wife—Well, try and catch some that are fresh this time.

"BRIDGET, what are you doing with your best fur muff?" "Only just sprinklin' a little Hair Restorer on it. The wool's fallin' out."

"WONDER why it is Chicago women never make successful actresses?" "Because they have such difficulty in using their feet gracefully."

CAPTAIN—Well, we are out of port at last. Joliboy—Heavens, Captain, why didn't you say so before, and I would have laid in a supply?

PROFESSOR—Mr. Fresh, why do we always speak of the earth as of the feminine gender? Mr. Fresh—Because it is self-evident, I suppose. If the earth had been masculine it would not have taken two young women more than a week to get around it.

FRITZ—Father, do help me with this example. I can't get the answer. Father (returning the slate after vain efforts)—Well, I can't get it right, either. Fritz—There, now! to-morrow I shall get a bad mark, and all because you can't do an example.

"ARE matches made in heaven, pa?" inquired a young hopeful. "Some kinds are," replied the old man, as he savagely slashed his twenty-fifth match across the stovepipe in a vain attempt to get blaze enough to light the lamp. "These were evidently made in H—alifax."

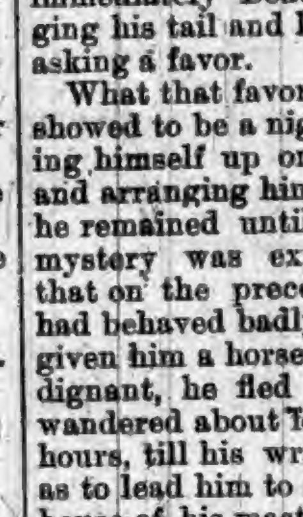
INFORMATION wanted: Jones, who is preparing a brochure to be entitled "Is Marriage a Failure?" had the good luck the other day to meet a distinguished statistician. "Oh Professor!" was Jones' breathless question, "kindly tell me which, from your observation, marry oftenest, the women or the men?"

An Intelligent Canine.



A GENTLEMAN living in St. Albans street, London, some years ago, had a dog of the small Newfoundland kind—a dog of remarkable sagacity. The gentleman's brother lived in Brook street. The dog, having navigated long in a revenue cutter, was named Boatswain. One day the Swedish butler of the gentleman who lived in Brook street told him that Boatswain had come to his house between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, and had passed the night there. The gentleman asked how that could be, as the house was shut up.

The butler explained that he was awakened from his sleep by a single rap at the door. He looked out of the window and soon heard more raps, and then a noise as of some one falling. He ran down and opened the door, and immediately Boatswain ran in, wagging his tail and looking as if he were asking a favor.

What that favor was he immediately showed to be a night's lodging by curling himself up on the mat in the hall and arranging himself to sleep. Thus he remained until morning, when the mystery was explained. It seemed that on the preceding day Boatswain had behaved badly, and his master had given him a horse-whipping. Very indignant, he fled from the house and wandered about for some eight or nine hours, till his wrath was so far cooled as to lead him to seek an asylum in the house of his master's brother. He had learned the way to gain admission into a house, though his knocking was somewhat awkwardly performed by leaps, which brought his nose or one of his paws in contact with the knocker.—Chicago Ledger.

A Mistaken Property.

"Tell you what, a man needs to be a good judge of human nature to get along well in my business," said the tramp. "But I will admit that I got fooled the other day, though it doesn't happen often."

"How was that?"

"Well, I went up to a seedy-looking party with a red nose—the reddest nose you ever saw—and struck him for a dime to get a drink. You know a drinking man will give you money to get a dram where he wouldn't give you a cent to buy a meal. Now that's where I made a mistake. The old cock was a Prohibitionist, and instead of putting up a stake he had me run in for a vag, and for six months. I have actually been at hard labor. It's tough, though, for a man to be deceived in his estimate of human nature that way, I tell you."—Terre Haute Express.

AN interesting astronomical discovery is announced from Italy. After ten years of investigation, Schiaparelli has found that Mercury, the planet nearest to the sun, has a rotation like that of the moon. The planet turns once on its axis during the period of its revolution round the sun, so that the same side is always turned toward the sun.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..........APRIL 3, 1890.

Election Returns.

We want early election returns from every precinct in the county, and hope our friends will not fail to send them in as soon as possible. If no one comes to Auburn next day, please send on a postal, or in any way you can. We would like to publish a full account next week.

Meeting of County Committee.

The newly elected democratic committeemen of the several townships and precincts, are requested to meet at Ensley's Hall in Auburn, on Saturday April 12, 1890, at 1 p. m. for the purpose of effecting an organization. Let every man attend.

W. B. BROWN
Chairman

THE dependent pension bill passed the Senate Monday.

TOWNSHIP elections in Chicago Tuesday. Democrats swept everything. Nothing like it before since it was a city.

THE U. S. court of claims has decided that the government, and not the members, must stand the loss by the Silcott steal.

A TERRIBLE cyclone swept over Louisville, Ky., last Thursday evening. About 300 lives lost. Nothing like it ever in this country. Much damage all over that section.

THE new tariff bill the republicans are getting ready places a duty on nearly everything the farmers of this state raise. But like the duty so long put on wheat, corn, etc., it makes no difference, as long as we produce more than we use. When we come to buy, it would make them cost more. But how would that benefit Indiana farmers? It looks as if the idea is to fool the farmers on a new plan, just as they have been fooling them on the old plan. But even republicans are not suited with McKinley's bill.

FINLAND, which has been a free state to all intents and purposes since 1809, is to have its liberties taken away. It was a singular spectacle, this northern people, in the midst of Russian despotism, keeping all its ancient rights and privileges. But these had been guaranteed to them by the first Alexander of Russia, and they were regarded as sacred till now. The present emperor is going to abolish the local government of the Finns, putting them on the same basis with the rest of the Empire.

SHERIFF FLACK, of New York City, has resigned. Last summer he procured a divorce from his wife by a trick that laid him and his helpers liable to punishment. His trial for this has been delayed on one pretense or another, till within the past few weeks, when they have had him on the rack. The case went against him. The governor, Hill, sent word for him to appear and clear himself of these and other charges which had been brought against him, or he would be put out of office. Flack resigned, but will have to stand whatever punishment is given him. Now if Flack were a republican he might get a foreign consulate at Harrison's hands and still be a great man. But Flack is a democrat, and the city of New York and the city authorities are democrats, the governor of the state is a democrat, and these all believe a man should be punished for his crimes no matter what party he belongs to. Gen. Daniel Sickles has been appointed by the governor to be sheriff till the next election.

DEMOCRATS all over the county should understand that desperate efforts are being made to carry a majority of the trustees of this county. Outside influences are being used, influences which will not hesitate to use any means, even to boodle and corruption. We are credibly informed, that Harrison has decided, that Indiana must show up with a majority of republican trustees. The old schoolbook rings are in the fight also, as they have often been before, and we know they have big money at stake. Democrats should know this. Beaten as these rings have been, from the legislature to the supreme court, they have not given up the fight. It is millions to them, for the difference between their profits under the old system of things and the school book profits under the new law, is immense. Republicans are helping the old ring. Democrats cannot afford to be raked into their net. There are agents at work in this county, and all over the state, and will be up to the last hour, who are determined first to get a majority of the trustees, and then bring such influence to bear on the next legislature, that they hope will secure the repeal of the new law, and throw the state back into the ring's power. Democrats naturally take the side of the people and against the rings. Let all stand together. No democrat should fail to support his candidate for trustee.

Joseph C. Loveland.

Word came down here Saturday, that J. C. Loveland, editor of the Corunna Headlight was dead. He had been ailing for some time, but latterly his malady was aggravated and he suddenly grew worse, dying Saturday morning. The funeral services were Sunday afternoon. We had expected a full notice before this, but it has not come. He was a well known newspaper man, having been in that business all his life. He leaves a son, and his sister Mary, who are the only remaining members of his family, his mother having died last year.

In Butler township, the republicans nominated W. H. Fair for trustee, Hiram Housel for assessor, W. H. Cornell and Silas Simons for justices.

In Union they have for trustee, Edgar Wise; assessor, Morris Widney; justices, Geo. Quince and Jonathan Abel; constables, J. J. Latson and Jas. D. Pilgrim.

In Richland, the prohibition ticket is: trustee, T. J. Eldridge; assessor, Jas. Q. Squires; justices, Milton Chaney and Thos. W. Scott; constables, Samuel Lawhead and Greene B. Monroe.

The republicans of Keyser met Tuesday afternoon and nominated Gus. Helmuth for trustee and Orrin Saxton for assessor; John W. Stoner and John Depew for justices; R L Simpson and Joseph Mason for constables.

NOTES.

Troy comes up with a strong array of names. They have a hard fight to make and will do all they can to win.

Jackson has a ticket that is sound to the core. It will poll a full vote. S. J. Andress and Thomas McNamara are committeemen and will be active workers.

Keyser had the biggest caucus ever held by one township in the county. E. B Thumma called the meeting to order W. Y. Johnson was made chairman and N. W. Blackburn secretary.

Wilmington has the strongest ticket for years, and it will get a big vote. We believe some of the boys will pull through. The new committeemen are J. N. Boyle and D. W. Tomlinson. Good enough.

Grant township put a splendid ticket in the field Saturday. We cannot think of a reason why anyone should refuse to support it. There are no better men. C. M. Philips presided at the caucus and W. H. Leas was secretary.

Stafford nominated for trustee Joseph Willson, one of its very best men. He has filled the office two terms, and was as good a man as the county ever had. He should be elected. The people of Stafford cannot afford to vote against him.

Smithfield township democrats should stand by as good a business man as Mr. Blake. When he took the office of trustee he found his township about $2,500 in debt. Now, by his good management, the debt is paid off. Such a man should be elected by a good majority.

There was a big caucus at Corunna, and quite a struggle over assessor, requiring three ballots. Miles Baxter and Frank Britton were secretaries and T. F. Franks was chairman. The newly chosen committeeman is Marion Franks. A good choice. Richland is wide awake to her interests.

Fairfield had a big caucus, the largest they ever held, and have a good ticket. Dr. O. F. Rudolph and Jacob Eckert are committeemen and will be good ones. A resolution was passed unanimously favoring the primary election system, and the committeemen were instructed to use their influence to have it adopted.

The democrats of Butler township cannot be too highly commended for their good sense and judgment in the friendly way they have harmonized the difficulties that have hitherto existed there. Republicans have been very active and very officious in stirring up strife there, but, thanks to the good sense of the democrats, it has all been in vain, and our excellent ticket is going in in fine shape. Reports from our friends there are very gratifying.

LOCAL NEWS.

Mrs. Frank Borst and the children are up at Corunna visiting friends.

Dr. Irving A. Elson, of Canton, Ohio, is here visiting his brother, J. C. Elson. He is a practicing physician of that city.

John Ludwig, of California, arrived here last Sunday, in answer to a telegram from his sister, Mrs. Oliver Pipes, who is very sick.

One of our Auburn ladies who was in Fort Wayne the other day looking after carpets, says that at Foster's Carpet House she saw the prettiest line of carpets she had ever seen.

The United Brethren closed last evening, a very successful series of meetings. They have also organized a church at this place. Their quarterly meeting is held here Saturday and Sunday, April 19 and 20.

MARRIED: At the residence of the bride's parents in Jackson township, March 30, Mr. William McGowan to Miss Cora B. Walters, Justice S. J. Tarney officiating. Also at the same time and place, by the same, Mr. Lewis Walters to Miss Jennie McGowan.

At the meeting here last Saturday, of the DeKalb county fair officers, the contract for putting up the buildings advertised, was awarded, Sam Buss being the successful bidder. His bid was in all, for exposition building, grand stand and judges' stand, $5,200. Sol Shearer's bid was only a little higher.

Cooney Bowers, business manager of the Luce Minstrel Co., who was here this week, will be remembered by our people as the business manager of the Leland Mikado Company, and the Nellie Free Company, two of the best we have ever had in our town. This gives good promise for the coming troupe.

Wide Awake for April opens with a burst of Easter beauty and hope; the frontispiece, by W. L. Taylor, "Easter Offerings," embodies the spirit of youth and bloom and gladness, while Mr. Butterworth's beautiful story, "The Pilgrims' Easter Lily," ought to go far to settle the question of America's national flower. W. J. Rhees of the Smithsonian Institute, under the title, "What's In a Name?" gives a brief history of the English founder of the famous institution at Washington, with three portraits of Smithson, and then goes on to give fifty or more examples of the mistaken ways in which people address letters to the Institution. "The Difficulties of a Darling," by Mrs. L. B. Walford, is an amusing story of the way a little sister proved her devotion. "How Simon and Sancho Panzo helped the Revolution," is a first-rate true historical story by Olive Risley Seward. "Work and Play," by Mrs. Fremont, is another true story of this number, showing a delicate woman's business energy and success. "Nervy's Wicked Summer," by Lucia Chase Bell, is also true, evidently; the kind of story that children read eagerly. "The Fugitives of French Cross" is a pathetic Acadian story, true also, by Grace Dean McLeod.

Rev. H. C. Smith left Monday to attend the yearly conference of the M. E. church, at Muncie. Many friends here will be pleased if he is returned here.

John Updegraff has started a new meat market, every thing is clean and tasty, and we hope he will be well patronized, as he is a worthy young man.

The town council have passed an ordinance compelling the owners of property on the north side of Douglas street, from Wayne the whole length to Pine street, to make cement walks, to be completed by August.

Mrs. J G Johnson returned from Cleveland last Saturday with a full line of millinery goods, fancy work in great variety, and material and trimmings for fancy work. Their grand opening will be Friday and Saturday of this week.

On last Monday evening as Harris' section gang were coming in on their car east of Sedan, they were run into from the west by an engine, which they did not notice. They jumped in time to save their lives, but their car was broken to flinders.

Friday evening of this week the young ladies of the Christian Endeavor Society, of the Presbyterian church will give an Easter supper at the residence of Dr Chamberlain. Eggs colored, painted and plain will be supplied; egg boiled, fried, poached and scrambled, pickled eggs; eggs in every form ever heard of, and perhaps some invented especially for the occasion. In addition to all this, every thing usually furnished at a first-class supper will be provided, and all for the trifling sum of ten cents. Lots of fun thrown in, and a grand good time expected. Everybody will be there.

Something in the right direction at last. A petition is being circulated for signers, recommending the town council to pass an ordinance requiring the Lake Shore railroad to build cement walks in place of the cinder walk we have been compelled to put up with so long. This is a petition that the women in town should have an opportunity of signing and not one probably would refuse. For no one better appreciates the ruin the cinder walks have been to dresses and shoes. The women also, especially the tax payers have failed to see any justice in not compelling railroad companies to build as good walks as the citizens are obliged to.

BUTLER.

Miss Jessie Beyer entertained the B. of L. E. society on Wednesday.

Quite a number of the children are wrestling with the measles and whooping cough.

Madame gossip, it is said has nothing to do but carry news, as she has always been doing. Too bad.

Mr. McLelan is building a fine residence on East Oak street, which will soon be ready for occupancy.

There are quite a number of new dwellings being built this spring. Many are getting too wise to rent longer.

Rev. Cone and wife are at conference at Muncie this week. He does not expect to come back to this work.

The ladies society of the M. E. church will meet in the church parlor next Friday afternoon. All the members are requested to be present, as election of officers will take place that day.

Henry Aldrich's son was quite badly hurt last Monday at the Wabash round house. He was firing the station engine when a lever struck him in the stomach, he was taken up for dead, but at this writing is better.

THE FAMOUS CLOTHIER

"SELLING AT COST."

NINE times out of ten that sign is a fraud. The public knows that selling at cost is not what the merchant is in business for. Loss puts nothing in his purse and he can't live on it. They smell a fly in the ointment and detect a colored gentleman in the fence. But about once in ten times that sign is genuine. There are many reasons why the questions of profit and money-making are for the time minor ones. The merchant does not expect to live on his loss. He has figured out that loss is inevitable on a certain class of goods and has wisely concluded to make a virtue of necessity, and lose voluntarily his profits rather than be compelled to lose more. It's like a captain with a ship richly freighted. A storm comes up; the vessel labors; the chances are that all will be lost. The captain orders up a part of the cargo and throws it overboard to save the rest. Just the position of the merchant. Here's been a bad season; hard winds; no chance of making port, now, with this line of goods. The dead stock is as heavy as lead. Out with it, then, at cost! Better lose profit than principle. Better sell at cost than hold at hazard. That's Laemle's fire. This has been, and is a GENUINE cost sale. Its not of choice, but of necessity; not to advertise, but to lighten the ship. It's a sale of only those goods which it would be a loss to carry over, [illegible] the room they occupy and the money locked up [illegible]em. You can buy these goods just as cheap as you co[illegible]y them in the great wholesale ware-house, or factory. They will pay you from 25 to 33 per cent on any money you put into them, even if you have to keep them until next winter. You can keep one garment in camphor, where the Famous can't keep five hundred. Can you make bigger interest than 25 per cent? There is not much more to say. If you will come in and see them, and note the prices, you will buy them and remember that this is

A Genuine Cost Sale.

Although some of our WOULD-BE competitors cry, "don't go there, you will be humbugged, they are liars and thieves." This is because they carry a

A BIG

Chattel mortgage on their stock, and on account of this are bound hand and foot and are COMPELLED to buy of those holding the same, and at prices that no merchant, who can buy where he pleases, would be willing to pay. The consequence of all this, is just this: They cannot sell as low as we do, and will stop at nothing, to hinder you from buying where you can get the most value for your money. Yours Resp'y,

The D. F. Kain Manufacturing Co. have leased the Case building at the south end of Main street and will fit it up for their factory. It is admirably adapted to their uses, and we are told they will prepare for work at once Several of our enterprising and well-to do citizens have taken stock in the company and we believe it will prove a decided success.

It is a pleasure to us to note the degree of enterprise manifested by our popular groceryman Jacob Stamets, in the putting down of a neat, substantial sidewalk along his entire farm in Stametstown, next to the road running south. This answers a long felt want, as it has been a very difficult matter to travel on foot in that direction on account of the poor walk. The old two-plank walk answered its purpose for some years and was greatly appreciated, but from lack of attention it fell into such a dilapidated condition as to be almost impassable. And while this new feature is just the right thing in the proper place as far it goes, it is a fact apparent to all, that it does not go far enough. The needs of he people demand that they have a good walk to extend from the B. & O. railroad on the south, to the Wabash on the north, a distance of about a quarter of a mile And we would urge upon the citizens who may be practically interested in having a good walk in Stametstown, to see to it that this walk is made. The cost will not be so great, and the comfort it affords will more than repay all efforts required to complete the enterprise. We will say that one distinct feature which generally shows the pride of a prosperous town, is its many first-class walks. And we are satisfied that a walk, though it costs something, is better than walking through the mud, or stumbling over a dilapidated sidewalk.

The Champion binders, mowers and reapers have been on the market about forty years, and are recognized as the standard for excellence in all that goes to make first-class harvesting machines. The Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Company, the sole manufacturers, commenced the business in 1850 in one small wooden building. Now their plant consists of twenty brick buildings, each as large as an ordinary factory, and covers forty acres. First-class machines and wise and liberal methods have placed this Company in the front ranks of American manufacturers. They are recognized as wide-awake, shrewd advertisers also, and we are gratified at their selection of our paper as an advertising medium to reach the best farmers in this locality. We welcome them to our columns.

The Dispatch quotes with evident relish what the Inter Ocean says of the McKinley tariff bill. "In its earnest purpose to meet the demands of the farming interests, the bill is deserving of praise." It will be hard to make farmers believe they ever "demanded" a bill that makes them pay higher for necessaries, than even under the present law, and gives them in return, only the empty name of a duty on things they raise, but which are not brought into this country enough to have the duty amount to anything. The Inter Ocean, after saying that 18 millions are taken off of whisky and tobacco, adds, "We would like the bill none the worse, were the cut deeper into the direct tax system." That is if they had more tax taken off of whisky and tobacco. Every little while the Dispatch carries the idea that its party is the only and simon pure temperance party etc. We can't see how free whisky will advance temperance.

Columbia City Post: Will Inks who played ball with the Columbia City boys last year, made quite a reputation in his first game against the Brooklyns, at St. Augustine last week. Of the wind up of the game the Chicago Times says: "Three more runs were now wanted by Chicago to win. Inks came to bat with the bases full. The first ball pitched was a ball, then followed a strike. He struck again and failed to hit and then came another ball. Everybody expected to see Inks die on strikes, but to the surprise of all he hit a terrific sky ball into the very remotest corner of the large grounds. Hitting the fence it bounded back into the left fielder's hands, but too late. Inks had made his third base, sending home Andrews, Burns, and O'Brien amid the wildest excitement. Chicago had won the game by one run, with two men out." Considering that the Brooklyns are the champions of the American Association and that this was Inks' first appearance against them as a pitcher, his record is a good one.

Mr. Frank T. May, of Concord, was in town over Sunday visiting friends and taking in the fun Saturday night. He is one of Concord township's most promising young men.

We publish the plan for the proposed reading room. The idea is a good one, and we feel sure our citizens who have an interest in the young people, will be liberal in their support of the work.

Last Thursday we had the worst storm of the season. It began with a mixture of rain and snow, and that evening with a high wind the driving snow was terrible. The next day it was little better, and the storm did not abate much till Saturday evening.

The enormous and rapidly increasing trade of the Foster Furniture Co., of Fort Wayne, LaFayette and Terre Haute, has been secured by a rigid adherance to the rule to handle only the best made goods and to sell them at a smaller profit than any of their competitors.

Officers for the coming year were elected in the Presbyterian Sabbath school last Sunday. Superintendent, Dr S. B. Johnson; assistant, Phil Plum; secretary, Gertie Wilson; for treasurer Alza Ralston was re-elected; Lucy Otto, chorister; T P. Scott, assistant; Mrs. Moss, organist; Myrtle Dills assistant.

Columbia City Post: Col. I. B. McDonald attended the encampment last week at Indianapolis. He says the name of Ben Harrison was mentioned but once during the entire session and then it fell in silence No cheer or sound was uttered. What changes come over the dreams of men in one short year!

Road supervisors are elected by the voters residing in the road district in which a given candidate resides. Voters cannot vote for the supervisor of another district. They can vote only for a man in their own. Voters in an incorporated town cannot vote for any supervisor. This should be remembered.

J. J VanAuken and J. T. Johnston, have been awarded the contract for surveying the line for the new railroad from here to Hammond, Ind, and will soon begin the work. They will start from a point near the foot of Main street and go west. Both gentlemen are competent, practical engineers and will do their work well.

What is the use of waiting for a "good" theater to come along, when we have home talent that can lay nine-tenths of the one-horse traveling shows in the shade? We have talent in Auburn that can give an entertainment worthy of patronage of every citizen of Auburn. Then, besides getting the worth of our money in something good, the money will remain here among our own people.

Auburn Junction wants a man to stand on the depot platform and answer interrogatories relating to trains, such as, "Is No 54 on time?" "When is she due?" "Which way is east, and which way is west, etc." "Please name these roads and which is 'tother." He must be of a mild disposition, subject himself to wear brass buttons, and let concealed weapons and bug juice occupy a cell by themselves. No salary, all for glory.

A man at Milford gets off this pun: "Once there was a grocer named Berry. He sent in a bill before it was due and the person who received it wrote in reply: 'Berry, you've sent in your bill-Berry before it is due-Berry. Upon my feelings you are a rasp-Berry. Your father, the elder-Berry, would not have been such a goose-Berry. But you needn't look so blue Berry, for I don't care a straw-Berry, and if you write again before June-Berry, I'll maul you till you are black-Berry.'"

The Record is informed that the "patent editorial we copied was not an editorial at all, especially it was not one of his "patent original" editorials we have been making fun of. The article was not even the Record's article at all. It was a floater, one of those items of information that go the rounds of the papers. We had as much right to it as others, and no editor claimed it his own. When the Record man has had more experience, he may learn some of these things. But who gave him the right to say we "boast of writing our own editorials?" We never made such a boast. As a matter of fact, we give proper credit to any article we publish, provided we know whose it is. So should every editor.

Michigan City Dispatch: The loading of so many cars at the foot of Hoosier slide has made great inroads on the hill, and it would seem that many months of such work would lower it to a susceptible degree at least. But an old citizen, who has seen hundreds of car loads taken away in seasons past, is of the contrary opinion. He thinks that the sand piles up as fast as it is taken away. According to his opinion when a heavy sea is running the water near the shore washes up vast amounts of sand from the bars which is deposited on the shore as the waves recede. It then dries and the hard winds from the north blows it to the top of the hill. Thus it is piled up in greater amounts than it is taken away.

Election next Monday.

Tickets for the Junior Ex. will be on sale at Robbins & McCord's, as usual.

The republicans in Concord township have nominated A. Filley for trustee and Thomas Abel for assessor.

The Foster Furniture and Carpet Co., of Fort Wayne, know the value of printer's ink. They are careful but extensive advertisers.

The Junior Exhibition was postponed last week on account of the extremely bad weather, and will now be held on Friday evening, April 18.

O. J. Powell returned last week from Big Rapids, Mich., where he had been to get evidence in the coming suit between him and Dr. Wood. When the case is concluded he will return to his home in Lexington, Mo.

March came in like a lion and went out more like a sheep than a lamb. The weather was bright and clear but rather cold. The groundhog and lamb both had better lay down the weather ax and leave it to chance.

In speaking of the new text books last week we made a mistake in regard to Waterloo. They are using the new books there, with the exception of the geography. It was simply a misunderstanding on our part with no intention to misrepresent.

A. M. A Miller writes from Hicksville, that Charles Bassett, of Waterloo, had both bones of his right leg broken below the knee last Sunday evening, at that place, caused from jumping from a moving freight train. Mr. Bassett was picked up by friends and the best of care will be provided for him. We hope he will soon recover from his misfortune, and live and learn to get on and off trains only when they are standing still. Too many risk their lives by getting on and off moving trains.

Every citizen of Auburn should have sufficient interest in our excellent public schools to patronize the Junior Exhibition. The expense is but a trifle, and the merits of such an entertainment will more than compensate for the small outlay Besides it should be taken into consideration, that any receipts left after paying the expenses, are always applied to getting books for the school library. No person connected with the class, the school or the school board gets a penny of it. But all these make greater or less sacrifices to prepare the entertainment. Let us all turn out and fill the Opera House to the galleries when the evening comes.

Warsaw Daily Times: We are highly pleased to note the success which has attended Prof. O. W. Nottingham in securing a class in penmanship. Nearly ninety persons have enrolled themselves in his class, and the good effects will be visible for all time in the better penmanship that will prevail in this region. He has organized the largest class that has ever been gotten together in this city, and the art of penmanship is such a desirable acquisition in an age that has somewhat deteriorated in this particular, that it can but result in great good to all. If there be any more desiring to improve their chirography, Prof. Nottingham will show them just how it is done.

At a preliminary discussion in a Sunday school in Waterloo, where two factions exist, and an election was about to take place, a prominent republican who probably well remembered, "blocks-of-five," rose to his feet and said that the children, who were about to be disfranchised for the first time in the history of the school, for partisan reasons, might be bought off with candy and such like. A young lady teacher in the school sprang to her feet and administered him a severe rebuke by saying "she thought the Sunday school to be the last place in the world to teach the children to buy or sell their votes."

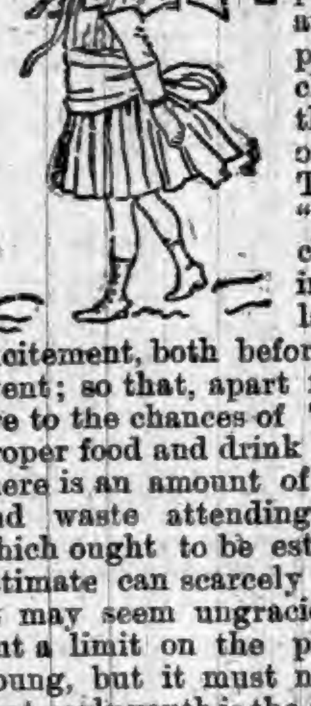
WELL-DIGGERS on the Crowley place at Little Prairie, Wis., find indications of a buried forest. The cedar or pine found at a depth of thirty-five feet appeared to be branches of a tree; at forty feet the growth was larger, as if near the trunk; at forty-five feet larger still. The first thirty-five feet was through light gravel, and the next ten feet through blue clay, exceedingly hard. The impression prevails that a swamp will be struck at a lower depth, as has been the case in previous instances where the wells were abandoned. Good water in that locality is rare, though the land lies high and the surface soil is light. The matter is attracting much attention.

THE Rev. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage professes to be a lover of books, and yet he does a thing that no real book-lover could do. If, in the midst of writing a sermon, he needs a quotation, he seizes the volume that contains it and tears out the desired page with ruthless hand. Then, taking his shears, he cuts out the particular passage he needs, and, pasting it on his manuscript page, tosses the book aside. There is scarcely a book in his library that is not so mutilated. "But what do you do when you wish to refer to such a passage again?" a reporter asked him. "I never want to refer to it again," he answered sententiously. "When I have used it once, I am done with it for good."

A NEWSPAPER man of Farmington, Me., visited a remarkable family the other day. Another sister-in-law, Miss Hannah Ballard, 84 years old next October, was cleaning up the dinner table and washing the dishes. Mrs. Ellis died three years ago at the age of 88. The old folks prefer to live by themselves and do all their own work, and Father Ellis yet refers to his sisters-in-law as "the girls."

GEN. SHERMAN occupied a box in a theater the other evening, and when he was recognized the audience broke out into loud applause, and before it ended loud cries came from all over the house for "Sherman! Sherman!" The hero of Atlanta rose to his feet, placed his hand on his breast, and made a profound military bow. The cries and bravos continued, and Gen. Sherman kept bowing, and smiling, and shaking his head. Finally, raising his hand peremptorily, he commanded silence, and not till then did the applause stop. "It's a wonder," said the General, as he left the theater, "that the band didn't play 'Marching Through Georgia.' Everywhere I go they play that tune when they know I'm in the crowd, and I confess I like it."

Children's Parties.



NOT only in winter, but at all seasons, the amusements of young children ought to be simple, unexciting, and as free as possible from the characteristics of the "pleasures" of late years. The so-called "pleasure" of a children's party involves a very large measure of excitement, both before and after the event; so that, apart from the exposure to the chances of "chill," and improper food and drink on the occasion, there is an amount of wear and tear and waste attending these parties which ought to be estimated, and the estimate can scarcely be a low one. It may seem ungracious to strive to put a limit on the pleasures of the young, but it must not be forgotten that early youth is the period of growth and development, and that anything and everything that causes special waste of organized material, without a compensatory stimulus to nutrition, ought to be avoided. We turn from these to the mental and nerve injuries inflicted on the growing organism. They are certainly not to be disregarded. A perfect storm of excitement rages in the little brain from the moment the invitation has been received, and the affair is talked about in the nursery until after the evening. Sleep is disturbed by dreams, or, in some cases, prevented, by thinking of the occasion, and afterward the excitement does not subside until days have elapsed, perhaps not before another invitation is received.

INFANTS ARE ANGERED.

PROTECTIONISTS EXCITED OVER THE TARIFF JUGGLE.

Representatives of Various Protected Industries Protesting Against Changes in Duties Made by the Bill of the Republican Ways and Means Committee.

[Washington special.]

The new tariff bill is not satisfactory. All the Democrats in Congress are against it, and many Republicans are expressing their dissatisfaction. Before the bill can be put through the House a number of Republican kickers must be whipped into line. While the dissatisfaction is great on the Republican side the leaders are counting on the power of the party whip to secure a solid vote. Ex-Governor Gear is greatly disappointed at the failure to get free sugar. Some of the Iowa followers of the ex-Governor talk of standing independent and demanding total abolition of the sugar tax. At the same time the Louisiana, California and beet-sugar men are chagrined because the new bill calls for a 50 per cent. cut, and they also talk of opposition. The majority of the Ways and Means Committee have begun already to feel the effect of the premature publication of their tariff bill. The committee-room was full of people to-day who had read the newspapers and had rushed to tell the committee what they thought of the measure. Every interest that the bill hurts appears to have friends hastening to its defense. The New England shoe men will be on hand to-morrow to protest against the duty on hides. Mr. Walker, a member of the firm of Walker, Oakley & Co., says the proposed tax will not add very much to the cost of boots and shoes, and that the manufacturers can stand it. Some reductions are made in the revenues; probably $55,000,000 or $60,000,000, but these are principally in sugar and tobacco. The Republican members of the committee think it very good politics to attack sugar, which is an industry that never contributes to the Republican campaign fund. The sugar trust will be as nicely situated under the proposed laws as under the present one. There is only 5 per cent. difference between the raw sugar tax and the refined, but this is enough to give the trust control of the market unless the classification be changed. It is estimated that about ten million dollars comes from the internal revenue by the cutting out of special tobacco licenses. The duty on cigars is changed from $2.50 per pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem to $3.50 per per pound. Examination of the completed bill will show that the reductions are made on a very few articles, and in the whole range of articles the tariff is either maintained at the war standard or slightly increased.

The Republican scheme to tickle the farmer into the idea that he is to receive a fair share of the tariff spoils is almost ridiculous. Horses and mules are dutiable at $30 per head, but when they exceed $150 in value they are to pay 30 per cent. ad valorem, as against the existing rate of 20 per cent. Grown cattle pay $10 per head, hogs $1.50, sheep $1.20. Barley pays 30 cents a bushel, corn 10 cents, oats 10 cents, rye 10 cents, wheat 20 cents, wheat flour 20 per cent., butter 6 cents, cheese 6 cents, milk 5 cents. Cider is to pay 5 cents a gallon, cabbages 3 cents each, eggs 5 cents a dozen, and yelks brought in separately 25 per cent. Hay is increased from $2 to $4; hops are advanced 8 to 15 cents a pound. Onions are charged 40 cents per bushel. Vegetables, in their natural state, are increased from 10 to 25 per cent., and when prepared or preserved from 30 to 45 per cent.

The earthenware schedule shows an increase on nearly every classification. Fire brick is charged $1.25 a ton when ornamented and 45 per cent. when unornamented. The latter is an increase of more than 100 per cent. Tiles and brick, other than fire brick, are charged 25 per cent. when unornamented and 45 per cent. when ornamented. Hydraulic cement is charged 8 cents per 100 pounds and other cement 20 per cent. Plaster of paris is fixed at $1 per ton when ground for use and $1.75 per ton when calcined. Pressed glassware is charged 10 cents per pound and 40 per cent. Cut, engraved and decorated glassware is charged 10 cents a pound and 50 per cent., as against 45 per cent. under the existing law. Unpolished, cylinder crown and window glass is assessed at increased rates. Polished glass is increased in an even greater proportion.

Iron ore and pig iron are unchanged. Slight reductions are made on round iron. Boiler iron and wire are reduced the fraction of a cent. The lead ore provision reads as follows:

"Lead ore and lead dross 1½ cents per pound, provided that silver ore containing lead shall pay a duty of 1½ cents a pound on the lead contained therein, according to sample and assay at the port of entry. Nickel is reduced from 15 cents a pound to 2 cents per pound. Zinc is increased to 1½ cents in blocks or pigs and remains at 2½ cents in sheets."

Hewn timber is reduced from 20 to 10 per cent. and squared timber from 1 cent to ½ cent per cubic foot. Sawed boards of mahogany, cedar, redwood, satinwood and all other forms of cabinet woods are charged 35 per cent. House furniture, unfinished, is enumerated at 30 per cent. and chair cane at ten per cent.

Specific duties on carpets are advanced about 5 cents per yard, while the ad valorem duties remain at 30 per cent. Pattern velvet and tapestry velvet carpets are advanced from 25 cents to 40 cents per yard. Tapestry brussels from 20 cents to 28 cents. Some of the duties on silk goods are advanced as high as $1.60 per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Human hair is reduced from 35 per cent. to 20 per cent., jewelry is assessed at 50 per cent., pearls at 40 per cent. and precious stones not set at 40 per cent. and if set at 50 per cent. The duty on manufactures of leather is reduced. Paintings and statuary remain at 30 per cent. Flax not hackled or dressed is increased from $20 per ton to 1½ cents per pound, and dressed lime from $40 per ton to 4 cents per pound. Manufactures of hemp, flax and jute are increased from 35 to 50 per cent.

The Montana Infamy.

The curtain is about to fall on the infamous Montana farce. The Republican majority in the Senate Committee has reported in favor of seating Wilbur F. Sanders and Thomas C. Powers, the men who were elected by the aid of bogus Montana representatives. Two reports have been framed by the committee, a majority and a minority report. Any fair-minded person reading these documents for himself cannot help seeing where right lies. The majority report says in summing up: "The whole inquiry turns upon the honesty and fairness of the election at Precinct No. 34, in Silver Bow County. The election held at Precinct 34 was irregular, illegal, and fraudulent, and this appears from the records and from the undisputed facts furnished by Messrs. Clark and McGinnis, the Democratic contestants." The minority report claims that the members who were elected at Precinct No. 34, in Silver Bow County, met with the true Legislature of Montana at the Helena Court House, and that there Messrs. Clark and McGinnis were duly elected to the United States Senate. It further claims that the Governor of the States recognized this session, and did not recognize the one which elected the bogus Republican Senators. All these things the Republicans on the Senate Committee, of whom the saintly and suave George Frisby Hoar is one, know full well. More than this, George Frisbie Hoar and others know that this entire Montana business is a more shameful subterfuge than the Democratic party ever stooped to. But will Mr. Hoar's conscience keep him from thundering hereafter about election frauds in the South? Not a bit of it. He will be more eloquent and indignant than ever.—Chicago Herald.

ROBBERY THEY CALL IT.

FARMERS VIGOROUSLY ATTACKING THE TARIFF.

Agriculturists in the Vicinity of Rockford Express Their Views in Plain Terms—Their Rich Lands Being Plastered with Heavy Mortgages.

[Rockford (Ill.) Special to Chicago Herald.]

The farmers of this section expect to be more of a power politically hereafter than they have been in the past. They have already held a half-dozen meetings, and if monopoly had any feeling it would have suffered keenly from the home thrusts which it has received. In no other section of the State are the farmers better educated or better informed. They have a strong organization, the sole purpose of which is to secure fairness in legislation and reasonable consideration. They met the other evening a hundred strong. John Puddicombe, one of the speakers said, that on the road leading from the city to his farm, out of thirty farms twenty-one were rented and the other nine were worked by those who professed to own them, but who, in fact, were in no better condition than their tenant neighbors. Most of the owners are so loaded with mortgages that they really do not own their property. "I hope," said Mr. Puddicombe, "that the time will come again when if the old hen, in the course of business, finds it incumbent upon her to lay an egg with a double yelk the owner will not be compelled by iniquitous class laws to hand one of the yelks over to some fellow who has no earthly right to it."

C. F. King, one of the family of Kings who own the biggest farm in Ogle County, and after whom the town of Kings is named, assailed the methods by which the farmers were discriminated against in the matter of assessments. He had paid enough taxes to discourage him. The corporations of the country, he said, are demanding dividends on $8,000,000,000 of watered stock. These companies take forcible possession of the land of the farmer by right of eminent domain, and then use every conceivable scheme, legal generally, but always unjust, to further rob the victim of the fruits of his toil. "Yet I suspect," added Mr. King, "when our Representatives come around this fall and repeat the old-time operation of kissing every farmer's baby, they will carry the day as heretofore."

The tariff reform idea is growing in this section as it has never grown before. The agriculturists are now pretty thoroughly alive to the fact that they are being taxed and robbed for the benefit of the monopolies of the nation. "The Republican notion of to-day," said a prominent old-time Republican, "is 'God keep the rich—the poor can beg.' And unless we break away and look out for our own interests we will very soon be so poor that we can offer little resistance to the thieving policy that finds favor with the Blaines, Carnegies and Harrisons."

The McKinley Bill and the Pan-Americans.

Mr. William E. Curtis, the special agent of the State Department who had charge of the delegates to the Pan-American Congress during their trip through this country, says that the provisions of the McKinley tariff bill are having a depressing and discouraging effect upon the conference. It could hardly be otherwise. The purpose of the Pan-American Congress was to promote and secure greater freedom of trade between this country and the Republics of Central and South America, but the object of the McKinley bill is quite different. It aims to cut off trade with American neighbors as well as other countries, and when they are forbidden to enter the markets of the United States as sellers they will surely cease to appear there as buyers. While the Pan-American conference is seeking enlarged trade between American nations the McKinley bill aims to restrict it to the utmost. If the countries of Central and South America could be induced to repeal their duties on American products new and valuable markets would be at once thrown open to American farmers and great quantities of breadstuffs and provisions could be sent South. The countries of Central and South America would readily agree to such a course if the United States would deal as liberally with them. The McKinley bill, however, does nothing of the sort, and, instead of opening new markets abroad for American beef and pork, breadstuffs, etc., will tend to close the Canadian and other markets which are now open.

The McKinley bill in its present form would effectually destroy the hope of finding new markets in Central and South America for surplus agricultural products of the United States. Mr. Curtis says the delegates to the Pan-American conference look on the bill as an affront. It proposes to keep the exports of their countries out of the United States, and yet they are asked to give free admission to American food products. Two of the delegates to the conference—Alfonso of Chili and Pina of the Argentine Republic—have already proposed to drop the question of improved trade, thinking further discussion useless. Certainly, if the McKinley bill should be adopted as it stands, there would be nothing left for the conference to do but to adjourn. The McKinley bill is based on what the Valparaiso (Chili) Union has aptly styled the impossible or absurd desire to "sell to all the world without buying anything from anybody," and thus absorb all their money and bankrupt them.—Chicago Tribune, Republican.

Free Hides.

A typical change in the McKinley bill is that which reimposes the duty of one and one-half cents a pound which was taken off hides by a Republican Congress in 1872. The effect of the repeal of the duty was to cheapen boots and shoes, harness and leather goods, and to enable the manufacturers to build up a large export trade. Exports of leather trebled in ten years, and now amounts to ten millions a year. The value of the hides imported was more than offset by the leather exported. Large quantities of hides were imported from South America and sold there again after being manufactured into shoes, boots, saddles, and other leather goods. The transaction was simply so much clear gain for this country. With hides free, American manufacturers of leather have been able to compete in foreign markets and have built up an export trade of $10,000,000. These manufacturers and their employes will not be pleased with a tariff change which will cost them the loss of this big trade in foreign markets. They will not submit to anything of the kind without striking some hard blows at the party responsible for it. The people are all users of leather, from the infant to the oldest men and women, and will hardly welcome legislation adopted for the express purpose of making them pay more for boots and shoes. Farmers wear out a great deal of leather in the form of boots and shoes, harness, saddles, etc., and they would have to pay at least one-third of the increased price of the leather goods sold annually in the United States. Is it believed in Congress that this will tend to allay the restless, uneasy feeling among the farmers and help to take the tariff question out of politics? If so they are greatly mistaken. It will be found before a year goes by that the duty on hides will so injure the leather business that the cattleman will not gain anything in price. The result will be similar to the wool duties, which make clothing dearer to the people and prevent exportation of woolen goods and do not raise the price of wool to the farmers.—Chicago Tribune, Republican.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS AND WHAT THEY ARE DOING.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives—Important Measures Discussed and Acted On—Gist of the Business.

IN the Senate on the 25th, after the transaction of some routine business, the trust bill was taken up. Senator Reagan's amendment defining trusts and providing a penalty of $10,000 fine or imprisonment for violation of the law was adopted. In the House the World's Fair bill was called up by Mr. Candler immediately after the reading of the journal. After it had been read he offered an amendment, which was adopted, providing that the commission shall appoint a board of lady managers of such number and to perform such duties as may be prescribed by the commission; and the board may appoint one or more members of all committees authorized to award prizes for exhibits which may be produced in whole or in part by female labor. Also an amendment, which was adopted, providing that one of the members of the board created, to be charged with the selection of the government exhibits, shall be chosen by the Fish Commission. Mr. Candler then opened the debate on the bill by assuring the House that Chicago, which had been selected as the site for the fair, had proved herself equal to the undertaking. She had satisfied the committee that she had a bona fide subscription of $5,000,000 and had gone further than was demanded of any competing city in agreeing that the subscription should be raised to $10,000,000. Mr. Candler spoke in praise of the active and energetic spirit of the city, which he said was a guarantee of success. He then concluded his remarks with a strong appeal in behalf of the bill, in which he said he believed that the fair would be of great advantage to every section of the country. The debate continued till 4 o'clock. The pending amendments were then adopted, and on a vote the bill was passed by a vote of 202 yeas to 49 nays. The bill passed is in the form already published except that it provides for the dedication of the buildings Oct. 12, 1892, and the opening of the fair not later than May 1, 1893, and its closing not later than Oct. 30, 1893. Also, that the Government buildings shall be of such material that they can be readily taken down and sold at the close of the fair, preference to be given to the city where the fair is held. After some unsuccessful efforts to take up other business the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 26th, Messrs. Hawley and Gray were appointed by the Vice President members of the Board of Visitors to attend the annual examination of cadets at West Point. On motion of Mr. Sherman the anti-trust bill was taken up and various formal amendments were made. The amendment offered the previous day by Mr. Stewart to insert the words: "Or of the value of money by which such cost may be advanced is reduced," was agreed to. A number of important amendments were adopted, but as they were added the Senate grew more dissatisfied with the bill, and Senator Hawley moved that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to prepare a new bill. This was opposed by Senator Sherman and others. An effort was also made to refer it back to the Finance Committee. This was rejected, as was also the motion to refer it to the Judiciary Committee. The Senate went into executive session without action on the bill and shortly after adjourned. The House spent the entire day in the discussion of the bill for the admission of Wyoming into the Union as a State. Mr. Carey, of Wyoming, made a strong plea for the admission of the Territory which he represented. Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, opposed the bill. Mr. Oates, of Alabama, opposed the measure because it proposed to give women the right to vote and made attendance at schools compulsory. Mr. Dunnell, of Minnesota, said he was inclined to vote against the bill on account of the woman suffrage clause. Mr. Washington, of Tennessee, attacked the woman suffrage clause, and held that the people of Wyoming had violated the provisions of the act of organization limiting suffrage to white male suffrage. Women might be sent from Wyoming to the Senate. Mr. Morey of Ohio favored the bill, and advocated the civil and legal enfranchisement of women in all the States of the Union. After further debate, the House took a recess until 11 o'clock of the 27th.

AMONG the bills reported from committees and placed on the calendar of the Senate on the 27th were the following: The House bill constituting Cairo, Ill., a port of delivery; the Senate bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, between the mouth of the Illinois and the mouth of the Missouri River; the House bill authorizing the purchase of 2,500 tents by the Secretary of War for the use of the people driven from their homes in Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana by the present floods and appropriating $25,000 for the purpose was passed. The anti-trust bill was then taken up and the amendments to it, as reported from the committee of the whole, were brought before the Senate. Mr. Walthall moved to refer the bill and amendments to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report back within twenty days. The motion was agreed to—yeas 31, nays 28. The House bill to amend the census act of March 3, 1889, was reported from the Census Committee (the effect of it being to allow special agents $3 a day for subsistence when traveling), and, after explanation by Mr. Hale, was passed. The House bill for the admission of Wyoming as a State was laid before the Senate and ordered printed. The order fixing the daily hour of meeting at 11 a. m. from Monday next was agreed to. The House met at 11 o'clock in continuation of the previous day's session, and the Wyoming admission bill was again taken up for consideration. At 1 o'clock the previous question was ordered. Mr. Springer offered an amendment providing for another convention, called under the authority of an act of Congress. Lost—yeas, 131; nays, 138. Mr. Springer then offered an amendment that there shall be an election in Wyoming the Tuesday after the first Monday in November next for a Representative to the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses and for State and judicial officers. The Constitution shall be voted upon, and if the vote is against female suffrage that feature shall be eliminated from the Constitution. This was also lost—yeas, 133, nays, 139. Mr. Springer then offered his last amendment, which strikes out the clause of the Wyoming Constitution providing for female suffrage. Defeated—yeas, 131; nays, 138. The bill was then passed by the following vote: Yeas, 139; nays, 128.

IN the Senate, on the 28th, Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, offered a resolution, which was agreed to, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the arrival and departure of Chinese at and from the port of San Francisco, and as to the evasion or failure of the anti-Chinese laws. The Senate then went into executive session to consider the Florida judicial nominations, and, when the doors were reopened, adjourned. In executive session a long and exciting debate took place upon the Florida cases, but when a vote was called for there was no quorum present and the matter went over without action. In the House Mr. Bingham (Pa.), from the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads, reported back a resolution calling on the Postmaster General for information relative to the employment of inspectors or special agents in investigating the claims of contending applicants for postmasterships. Adopted. The House then went into committee of the whole on the private calendar. Without action of any kind the committee rose and the House took a recess, and at the evening session passed twenty-five private pension bills.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDER,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of malignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

EASTER-TIDE.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Oh, rare as the splendor of lilies,
And sweet as the violet's breath,
Comes the jubilant morning of Easter,
A triumph of life over death;
For fresh from the earth's quickened bosom
Full baskets of flowers we bring,
And scatter their satin soft petals
To carpet a path for our King.

We have grouped through the twilight of sorrow,
Have tasted the marsh of fears;
But lo! in the gray of the dawning
Breaks the hope of our long silent years,
And the loved and the lost we thought perished
Who vanished afar in the night,
Will return in the beauty of spring time
To beam on our rapturous sight.

Sweet Easter-tide pledges their coming,
Serene beyond trouble and toil,
As the lily upsprings in its freshness
From the warm, throbbing heart of the soil.
And after all partings, reunion,
And after all wanderings, home;
Oh, here is the ba'm for our heartache,
As up to our Easter we come!

In the countless green blades of the meadow,
The sheen of the daffodill's gold,
In the tremulous blue on the mountains,
The opaline mist on the world,
In the tinkle of brooks through the pasture,
The river's strong sweep to the sea,
Are signs of the day that is hasting
In gladness to you and to me.

So dawn in thy splendor of lilies,
Thy fluttering violet breath,
O jubilant morning of Easter,
Thou triumph of life over death!
For fresh from the earth's quickened bosom
Full baskets of flowers we bring,
And scatter their satin soft petals
To carpet a path for our King.

AN EASTER DREAM.

BY VEMINA CALDWELL MELVILLE.

His face was indicative of grief rather than hardness, certainly he did not look like a criminal—a murderer—as he reclined on the iron bed-stead, supporting his head with his hands. His figure was good even in the hated "stripes," and the phenology of the closely shaven head could hardly have been made to read, "blood-thirsty!" "villainous!"

A curling blonde mustache shaded lips closed—almost fiercely one might imagine, but his eyes—when occasionally opened—showed frank and blue—the bright, dainty blue too that one sees sometimes in a child's eyes.

He was very pale, with a worn look which comes from sleepless nights full of torturing thought.

Gradually the arm supporting the head relaxed and a feeling of drowsiness overpowered him. When a little later a cracked bell clanged out somewhere, he only smiled in his sleep; but quickly it was followed by a shrill voice calling impatiently outside his grated door.

"No. 97!"

Springing up, he brushed his hands hastily across his eyes, then stared for a moment in bewilderment at the cheerless surroundings and the indifferent face of the "keeper," who had unlocked the door and stepped within the cell.

"Where am I? I thought—"

"Why, my lad, yer in the penitenshury sure enough; pears to me you'd not fergit it so easy," was the coarse, yet not intentionally unkind rejoinder.

The youth—for now that he yas risen and turned his face more toward the unsatisfactory light, looked to be still in the early twenties—utters a bitter invective of some sort; but deigns no other reply.

A little latter he is tramping along with the "striped gang," as he mentally terms them, toward the chapel, but he pays little heed to the services, his mind is full of the dream of that brief sleep. Again and again he lived it through while the wheezy little organ played and a few rough voices joined in an old Easter hymn, while the gray-haired chaplain prayed "for the poor benighted souls" and preached an Easter (presumably) sermon one hour in length.

He had dreamed of seeing a pale, gentle woman, with soft curling locks of silver above her refined brow, standing out on the bank of a wide, smooth-flowing river. Above her head, like a halo, shown a beautiful star which he someway recognized at once as the "star of hope."

"Mother," he had tried to say, but speech seemed denied him and he could only smile in response to the look of unutterable tenderness on her face.

A moment only he looked away but when his gaze returned she was gone, but the star remained.

"Can it mean anything?" he asked himself continually.

"Some might think it an omen of good coming on Easter morn," he thought, "but there is nothing that can bring me happiness."

When the chaplain's monotonous tones ceased he roused himself a little, but did not once raise his eyes until the organ tones fell on his ear.

Could that music come from the poor, tuneless little instrument? Surely none but a master hand could produce it; and looking up he beheld a vision that made him start, flush to the temples and then grow faint and cold.

He must be dreaming again!

"But 'tis surely Pansy Moore," he whispered, pinching his own arm to see if he were awake.

It was a beautiful Easter solo that she played and sang, her sweet rich voice "full of tears;" then at the close the chaplain said that the young lady had some papers and cards to distribute.

Timidly, and with eyes suffused, she moved about among them giving a tract and dainty card with Scripture inscription to each, leaving the youth, whose eyes followed her with burning, wistful glances, and his companion until the last.

When she paused there the color had all vanished from the round cheeks, and the long lashes persistently veiled the brown eyes. Her hand trembled as she handed him his, but she made no other sign.

The dreary prison dinner followed the service, but it was almost untasted by the youth.

Alone once more in his cell, Ralf Blethen flung himself on the iron bedstead and drew out his treasures. Oh how precious they were, for had they not been touched by her fingers?

Frantically he pressed them to his lips 'ere he ever opened them. The tract was entitled, "An Easter Message;" the card was of a pale olive tint and on it was a tiny white-robed seraph holding a dainty basket of lilies from among which peeped three pale pink eggs. On her forehead she wore a "star."

Lifting the illustration, Ralf read underneath the words in daintiest feminine script:

"Courage! Easter will sometime bring you joy and peace."

Ralf Blethen had sat cold and unflinching when his sentence "to the penitentiary for life" was being read; but he lowered his head on his hands now, and wept like a child.

He had been here three months and these were the first tears that he had shed; he seemed to himself like an automaton by day and a madman by night.

It had been hard to bear, and all coming so unexpected, too, but he had been quite conscious of one feeling day or night, and that was a feeling of thankfulness that his mother had not lived to see his trouble.

He was an orphan and had been in the employ of his uncle, a wagon and carriage manufacturer, for three years. Among the other employes were two young men, one older, the other younger than himself, and it so happened that they were all aspirants for the same young lady's favor.

The strife had been a friendly one however, until she dismissed Blethen and the younger one named Masters, retaining Clarkson, who was fully ten years her senior.

This of course made the rejected suitors furious, inasmuch as they fully believed that Clarkson had played some sort of a "game" to curry favor.

"To tell the truth, Blethen, I have always thought you had the inside track there," Masters said frankly, "but I did not mean to yield till I had to; any way I fancied she almost disliked Clarkson."

Rolf shook his head gloomily, it was a matter that he could not talk about. His love for Pansy Moore was something more than a boyish passion, it was his very life. In his eyes she had been almost perfection, her one failing being a propensity to flirt; but then she was so young, gay and pretty, and such a belle.

He had thought that she secretly favored him.

In less than a fortnight after their dismissal, Paul Masters was found one morning lying beside the railroad track with a bullet hole in his brain. A few feet away an ivory handled pocket knife with Rolf's name inscribed on the handle, was found.

It had been a Christmas gift from Masters himself only the winter before.

Somebody—and finally a dozen people—remembered seeing the young men walking together in that direction just before dark. Of course Blethen was arrested at once, and when his room, over his uncle's carriage shop, was searched, several articles spattered with blood and dust were found.

Clarkson, too, remembered of having heard them in loud, angry conversation several times of late; and somehow the rumor spread that they had been wont to quarrel over their rivalry in regard to Pansy Moore.

Rolf's uncle—who was a hard, narrow-minded man—was one of the first to forsake him, probably to insure against any appeal from the youth for bail or help. But he need not have feared. Rolf asked no one for bail.

"I am innocent of this crime," he protested. "Why, Paul Masters was my dearest friend."

"So much the worse," cried the excited populace.

Clarkson offered to go his bail, but Rolf refused him, and awaited his trial in the county jail.

The result of the trial we already know. It seemed to Ralf that all the faces that had smiled on him for the last three years united in one great leer.

The majority believed him guilty and the verdict was "guilty;" so what mattered it what the minority thought, or whether he really was or not?

After searching the sea of faces for one and not finding it, he sat in quiet, indifferent hopelessness till the end.

She, of course, believed him guilty, and had gone with the rest. Clarkson alone seemed to really stand by him, and gave his testimony against him grudgingly. "But he can afford to," thought Ralf bitterly.

He had not looked on Pansy Moore's face again until this Easter morn in the prison chapel. No wonder he was astonished at his dream and this message on the card; no wonder that he wept.

A year passed and he had known no other ray of light, but he had never grown quite hopeless again.

Wretched, miserable he was, but there was ever the remembrance of the dream, and that little card, soiled and broken by continual handling and caressing, but still bearing the magic inscription.

Again they sat in chapel, again the wheezy old organ rattled off under the unskillful touch of the warden's daughter's fingers; but Ralf Blethen was wide awake and watchful. All the year he had hoped that she would come again, hard as it really was for him to be treated as a criminal by the only woman he loved, and she the affianced, probably the wife ere this, of another. She did not come, however, and at the end of another year Ralf Blethen had settled down to utter despair and bitterness.

His doggedness made him unpopular even with his companions, but he did not care; he was an innocent man and would not associate with criminals though he must company with them as long as he lived.

This Easter morning he walked with the rest in his usual listless, taciturn manner.

All unheeded by him the services proceeded until at the close of the sermon there was a movement at the door, and a quiet, elderly woman, entered and distributed cards to each.

There was a terrible feeling in Ralf's soul as, taking his ungraciously from her hand, he waited for her face to be turned away and then tore it in pieces.

After dinner he lay down and tried to sleep. He was a little ashamed of what he had done, and his mood was softened.

If only he could dream that beautiful dream again!

He finally fell asleep, but was awakened by the jailer's key in the ponderous lock.

Lifting his head he found himself face to face with his old love.

She was as lovely as ever, and she smiled so brightly as she hurried toward him both hands extended.

"Oh Ralf!" and then she burst into tears.

The jailer was not a man of much native delicacy, but on this occasion and at this crisis he withdrew, and so must we.

This much we know, however, that on the following morning Ralf Blethen left the shadows of the gray prison walls and once more entered the world, his innocence having been established by a confession made by the real murderer—no less a personage than Clarkson—when in the icy grip of death.

It appeared that he knew all the time that Pansy cared only for Ralf; but he managed to get her father into his power financially and as regarded reputation, refusing to have mercy unless he gave him his daughter.

The father finally confessed all to the girl, and for his sake she determined to dismiss the others and engage herself to Clarkson.

"But I will never marry him," she vowed to herself.

After the murder her father took her away for fear of her offending Clarkson and popular opinion, by her outspoken faith in Blethen.

During their stay abroad she determined to free herself from her hated engagement by some means or other; but her father's entreaties dissuaded her; and Clarkson pressed her to name the day immediately upon their return. Instead of doing so, she went to visit a friend—"to spend Easter with her," she said; but it was the day of her first visit to the prison.

Three weeks later her father died suddenly of heart trouble, and she broke her engagement in less than an hour.

Sickness followed and another Easter passed before she was out of her room again.

"I always knew he was innocent," she said quietly to Clarkson, who sent for her when he made his confession.

He had induced Masters to walk with him on that fatal evening in order to find out, "how Blethen took the mitten," for he was madly jealous of the latter, knowing that he was the one that Pansy loved.

Masters had twitted him with this fact and in a moment of ungovernable passion he had pulled out his pistol and shot him. When he saw what he had done he spent the night—Ralf going at nine o'clock to watch with a sick man—in arranging evidence to throw the other in the blame.

How his plans worked we know.

Ralf and Pansy oftimes smile and weep over a grimy, tattered little Easter card, and the former is a firm believer in dreams.

Grant's Palatial Chamber.

Now that the Stewart mansion, in New York, is to be turned over to the Manhattan Club for a club house, it has come out that there was one sacred room in the mansion. This room is on the second floor. It was originally furnished in 1872. The carpets for the room were made in Europe and fitted like a glove. The furniture was made in Paris and was of the most expensive kind.

There was a crystal chandelier in it whose prisms shone like diamonds. Marble statues from Italy and fine painting were some of the costly adornments. The original outlay for furnishing the room was $50,000. Whom do you suppose it was so magnificently fitted up for? None other than Ulysses S. Grant, then in the last year of his first time as President of the United States.

It will be recalled that Gen. Grant sent A. T. Stewart's name to the Senate for confirmation as Secretary of the Treasury. It was then discovered that the Constitution would not permit an importer to take this place in the Cabinet. But Mr. Stewart, appreciating the President's desire to honor him, became from that moment a warmer friend than ever of Gen. Grant.

This room in his palatial mansion was furnished expressly for the use of the President. No matter how crowded the house might be, no person on earth except the General was to have the use of it even for a moment. A latch-key to the mansion and a key to the room were sent to him, with the directions that whenever he wanted to come to New York and have a resting spell this room would be at his disposal.

Gen. Grant, in the eight years that he was President, occupied it many more times than anybody except the Stewarts were aware of. Ostensibly he was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, but when the evening began to wane and when wearied with the day's callers, he would slip into a cab and be driven to his beautiful hiding-place in the Stewart mansion.

Prisoners of Fine Instincts.

The prisoners in the penitentiary, says a well-known warden, are not all as black as they are painted. Some of them are fine fellows and possess many refined tissues in their composition. Within the confines of the prison walls they never forget to show off their true characters—the same as if they were breathing the air of freedom. If a man happens to be a villain and a loafer before he is sent to our care, he generally keeps up his villainy and loathsomeness as far as practicable while in our charge. The same rule applies to that of a well-bred prisoner He retains his natural instincts with us. Wonderful to relate, we have always found our life prisoners the best of the 1,000 or more under our charge. Nearly all of the men who are serving out life sentences are trusted by the authorities to go anywhere. We even send some of these life prisoners down town to do errands and chores for the officers of the institution. The reason that so much confidence is placed in this particular class is due to their characters. It may happen that in killing his man, that is the only depredation against society ever committed by the murderer. In one single fit of passion the man ruins his entire future good life. The keepers of the prisons are the ones who have the advantage of being thrown in the society of many of these admirable characters.

Had Had Experience.

"Well, now, this is something like," exclaimed Mrs. Newwife, awakening her husband suddenly from a stolen after-dinner nap. "It says here in the paper that at the Hotel Bernina, in Samoden, they are cooking beefsteak by electricity. What a blessing that will be to the poor, overworked women if it becomes general."

"What are they doing?" grunted the husband, only half awake.

"Cooking beefsteak by electricity."

A Great Difference.

"Ah, you know my brother," said an Englishman to an American acquaintance.

"Yes, I am well acquainted with him."

"Ah, and do you notice a great difference between me and him?"

"No, I can't say that I do."

"But there is a great difference. Our characters are totally different."

"In what way?"

"Well, you see, Henry always winds his watch in the morning and I wind mine at night."—Arkansaw Traveler.

He Took No Chances.

A certain conductor, before he was married, took his best girl out to dine. He didn't have much money that day, so he felt nervous. He thought he would give her a beer to start on, so he handed her a bill-of-fare and invited her to guess what she was going to have to drink. The girl read it over carefully and finally said:

"Ed, dear, I guess I'll take champagne."

Ed looked up almost paralyzed, then murmured:

"Wrong, darling, this time; guess again."

Then, without waiting to take any more chances, he sung out:

"Two beers!"—New York Dispatch.

A Hint to Journalists.

Journalist—I'll have to get me a new pair of heavy boots pretty soon.

Friend—Those you have got on seem to be in pretty good condition.

They will not last long.

Going to walk down to your office to save car fare?

No, I've got a free pass over the line.

And you haven't got any marriageable daughters that I ever heard of.

No, thank heaven!

Then I cannot imagine why you yearn for a new pair of boots.

The Ability to Bear Pain

Is the test of fortitude among the Indian tribes. But we defy any Cherokee, Sioux or Comanche to endure the twinges of rheumatism without wincing. These, indeed are slight at first, but grow in intensity until they become unbearable. No malady is more obstinate in its maturity than that which gives rise to them. The more need, then, of attacking it at the outset. Foremost among remedies for it is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, safer and infinitely more effective than colchicum, veratrum and nux vomica, all remedies which might prove destructive of life in a slightly excessive dose. Mineral depurents, also, when not positively mischievous, are far inferior in remedial power to this salutary botanic medicine. It entirely expels from the blood the acrid impurities which originate the disease, and enriches as well as cleanses it. Constipation, liver complaint, dyspepsia and other ailments also give way to it.

$2,500 Reward for a Lost Cat.

The equivalent in English money of $2,500 was once offered by an old lady in London for the return of a favorite cat which had strayed or been stolen. People called her a "crank," and perhaps she was. It is unfortunate that one of the gentler sex should ever gain this title, yet many do. It is, however, frequently not their fault. Often functional derangements will apparently change a woman's entire nature. Don't blame such sufferers if they are "cranky," but tell them to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is an infallible remedy for "female weaknesses." It will soon restore them to their normal condition. It is warranted to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be returned.

Spring Medicine

Is a necessity with nearly everybody. The run down, tired condition at this season is due to impurities in the blood which have accumulated during the winter, and which must be expelled if you wish to feel well. Hood's Sarsaparilla thoroughly purifies and vitalizes the blood, creates a good appetite, cures biliousness and headache, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and imparts to the whole body a feeling of health and strength. Try it this spring.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla every year as a spring tonic, with most satisfactory results." C. PARMELEE, 349 Bridge Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Purifies the Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla purified my blood, gave me strength, and overcame the headache and dizziness, so that I am able to work again. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to others whose blood is thin or impure, and who feel worn out or run down." LUTHER NASON, Lowell, Mass.

"We have used Hood's Sarsaparilla for years, and recommend it as the best spring medicine or blood purifier. Our boy is nine years old and has enjoyed good health ever since we began giving it to him. We are seldom without it." B. F. GROVER, Rochester, N. H.

100 Doses One Dollar

The chief reason for the marvelous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the article itself. It is Merit that wins, and the fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla actually accomplishes what is claimed for it, is what has made it the medicine first in the confidence of our countrymen, and given to Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier.

"Early last spring I was very much run down, had nervous headache, felt miserable and all that. I was very much benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla and recommend it to my friends." MRS. J. M. TAYLOR, 1119 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O.

Creates an Appetite

"I wish to enroll my name as one of those who have derived health from the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For many years I have taken it, especially in the early spring, when I am troubled with dizziness, dullness, unpleasant taste in my mouth in the morning. It removes this bad taste, relieves my headache, and makes me feel greatly refreshed. The two bottles I have used this spring have been worth many dollars to me. I advise all my friends to take it." A MEMORY OF EARLY DAYS.

Bane of childhood's tender years,
Swallowed oft with groans and tears,
How it made the flesh recoil,
Loathsome, greasy castor oil!
Search your early memory close,
Till you find another dose:
All the shuddering frame revolts
At the thought of Epsom salts!
Underneath the pill-box lid
Was a greater horror hid,
Climax of all inward ills,
Huge and griping old blue pills!

What a contrast to the mild and gentle action of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, sugar-coated, easy to take, cleansing and renovating the system without wrenching it with agony. They are gently aperient or strongly cathartic according to size of dose. Unequaled as a liver pill. Smallest, cheapest, easiest to take. As a laxative, only one Pellet necessary for a dose. Cures Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Put up in vials, hermetically sealed, therefore always fresh and reliable. Being purely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet or occupation. Sold by druggists, at 25 cents a vial.

OVER WORKED Women

For "run-down," debilitated and overworked women, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is a potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to Women: a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine. It imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, nausea, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. It is carefully compounded by an experienced physician and adapted to woman's delicate organization. Purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee of satisfaction in every case, or price ($1.00) refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Republican Caucus.

The republicans of Union township, or a small part of them at least, met in Ensley's Hall Saturday at 2 p. m. The day was so very disagreeable, that but few turned out, there being but twenty-seven present by actual count. H. R. Culbertson, the committeeman called the caucus to order, and Charles Emanuel was made president, with W. B. Campbell secretary. Nominations were then declared in order. D. C. Carruth nominated I. M. Zent, for trustee, and there being no opposition the choice was made unanimous. For assessor Mr. Greene nominated D. C. Headley, and Mr. Carruth after some private talk, said he thought a man from the country should be made assessor, as they had already nominated a city man for trustee. So he named H. H. Weaver, saying that Weaver lived in town and had a farm too. He proposed to "catch de coon, comin' and goin'." Mr. Greene saw the point and at once withdrew the name of D. C. Headley, and on motion of Joseph Stafford, the nomination of H. H. Weaver was made unanimous. For justice of the peace, Sol. Shearer nominated Joe Stafford, at which the latter said, "Oh, he's got it in for me," (great laughter.) Mr. Carruth said we must have two candidates, and announced the name of W. J. Wilcox, and Henry C. Shull. Wilcox declined, saying he did not want the office. Emanuel and Carruth, both said "You needn't be afraid. There's no danger of your getting it." (Laughter.) But Wilcox refused to be used. Mr. Stafford then nominated G. H. Forkner, who declined. There was a long pause, and several stopped to talk to Senator Ensley, who had just come in. Finally Carruth said that as Wilcox and Forkner declined, he would suggest the name of G. A. Porter. Then came another long pause, at the close of which Culbertson moved to make the nominations of Shull and Porter unanimous. This was carried. For constables Frank Cooper and Robert Simpson were selected by acclamation. After some talk it was decided to let the people of the country bring in the names for supervisors on the day of election. The meeting then adjourned. As the Dispatch said of the democratic caucus "The caucus then adjourned without ratifying the nominations or voting on them." But there was nothing unusual about that in either case.

Plan for Establishing a Reading Room.

The committee appointed for the purpose, has prepared and submit the following report:

1 That there be a Stock Company formed, with shares $5,00 each.

2 That membership fees of $1 each be secured.

3 Each share of $5,00 is entitled to a representation by one vote.

4 Each membership fee of $1 entitles to the privileges of the Reading Room for one year.

5 From the stockholders there shall be a Board of five Directors elected to serve for one year.

6 The Directors shall elect from their number, a president, secretary and treasurer, and as a Board shall have power to make all necessary arrangements for promoting the interests of the work.

The estimated expenses for the year are about $1,200. This includes rent of good rooms, well located, salary of superintendent, all necessary furnishings, fuel, lights, reading matter, piano, &c

There will be a lunch room also in connection, which it is expected will be self-sustaining.

Steps will be taken immediately to secure subscriptions and perfect all plans for the enterprise. The following subcommittees were appointed to secure subscriptions: Mrs Ehlers, Mrs Moss, Mrs. Schaab, and gentlemen, Eckhart, Harter, Patterson and Blattner. To secure rooms: A. Robbins, J. B Baxter and Dr. Johnston.

They All Failed.

The following letter from W. A. Thomson, of Columbus, Wis., is peculiarly interesting: "My wife," says he, "has been treated for her head, stomach, and nervous prostration by three doctors in New York, two in Chicago, one in Philadelphia, one in Cincinnati, and at the large institute in Buffalo for 18 months. They all failed. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine helped her wonderfully." Why Farmers Don't get Rich.

Over large areas of the United States, wheat sells at from 40 to 50 cents, oats at from 9 to 12 cents, corn from 10 to 13 cents, and fat cattle from 1½ to 3 cents a pound. So says a writer in the Forum for April. How will protectionists account for this with a "protective duty" of 20 cents a bushel on wheat, 10 cents on corn, 10 on oats, and on beef and pork 1 cent a pound, if the farmer is protected by a tariff?

* * *

A writer in the April Forum, C. Wood Davis, evidently a republican gives the average price of corn in local markets, since 1870. That year, it averaged almost 55 cents. But since then it has gradually decreased till in 1889, the average was a trifle over 28 cents. And all this time, republicans have been telling farmers what a blessed thing it is to live under a protective tariff, one that will give them a nice home market and keep up prices on farm products!

* * *

The same writer, speaking of wheat and its average price in local markets, gives it, as being $1 04 in 1870, and averaging 70 cents in 1889.

* * *

The writer then takes up the question of the purchasing power of farm products as compared with former years. He shows that while the cost of producing has been decreased about 12 per cent, the purchasing power of farm products on an average, has decreased 39 per cent. So that the net purchasing power of farm products in general, is 27 per cent less than it was in 1870. This will show the utter fallacy of the high tariff arguments, that claim a farmer can buy as much with his products now as he could formerly. How do farmers like the picture of a net loss of revenue of 27 per cent as compared with their farm returns twenty years ago. The only reason we see given for not going back to a year before the high tariff began, is that prices of everything from 1860 to 1870, were more or less disturbed by the war and its effects on business.

* * *

The result of his study of this subject shows the writer that while population has increased, the production of farms has increased in a much greater ratio, and he concludes that what ails farmers is too great production. We are producing about a quarter more than we can consume. And he comes to the usual high tariff conclusion, that we must not hereafter raise so much grain, pork, beef, etc. He ends by saying:

"The logical conclusion from the evidence offered, is that the troubles of the farmer are due to the fact that there are altogether too many farms, too many cattle and swine, too many bushels of corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat and potatoes, too many tons of hay, and too great a production of nearly all other farm products for the number of consumers."

* * *

The strange conclusion will strike farmers as supremely ridiculous. How many farmers are there who think they are producing "too much wheat, corn, oats," etc.? Farmers are not fools. They know what the matter is. They know that the entire trouble is not in too much farm product, but in the small "number of consumers." What farmers need, is not poorer crops, or smaller fields, but more consumers. They need the markets of the world. Then they will have more consumers. There are millions of people who are ready to buy our farm products, but they cannot, or will not, as long as we place such serious obstructions in the way of trade. If we refuse to buy their products, they will of course refuse to buy ours. That is the usual couse of business. But republicans are all the time talking up a "home market." This writer, without perhaps being aware of it, shows that the home market is too small. We cannot consume all we produce. It would be silly for the Spaniards to claim that their "home market" should eat up all the oranges they can raise, and which they now send all over the world. But this is exactly what republicans are doing in the United States.

Sons of Veterans.

Last Saturday, that showed up so discouragingly in the afternoon, cleared off in time to enable everybody to go to the S. of V., entertainment. And it was fortunate that they could go, for they would have missed an excellent thing. A great many got tickets early, and went by way of the Presbyterian church, the basement of which was crowded till 8 o'clock. The supper was good, and put everyone in good trim to enjoy the literary treat which awaited them at the Opera House. The opera house was well filled by the time the curtain went up, disclosing Al. A. Rowland, captain of the camp, with 1st Lieut. F. A. Province and 2nd Lieut. E. C. Likens pesiding over the meeting. The first on the program, was an instrumental duet by Miss Lettie Meese and James Eldridge. It was fine, for both are accomplished performers. The opening address was by Mrs. M. A. Ehlers. She was very interesting and eloquent, and one never tires of her efforts, for they are examples of the purest and best expression of which our grand English tongue is capable. Mrs. Geo. Grogg showed an abundance of native talent and energy, in her rendering of that story of the wild ride of the "Horseman of Conemaugh," and was generously applauded. Mrs. Yesbera and T. P. Scott sang a duet, which was sweetly rendered, as is always the case with them. Walter Hartman sang a solo, and showed that he is possessed of a fine voice, giving promise that he will become a successful singer. L. B. Fretz recited "Flora McFlimsey," to the delight of the vast audience, who applauded heartily. Later on, he gave a fine recitation, entitled "The Meeting of Blue and Gray," accompanying himself, (as Signor Fretzeni) by playing one-string music between verses, on the violin. Frank Davenport and Walter Hartman, gave the audience some excellent music with the ocarina and guitar, the former especially being a novelty to many. So well pleased were the audience, that the players were called back and tumultously cheered. Miss Lila Baker, gave a delightful recitation in which she showed excellent dramatic taste and ability. Miss Nellie Barns, made a decided hit with her recitation "The Jiners," which she delivered with considerable effect, and was rewarded with the applause of her hearers. Liv. Kuhlman, was hardly recognized when he appeared as "Biddy McGinnis," the Irish woman, so completely did his dress change his appearance. He was cheered to the close. Morris Widney sang a new and excellent solo, one eminently fitted to show his splendid vocal powers. Everyone likes to hear him sing. The "Little German Band" captured the house. They are Harry and Ed. Rainier, Walter Hartman, Will Schaab and Frank Davenport, with their guitars mouth organs and ocarina. We have heard nothing more enjoyable for some time. The audience tried to make them play all night. As fine a thing as the entertainment furnished, was the singing of the male quartet, Mr. Harper, of Waterloo, Mr. Sam Hanna, T. P. Scott and Morris Widney, of this place. They would have been called back, but the curtain was hurried down, as the hour was later than most of the audience realized. This closed one of the very best entertainments we have had. The young vets did themselves great credit by their good taste and tact in getting the entire affair in shape, and our home talent, both literary and musical, have a right to feel proud of the delightful evening they helped to make for us. The splendid piano used is the property of the well known music house of D. H. Baldwin & Co., of Ft. Wayne, and is one of the best instruments ever heard in the city. We are pleased to learn that the boys have $15 or $20 over and above expenses, which goes into the treasury as a relief fund.

Monopoly on Acorns.

(Layfayette Times.)

Why should the farmers grumble? Doesn't the tariff lay a protective tax of 2 cents per pound or 35 per cent. ad. valorem on acorns, and of one cent a pound or 80 per cent. ad valorem on peanuts? What if the farmer does have to pay a monopoly protective tax of 66 or 131 per cent. on window glass, 41 to 85 per cent. on salt, 55 to 63 per cent on clothing, 66 to 72 per cent. on blankets, and 55 per cent. on plain crockery? If he has to mortgage his lands to pay these monopoly taxes while raising wheat and corn, all he has to do is to try raising acorns. And if the acorn market becomes overstocked, he can fall back on peanuts. The present protective tariff gives the Tippecanoe County farmers an absolute monopoly on acorns and peanuts. What is he grumbling about?

Remarkable Sale of Real Estate.

Monday of last week the Fort Wayne Land and Improvement Company placed on sale their new Lakeside Park addition to Fort Wayne, containing about six hundred lots. The lots were not sold at auction. A price was fixed upon each, and where two or more persons desired the same lot they were compelled to draw cuts. Great interest was manifested and the rooms of the company were crowed with eager purchasers. Before night the company had sold over one hundred lots, the sales amounting to seventy-thousand dollars. Probably no such sale of city lots has ever before occurred in the history of the state. The purchasers were nearly all Fort Wayne people, and already half a hundred handsome houses are being planned to grace the new addition. The recent growth of Fort Wayne would surprise any of our citizens who have not visited that city during the past year or two. Real estate which has always been unreasonably cheap, is beginning to boom, and many persons living in towns surrounding the summit city [illegible] been, and are quietly investing a little spare cash in promising city lots, with a good assurance of doubling their money within a year.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

The County Convention.

MR. EDITOR:—The central committee of the democratic party of this county, I see is called to meet next Saturday, for the purpose of organization. I understand that the candidates expect to have the committee call the county convention. The candidates now spoken of, but not regularly announced are quite busy, and expect to have their way. If the committee allow the candidates to control this matter, they had better turn the whole business over to the candidates. Then there would be fun and hair pulling. The candidates now at work, want an early convention, the reason being that the longer it is put off, the more candidates they think there will be before the convention, and they therefore calculate the fewer the candidates the greater will be their chance.

My observation in party matters is, that there is less kicking and trouble after a convention where there were many candidates for nomination, than where there are but two or three. The reason is readily understood. For in the one case, the defeated man lays all the fault on the successful one, but if there were a number the defeated ones do not know whether to lay the fault to the successful man, or to his defeated brethren.

I have but two suggestions to make to the committee, which are: 1st, do the business of your committee yourselves, and then you must exclude all others. If you allow everyone who wants to, attend and take part, you will be all day at it, and get into wrangles which will be bad for all.

2nd. Remember that if you get up new plans, a custom different from long established usages, and there should be defeat to anyone either at the nomination or polls, it will be laid to the change you have made in the campaign.

In fact you need not now name the day for the convention. The state central committee I see by the papers, was in session two weeks ago, and they did not call the state convention, nor name the day to hold it. But whatever may be done let it be done for the good of the party, and not for the candidates, and let everyone who wants to, be a candidate and give them plenty of time. Haste spoils the broth.

FARMER.

The Five Big Battles.

It will be remembered that not long ago, the Indianapolis News, offered a prize of $25 to the person naming the five most important battles of the rebellion. Last week it was decided, the fortunate man being A. E. Williams of Indianapolis. He is a young man, a clerk in the Pan Handle railway office. A committee had been selected to decide the matter. They were, Gen. Fred. Knefler, Gen. Geo. F. Magginis and Colonel James B. Black, all of Indianapolis. They met and studied over the leading battles and the effect they had exercised over the result of the struggle, and came to the conclusion that Gettysburg, Chattanooga, Champion's Hill, Nashville and Five Forks were the ones. Then the guesses began to come in, nearly 3,000 of them. There was only one that gave the names they had decided on, though quite a number of others named a part of them. The judges then made the award, and proceeded to explain why they believed these battles should be named. Their reasons, are of considerable value to the student of history, as they throw much light on the way we should estimate results in cases of this kind. We would be glad to give all their conclusions at once, but have not the space. So we will give as much as we can this week, and follow with the remaining battles under the proper heads hereafter. We hope the students of history in our public schools will preserve the committee's articles, not that they are necessarily correct, but that they are very valuable and interesting. They give first:

CHAMPION'S HILL

The number of troops engaged and the casualties would not alone entitle Champion's Hill to be included in this list; but it was indeed one of the most important and most decisive battles of the war, and in no other was more heroic courage displayed by the troops engaged. General Grant's campaign around Vicksburg was the boldest and most brilliant campaign ever conducted on this continent, both in its conception and in its execution; and this battle was the critical and decisive event of the campaign. The army of General Pemberton had come out from the stronghold of Vicksburg, seeking to unite with General Johnston's reinforcing column, and to strike and crush the daring invader in the interior without a base. Johnston had been beaten driven away from the city of Jackson, but it was necessary promptly to defeat Pemberton and to drive him beyond Black River and into Vicksburg. All this was done at Champion's Hill, and when it had been accomplished the fall of Vicksburg became a question of time. The great campaign led up to Champion's Hill, and victory there solved the whole problem. What was gained on that field may be realized more easily by considering what would have been lost if Grant had been beaten there. "The fate of the Confederacy was sealed when Vicksburg fell." Champion's Hill made possible the siege of Vicksburg, and the capture there of 31,000 prisoners, 172 pieces of artillery, 60,000 small arms and great quantities of ammunition. The fall of Vicksburg carried with it Port Hudson, with 5,500 prisoners and large quantities of munitions of war. Thus, the Confederacy was cut in two, and National control of the Mississippi from its source to the Gulf was secured. Champion's Hill was the first really decisive battle of the war, and the beneficial results of the victory were incalcuable.

Survival of the Fittest.

For some time past the question of purity in baking powders has formed quite a feature of newspaper discussions, and eminent doctors of philosophy have given opinions as to the ingredients which compose many of the articles sold under that name. The investigations have narrowed down to the limit which awards the Royal Baking Powder the palms of purity, and the most distinguished scientists have testified not only that no extraneous or deleterious matter enters into its composition, but that its use is positively healthful, making, as it does, lighter, sweeter and more digestible food. The Royal Baking Powder Copany have achieved a wide-world reputation for the success which has marked their preparation of cream of tartar for baking purposes. It is indisputably shown that they have eliminated all elements of tartrate of lime, alum or other impurities, and present to the public a healthful and chemically pure article. The United States Government chemists and others widely known have verified its superiority over other manufacturers, and testified, through practical experience, to its excellence. It is well for families to observe the fact that it costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other, but it is, as shown by chemical analysis, the only "absolutely pure" baking powder made.

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

Obituary.

Joseph C. Loveland, was born June 23, 1840 and died March 29, 1890, making his age 49 years, 9 months and 6 days. Mr. Loveland was well known in newspaper circles having been a printer and publisher from his youth. From 1862 to 1865 he published a paper at Auburn, but at the latter date removed to Clyde, Ohio, where he started the Clyde Times. About thirteen years ago he established the Headlight at Corunna, which he has published ever since. Mr. Loveland was a writer of more than average ability, with a keen taste for the caustic and pointed in anything he treated. He was, besides, a good printer, showing a fine taste for artistic work, and a disposition to keep the business of the craft up to its best standard. His acquaintance especially with newspaper men was extensive and his death leaves a gap in the ranks of the fraternity. His mother departed this life about a year ago, and the blow made a great impression on his mind, as he was greatly attached to her. He leaves no immediate relatives, but his son Joseph, and sister Mary, to mourn the loss of one who had proved a kind and indulgent father, and a loving brother.

Failures in Life.

People fail in many ways. In business, in morality, in religion, in happiness and in health. A weak heart is often an unsuspected cause of failure in life. If the blood does not circulate properly in the lungs, there is shortness of breath, asthma, etc.; in the brain dizziness, headache, etc.; in the stomach, wind, pain, indigestion, faint spells, etc.; in the liver, torpidity, congestion, etc. Pain in the left side, shoulder and stomach is caused by heart strain. For all these maladies Dr. Miles' New Cure for the heart and lungs is the best remedy. Sold, guaranteed and recomended by F. E. Davenport. Treatise free. 3

Card of Thanks.

To the many friends and neighbors of the late Joseph Loveland, we wish to extend our best thanks for help and kindness in his last illness and his death and burial. We can only trust you may all be as well remembered.

It is used by the most eminent physicians and in hospitals as the best tonic wine known. Speer's Claret is also regarded as the purest.

THE NEWS RECORD.

A SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World—Political, Commercial, and Industrial News, Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc., Etc.

The Mahoning.

The Pittsburgh and Western Railroad, which extends to Akron, has purchased the Toledo and Delphos Narrow-Guage road, which is finished from Carey to Delphos, Ohio. The track will be made standard gauge and extended to Chicago. It is proposed to build from Plymouth to Findlay, and then purchase the American Midland system, now in operation between Findlay and Ottawa, and which is graded as far west as Fort Wayne. Then, by building a short distance, make a great trunk line between Pittsburgh and Chicago, fifty-two miles shorter than any route now connecting these two cities. This new line is known as "the Carnegie road." The American road is now in the hands of a receiver, and is soon to be sold.

The Carpenters' Strike.

The carpenters' strike at Chicago took place Monday morning according to program. It is estimated that between five and six thousand men went out. The carpenter work on nearly all of the large jobs was brought to a standstill. No trouble was reported from any quarters so far. The strike was for eight hours as a day's work with wages at 40 cents per hour. A great many of the non-union men quit work out of sympathy with their union brethren, and it was claimed that most of them would join the Carpenters' Union. After being out all day a compromise was effected at $3.50 per day.

The Law Unconstitutional.

RICHMOND (Va.,) special: Upon appeal by Armour & Co., of Chicago, United States Judge Hughes has rendered a decision declaring the meat inspection law passed by the Legislature to be contrary to the federal constitution. The decision is elaborate and takes the ground that the inspection is not meant as a sanitary measure, but as a State revenue measure; that the tax of one cent per pound is outrageous and that the meat slaughtered within 120 miles of the delivery could be sold under the law in an unsound condition.

Killed Three Negroes.

Three negroes were stealing railroad iron at Irondale, Ark., when City Marshal England and Deputy Sheriff Fortenberry came up and called for their surrender. The negroes ran a mile, with the officers in pursuit, when one of them turned and shot England. Deputy Fortenberry opened fire on the negroes and when the firing ceased all three were dead. Marshal England will probably die.

Coffined, but Came to Life.

Mrs. Cynthia Moller, aged 91, of Wichita, Kan., appeared to die from a disease from which she had been suffering recently. The body had been placed on ice before it was discovered that life was not wholly extinct. Physicians were summoned and Mrs. Moller was resuscitated. She recovered sufficiently to converse with her friends, but in the afternoon a relapse occurred and she died.

Chocked to Death.

When Rev. Thomas Gefton, pastor of one of the leading Presbyterian churches, of Wichita, Kan., returned from church he found his little girl, 1-year-old, hanging in a hammock, dead. She had been left by a servant girl playing in the hammock, and the child apparently got her head fast in the meshes and swung down, her feet failing th touch the floor by six inches.

Local Option Beaten in Iowa.

Local option has been beaten by two votes in the Iowa House of Representatives. The test came at last on the motion to report the option bill back for the indefinite postponement, and the motion to postpone was carried by 51 to 49 votes. The fifty-one were made up of Ewart, the Union Labor-Prohibitionist, and the Republicans. They held firm against local option as a substitute to prohibition and carried the day.

A Cyclone in Illinois.

A Burlington (Iowa,) special, dated the 8th inst., says: It is reported that Prophetstown, Ill., has been swept away by a cyclone. No particulars except that thirty freight cars were blown to atoms. The whole town has been wiped from the face of the earth. Many people have been killed. The wires are down. It is not proable that additional information will be secured to-night.

Thirteen Coolies Killed.

A dispatch from Hong Kong reports a desperate encounter on board the German ship Chowfoo, on its passage from Amoy to Delhi, between the ship's force and 250 coolies, who mutinied and attempted to burn the steamer and murder the officers. Thirteen coolies were killed before the mutiny was suppressed.

A Double Killing.

At Chamber's Station, near Mt. Sterling, Ky., Will Barnes and Billy Day were killed by Albin Barnes and George Stephens. The Barnes were cousins and the shooting grew out of an old feud. Day was a bystander, without any share in the quarrel. Albin Barnes is thought to be wounded.

A Silcott Scent.

Denver (Col.) special: The various detective agencies here fail to confirm the report that Silcott had been captured in Portland, Ore. It is reported, however, that the woman whose name has been mixed up with Silcott's passed through Denver on her way west about a month ago.

CERNEAU MASONS.

They Apply for a Temporary Injunction Against the Grand Lodge in Ohio and It Granted.

Cleveland special: For several years past the Masons of Ohio have been divided on account of what is known as the Cerneau rite. Recently the controversy was taken into the Common Pleas Court. Three suits were filed by County Recorder A. T. Anderson, Deputy Probate Judge F. M. Chandler and A. E. Gilbert, against the Grand Lodge of Ohio, Leander Burdick, Grand Master of the State and the Forest City lodge of this city. The petitions allege that a conspiracy was entered into by the Grand Lodge to oust certain members who have become Cerneau Masons. By systematic work the Grand Lodge was captured by the alleged conspirators and all those not in sympathy with them had to go. The edicts of the resolutions were passed in direct conflict with the constitution and the Grand Lodge went outside of its duties to expel members of the lodges obnoxious to the sight of the conspirators. Charges were preferred against Anderson, Chandler, and Gilbert. The hearing of these charges was to take place at a special meeting called for that purpose. The plaintiffs claimed that the hearing would be a farce so far as a just and equitable hearing is concerned and say they have no adequate remedy at law in case they were expelled. They asked the Court to enjoin the hearing for expulsion of the plaintiffs in these three cases. One of the principal charges again Chandler was that he delivered an address at a Cerneau banquet, in which some of the secrets of Masonry were given away. Judge Lamson heard the motion for restraining order and granted it, pending a hearing.

FAMILY POISONED.

A Father and Mother Both Dead—A Daughter Dying and a Brother Dangerously Ill.

A Chicago special, dated the 7th inst., says: A mysterious and sensational case of poisoning occurred last night at the residence of George E. Noonan, a wealthy retired real estate dealer. It caused the death of Mr. Noonan and his wife, and may lead to the death of the daughter, Grace, a beautiful young lady, 16 years of age. The brother, Frank, was very ill last night, but it is thought that he will recover. The youngest child, Cora, was but slightly ill. Last night, at dinner, the family ate heartily of canned corn. Shortly after the meal symptoms of poisoning were noticed. The members of the family were greatly distressed by pains in the abdomen, and neighboring physicians were summoned. Before the doctors arrived Mr. Noonan was beyond medical aid and he died in great agony at 3 o'clock this morning Mrs. Noonan died at 11:30 o'clock. Dr. Crutcher, one of the attending physicians, secured the can of corn, but could discover no trace of poison in it. The physician, learning that Emma Stark, a domestic, who had come to the house only yesterday morning, was missing, notified the police of the strange case. She assisted in the preparation of dinner at 5 o'clock, and disappeared about 6 or about when the first symptoms of sickness were shown by any of the family. The police developed the fact that a girl answering the domestic's description had purchased some "Rough on Rats" at a drug store, corner of State and Sixty-first streets. She was arrested by the police, and, although she has been identified by several persons as the domestic who was at the Noonans yesterday she denies the fact. Her strange denials make the case all the more mysterious. The police think the girl frightened at the sudden illness of the various members of the family and fearing suspicion would be directed toward her, put on her hat and cloak and fled. The prisoner said she was a variety actress under the alias of Della Foster, and that her real name was Mrs. Starr William Ray, her husband from whom she was living apart being a bill poster at Fort Wayne, Ind.

"JUST FOR FUN."

A Couple of Tough Chicago Lads Go Into the Train Wrecking Business.

The grand jurors investigated a startling case of youthful depravity at Chicago. It was presented to them by J. W. Norton, of the Northwestern road. The company had been annoyed for some time by the theft of brass and pieces of iron from cars and switches. On the night of December 18, a switch located a little out of the city was turned and a freight train had a narrow escape from serious wreck. The guilty parties, however, were not discovered until some time afterward, when one night they fired two shots through the windows of a rapidly moving Woodstock passenger train. The officer who made the arrest was surprised to find his prisoners to be tow-headed boys of 12 and 14 years, Fred Krueger and Charles Borck. George W. Field and F. Stiesley, of Plainview, Minn., told how near they came to being killed by the shots fired. The boys declared they had attempted to wreck tne train and did the shooting "just for fun." Four indictments were returned against them, bail being fixed at $4,000. Krueger's bail was subsequently reduced to $2,500 by Judge Longer at the request of the lad's father.

Found Dead in Bed.

Columbus special: Edward J. Dowdall, an active local politician, and last year a member of the State Democratic Central Committee for this district, was found dead in bed at his residence in this city. Mr. Dowdall has been in poor health for some months, but lately had been gaining strength, and his friends hoped he would soon be well again. He had been about as usual the past week, and Saturday night retired feeling as well as for weeks past. His wife left him about 11 o'clock, retiring to her own room, and upon going to her husband's room in the morning found him cold in death. The physicians say he must have been dead three or four hours when discovered, and ascribe his death to heart disease. Deceased was prominent in secret society circles, being a 32 degree Mason, an Odd Fellow, K. of P., Red Man and identified with other orders. His father was the late Joseph Dowdall, who, at the time of his death, was Supreme Keeper of Records and Seal of the Grand Lodge of the World, Knights of Pythias, and the son filled out the unexpired term of his father.

A Clever Attempt to Rob a Chicago Jeweler

Chicago special: A bold attempt to rob a leading jewelry firm of $1,500 worth of diamonds was made by a young man who registered at the Palmer house under the name of Ralph Allen. Allen sent to Hyman, Berg & Co.'s jewelry store and requested the firm to send some diamonds to him for inspection as he was suffering from a sprained ankle and unable to visit their store. Wm. A. Bigler, a salesman for the firm, carried $1,500 worth of stones to Allen's room. After carefully examining all the jewels, Allen selected one ring and a pin. While the salesman was repacking the remainder of the diamonds, Allen came up behind him and struck him a terrible blow with a heavy cane on the back of the head knocking him down. As the salesman got upon his feet and faced his assailant, Allen struck him again, cutting a wound two inches long in the scalp. The wounded man screamed and Allen, without stopping to grab the package of diamonds, rushed out of the room and ran down the hall way. After an exciting chase Allen was captured by an employe of the hotel and taken to the Harrison street station.

Too Reckless with Revolvers.

Louisville special: The people of Bryantsville are very indignant over the actions of four young Lexington men who passed through that place en route to Danville to attend the oratorical contest at Center College. Before reaching Bryantsville they shot at a man who was fishing, shot just between two men who were walking along the turnpike, invited some girls to get in and ride with them, stopped in Bryantsville and swore a few lines. Passing on they fired into a school-house while school was in session. The first door being open one ball struck the partition of the vestibule. Mr. Jenkins, one of the school trustees, followed them to Danville, but as the warrant he had only contained the name of one, the other three did not appear when 'Squire Dunn opened court. Their names are S. L. Pottinger, James Pugh, Lewis Mulligan, and Blythe Anderson. Anderson was fined $75, which was promptly paid. From his statement it appears that Pugh is the only one of the other three who is guilty.

Opposed to the Chinese Bill.

Representatives of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, the American Board (Congregational), the Protestant Episcopal Board, the American Baptist Missionary Union, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, the American Bible Society, the Evangelical Alliance and Society of Friends, met at the rooms of the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Board in New York, to consider the Chinese enumeration bill, now before the Senate, with special reference to its bearing upon missionary work and property in China. The sentiment of the meeting was strongly opposed to the bill. It was urged that its adoption would be a violation of treaty rights, and all who were present were apprehensive that it would endanger the personal safety of the American missionaries now resident in China and greatly hamper them in their work. It was decided to leave more specific action to be taken by the missionary societies separately. All the societies represented have missions in China.

Badly Burned.

Mrs. Geiger, of Fort Wayne, was burning sulphur near some bedding at her home, when in some manner the bedding became ignited and in her efforts to smother the blaze her clothing caught fire. The fire had gained considerable headway before she noticed it and her efforts to extinguish the same were in vain. She began screaming for help and ran out of the house. Her clothes were completely in flames, but there happened to be a street car passing, and the driver jumped from the car and throwing his coat around the woman succeeded in smothering the flames. Her clothes were almost completely burned from her body, and upon the arrival of a physician it was found that her head, shoulders, breast, arms and limbs had been badly burned, the hair being burned from her head, although her face was in no way injured. She was tenderly cared for, and it is thought that with careful nursing there will be no danger to her life.

An Eccentric Heiress.

Staunton (Va.) special: The news of the arrest in Philadelphia of Miss Mary Rebecca Shipley, on a charge of shoplifting, excited great surprise in Staunton, Va., where Miss Shipley is well known and highly respected. A telegram was sent to a lawyer of this city, now in Washington, to go to Philadelphia and defend Miss Shipley, and some of her neighbors will attend the trial to testify to the character. Miss Shipley was for many years separated from her parents, and during her early life she worked as a bonnet trimmer. In 1875 her parents were reunited and they began a search for their daughter. Soon after they discovered her they died, leaving her a fortune of $35,000. This money was invested for her and she has been living on the income from the investment. She has always been rather eccentric and her friends think her mind is affected.

A Novel Method.

The water which has flooded the New York end of the Hudson River tunnel was rapidly pumped out and every means that could be thought of have been employed to stop the leaks. Two divers descended and after spending considerable time, gave up the search. They succeeded, however, in closing one of the doors. Then Engineer Moore used a novel method of finding the leaks. He secured a number of water rats yesterday and tied long pieces of oakum to their tails, caught in the middle by a piece of wire. The rats, were then forced into the caisson through air pumps. The rats, following the current of air, found the leaks and passing through the crevices left the oakum behind. This stopped the ingress of air sufficiently to enable the pumping to proceed with success.

Illicit Whisky.

Lawlessness and violence have again made their appearance in Rowan County, Ky., growing out of the manufacture and sale of illicit whisky. The United States revenue men made a sweep a week ago, destroying various stills, and things are being made decidedly uncomfortable for the people who are thought to have given the Government information. Eph. Cooper was shot from ambush and Bart Baumgartner and Tim Cooper were also killed in a fight. George Hogg, son of the Sheriff, was shot, Hiram Roberts was bushwhacked and mortally wounded. Nelson Egan was called to his door and received a bullet in his brain. It is all a mere question of whisky or no whisky, and there is no telling where the bloodshed will end.

Not a Coward.

Col. Charles De Arnaud, a Russian, who is pressing a claim against the Government for services rendered during the late war, visited the Washington office of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette to demand a correction of a published dispatch. The dispatch stated that Col. De Arnaud was a spy during the war. Gen. H. V. Boynton, the correspondent of the Commercial-Gazette, declined to retract the charge, and when De Arnaud called him a coward, Gen. Boynton threw him through the doorway of the office, and into the street. Col. De Arnaud returned to the office and apologized for his language, saying that he was firmly convinced that Gen. Boynton was not a coward.

Wanted to Murder.

Memphis special: Somewhat of a sensation was created here by the attempt of Mrs. Fannie Goldsby to murder her uncle, Gibb Williams. Williams is a clerk in a book store on Main street. His neice is the wife of a farmer living at Lucy, Tenn. She entered the store closely veiled, and as Williams came forward to wait upon her, she placed a revolver to his heart and fired. The weapon, however, was too insignificant to do any serious damage. Williams escaped with a bad scare, and a slight scratch. Mrs. Goldsby is 21 years old, her uncle, 25. She claims that he wronged her when she was but 9 years of age. Williams says she is crazy. She was locked up.

Idaho Admitted.

The House has passed the bill admitting Idaho to Statehood. The Democrats refrained from voting and Speaker Reed counted enough of them to make a quorum. The Democrats say that they intend to make this a test case and to have the courts pass upon the constitutionality of the rules, allowing the Speaker to count a quorum. It had been intended to make one of the contested election cases a test case, but as this could be done only by a suit for salary brought in the Court of Claims this course was abandoned and the present action decided upon.

A Chinaman's Deed.

Helena, (Mont.) special: A colored woman of bad repute was found with her body horribly mutilated by knife wounds. A Chinaman had been seen running from the house some time before. The house into which he entered was raided by the police and thirty Chinamen found there were arrested, the identity of the supposed murderer not being established. The case is being investigated.

Sad State of Affairs in New Jersey.

A misfortune which has come upon the farmers of the town of Germania causes intense excitement all over Southern New Jersey. Over forty families are now homeless. Sheriff Johnson, of Atlantic County, has sold within the last two days 200 farms to satisfy mortgages which have been foreclosed. One of the farmers evicted was George Ling. His misfortune made him crazy and he set fire to his home and burned it to the ground, dying himself in the flames. Another farmer, Fred Wersho, has barricaded himself in his house and announces his intention to keep possession or die.

DeWitt, Iowa, Visited by a Small Cyclone

The little city of DeWitt, Iowa, had a small but genuine cyclone from the southwest. Its path was but a rod or two in width, but several buildings were demolished and others unroofed, and sidewalks transplanted. A curious feature was the transplanting of a heavy porch from the front to the rear of the residence, knocking off a chimney in transit. A couple of rods off either side of the storm center scarcely a breath of air was discernible. None were injured, but the property damage was considerable.

A Horrible Accident.

A terrible accident occurred at Adams Canon, near Santa Paula, Cal., where the Hardison & Stewart Oil Company is boring a tunnel for oil. An explosion of gas occurred in the tunnel and a sheet of flame shot out, blowing the building 100 feet from the mouth of the tunnel. Two men were terribly burned and one died. The names are unknown. A force of men was put to work to clear the tunnel and there was another explosion, collapsing the whole tunnel and burning in the ruins six men, who are certainly dead.

Fatal Gas Explosion.

An explosion of gas in No. 4 slope of the Susquehanna Coal Company's Mine at Nanticoke, Pa., occurred in the sixth pit of the west gangway. The slope is situated in the heart of the town. A correct list of the killed and injured are: William A. James. miner, James Adams, miner; John Zubevago, laborer. Injured: John J. Griffith, fatally; Morgan Price, seriously; Joseph Brumski, dangerously; John Ruddick, slightly; Michael Barnisky, badly; George Almy, slightly.

Dying Amid Riches.

Marcus C. Stearns, a millionaire and a well-known business man, of Chicago, made a desperate attempt at self-destruction by shooting four bullets into his head. He was mortally wounded, and will probably die. He has been in poor health for some time, and his friends attribute the act to despondency. Mr. Stearns is the father-in-law of Ex-Mayor Carter Harrison.

Political Revolutionists.

Fifteen of the students arrested at Moscow will be tried on the charge of being political revolutionists. Forty-two have been expelled from the University. Of this number, thirty-seven have been allowed the right to enter other universities. Forty-four will be subjected to minor punishment; the remainder will be released.

An Important Discussion.

A most important discussion was rendered in the Circuit Court at Findlay, Ohio, declaring the new power of cities, towns, and villages in Ohio to pass a prohibitory ordinance under the provisions of the Dow law to prevent the sale of ale, beer, and porter to be unconstitutional, and thus null and void.

Thieves by the Wholesale.

Shocking Murder in the Jeffersonville Car Works.

A tragedy, shocking in its details, was enacted at the Ohio Falls car-works, in Jeffersonville, the principals to the affair being John Aldridge, aged 16, and William Gleeson, aged 17 years, both employes at the works. The two boys quarreled about some trivial matter, and the Aldridge boy, who is known to be of an ugly disposition, insisted on a settlement of their difference then and there. The other declined to fight, saying he would wait till they were out of the shops before having any further trouble, and started away from the scene of the quarrel. The Aldridge boy followed his adversary, and picking up piece of iron threw it at him, striking him at the base of the brain and fracturing the skull. Gleeson fell upon a nail-box, and expired thirty minutes after receiving the death blow. Several workmen in the shop where the boys were employed witnessed the tragedy, but were powerless to avert it, so suddenly was it done. Aldridge, after seeing his victim fall, ran to his home where he was arrested.

—At Vincennes, Mrs. Ann Kise, an old lady about seventy years old, fell into an open fire-place, and before she was discovered her face, and neck, and breast were terribly burned. She cannot long survive her injuries.

—Frederick Wesson's residence, in the outskirts of Fort Wayne, was destroyed by fire. A tall wind-mill stood beside the house, and Wesson, climbing upon it, was stifled with smoke and fell into the fire, sustaining fatal injuries.

—Richard Smith, an employe in the plate-glass department at the DePauw works at New Albany, was seriously injured by being caught under a pile of falling glass. He received several serious cuts on the arms and shoulders.

—The Commissioners of Tippecanoe County have rescinded the right of way of the electric street railway over the new bridge across the Wabash at Lafayette, and ordered the track removed from the levee. Litigation will result.

—Charles Hill has been brought from Louisville to Terre Haute to answer to wholesale hog-stealing. Hill had been operating largely in hogs, and is said to have stolen more than fifty animals during a space of time extending over less than one month.

—A passenger on the Muncie Route road, ran into Mrs. Farrell, aged 45 at Sheldon, near Fort Wayne, horribly mangling the lady. She was walking on the track and did not get off at the engineer's alarm, which was heard by passengers on the train. She lived not one hundred feet from where she was killed and was crossing the track from her son's home.

—The case of Augusta Schmidt vs. the Christiana Hooper estate is being tried in the Howard Circuit Court. The estate, valued at $60,000, is claimed by Mrs. Schmidt, a neice of Mrs. Hooper, who lived with her a greater portion of her life, with the understanding, as claimant says, that she should have all the property after the death of her aunt. Mrs. Hooper had numerous other relatives, who are resisting Mrs. Schmidt's claim. The deceased had no children and left no will. An administrator was appointed to settle the estate.

—Alice, the 2 year old daughter of Edward Alexander, living eight miles north of Shelbyville, was fatally burned by her clothes catching fire from the stove. Mrs. Dorsey, a neighbor, had her hands and arms burned while trying to extinguish the flames.

—Dr. Alfred S. Remey died at his residence six miles southeast of Greensburg, at the age of 70 years. He practiced medicine since early manhood, several years at Rushville, and amassed quite a fortune. Last November he was stricken with paralysis, and has been helpless since.

—A society for the prevention cruelty to animals and children has been organized at Greencastle, with a membership of fifty. The following officers were elected: President, R. A. Ogg; Vice President, L. P. Chapin; Secretary, James W. Stubbs, Treasurer; Thomas C. Hammond; Directors, Elder A. H. Morris, Capt. E. T. Chaffee, Mrs. Mary N. Matson, Mrs. Alice B. Allen, Frank A. Arnold.

—A serious injury recently befell William R. Woodard, contractor on the Monon from Orleans to French Lick. He was at Orleans and was setting a brake, when, by accident, he fell to the track of the moving train, injuring him very seriously. He is a son of W. R. Woodard, formerly Superintendent of the Monon, but now General Manager of the Louisville Southern.

—Thomas Hutsel was killed in the old McCoy grist mill near Warren recently. In putting the belt on the wheel which turns the bolter his coat was caught by the shaft and wound up until he was choked to death. He was dead when found a few minutes afterward. He formerly lived at Rochester, and was an old miller by trade. A wife and eight children are left.

—While going home from a neighbor's late at night, some three miles east of Shelbyville, Jerry Wheeler, a young farmer boy, was shot through the arm by some one ambushed along the road, making an ugly wound. One night before probably the same man attempted to stab him with a knife, cutting his clothes and grazing his flesh. Young Wheeler says he has no idea who his assailant is.

—The farmers in the neighborhood of Wheeling have been victimized out of about $400 by a walnut-stump shark. This robber represented that he was buying stumps to be used in veneering, and paid $1 each. For every stump he offered a twenty-dollar gold-piece, and received $19 in good money. From twenty to twenty-five purchases were made, and then the stump-buyer fled the country. The twenty-dollar gold-pieces which he worked off were all shown to be counterfeit.

—Govenor Hovey has pardoned Melvin Tyler, who was recently convicted of bigamy in the Delaware Circuit Court. Tyler married an estimable young lady of Muncie, claiming that he had been divorced from his first wife in New York. It afterwards transpired that no decree had been entered in the case, and he was indicted and convicted. The Governor believes that Tyler acted in good faith in the matter, and pledges have been made that he will remarry his Muncie wife as soon as he can legally do so.

—To Miami County farmers belongs the honor of the establishment of the first farmers' institute in the State, together with probably the largest average attendance and general good features. As a fitting climax to their successful second year meetings the closing session on April 4 and 5 was an immense affair, devoted to general business, but principally to the subject of butter. Prizes aggregating many hundreds were offered, special rates secured upon railroads entering Peru, and attendance was large from all over the State. The butter exhibit was held in the public hall of the city. There was also a grand exhibition upon the streets of the country's fine dairy cows.

Holman Davis, a colored man, living six miles north of New Castle, found a stake driven in the ground in his dooryard the other morning, on which was a White Cap notice, embellished with a death's head and bundle of switches, warning him to leave the country within fifteen days on pain of receiving 100 lashes at the hands of the Regulators. Davis is an inoffensive and respected man, and no cause is known for the warning except that his black skin is offensive in the eyes of the Virginia Bourbons who populate that neighborhood. Davis has armed himself heavily, and will give the desperadoes an interesting reception if they undertake to execute their threat.

—The faculty of Wabash College held an important meeting at Crawfordsville to take action in regard to the oration of Perry J. Martin, who secured the Baldwin prize of $40 by using the speech of another person. Martin had confessed his guilt and returned the money, and said that he never dreamed of securing the prize, and only wanted to make a creditable showing. He asked to be permitted to graduate next June. It was the unanimous decision of the faculty that Martin be dismissed from the college, and notice to this effect was sent to Martin. It was not decided who should get the Baldwin prize, but it is probable that the second best, Mr. Cain, of Danville, Ill., will receive it.

—Grant Sheirman, of Pulaski County, was lodged in the Cass County Jail at Logansport on the charge of horse-stealing. For some time a gang of horse-thieves have been operating in the counties of Cass, White, Fulton, Miami and Pulaski without detection. Recently three horses stolen from Cass County were found in the possession of Sheirman. His mistress who had been terrified into silence, told the officers of his connection with the stealing and he was arrested in Wabash County. Sheirman threatens to implicate others of the gang, and it is possible that an extensive combination of two or three in each county will be brought into the toils. Over fifty horses are said to have been stolen by the gang.

—William Justice, aged 45, a farmer living near Yorktown, was instantly killed by a falling tree. He leaves a wife and five children.

CATARRH—CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is, that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks.

N. B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on application by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Christian Advocate.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above. ly

The County Convention.

MR. EDITOR:—The central committee of the democratic party of this county, I see is called to meet next Saturday, for the purpose of organization. I understand that the candidates expect to have the committee call the county convention. The candidates now spoken of, but not regularly announced are quite busy, and expect to have their way. If the committee allow the candidates to control this matter, they had better turn the whole business over to the candidates. Then there would be fun and hair pulling. The candidates now at work, want an early convention, the reason being that the longer it is put off, the more candidates they think there will be before the convention, and they therefore calculate the fewer the candidates the greater will be their chance.

My observation in party matters is, that there is less kicking and trouble after a convention where there were many candidates for nomination, than where there are but two or three. The reason is readily understood. For in the one case, the defeated man lays all the fault on the successful one, but if there were a number the defeated ones do not know whether to lay the fault to the successful man, or to his defeated brethren.

I have but two suggestions to make to the committee, which are: 1st, do the business of your committee yourselves, and then you must exclude all others. If you allow everyone who wants to, attend and take part, you will be all day at it, and get into wrangles which will be bad for all.

2nd. Remember that if you get up new plans, a custom different from long established usages, and there should be defeat to anyone either at the nomination or polls, it will be laid to the change you have made in the campaign.

In fact you need not now name the day for the convention. The state central committee I see by the papers, was in session two weeks ago, and they did not call the state convention, nor name the day to hold it. But whatever may be done let it be done for the good of the party, and not for the candidates, and let everyone who wants to, be a candidate and give them plenty of time. Haste spoils the broth.

FARMER.

The Five Big Battles.

It will be remembered that not long ago, the Indianapolis News, offered a prize of $25 to the person naming the five most important battles of the rebellion. Last week it was decided, the fortunate man being A. E. Williams of Indianapolis. He is a young man, a clerk in the Pan Handle railway office. A committee had been selected to decide the matter. They were, Gen. Fred. Knefiler, Gen Geo. F. Magginis and Colonel James B. Black, all of Indianapolis. They met and studied over the leading battles and the effect they had exercised over the result of the struggle, and came to the conclusion that Gettysburg, Chattanooga, Champion's Hill, Nashville and Five Forks were the ones. Then the guesses began to come in, nearly 3,000 of them. There was only one that gave the names they had decided on, though quite a number of others named a part of them. The judges then made the award, and proceeded to explain why they believed these battles should be named. Their reasons, are of considerable value to the student of history, as they throw much light on the way we should estimate results in cases of this kind. We would be glad to give all their conclusions at once, but have not the space. So we will give as much as we can this week, and follow with the remaining battles under the proper heads hereafter. We hope the students of history in our public schools will preserve the committee's articles, not that they are necessarily correct, but that they are very valuable and interesting. They give first:

CHAMPION'S HILL

The number of troops engaged and the casualties would not alone entitle Champion's Hill to be included in this list; but it was indeed one of the most important and most decisive battles of the war, and in no other was more heroic courage displayed by the troops engaged. General Grant's campaign around Vicksburg was the boldest and most brilliant campaign ever conducted on this continent, both in its conception and in its execution; and this battle was the critical and decisive event of the campaign. The army of General Pemberton had come out from the stronghold of Vicksburg, seeking to unite with General Johnston's reinforcing column, and to strike and crush the daring invader in the interior without a base. Johnston had been beaten driven away from the city of Jackson, but it was necessary promptly to defeat Pemberton and to drive him beyond Black River and into Vicksburg. All this was done at Champion's Hill, and when it had been accomplished the fall of Vicksburg became a question of time. The great campaign led up to Champion's Hill, and victory there solved the whole problem. What was gained on that field may be realized more easily by considering what would have been lost if Grant had been beaten there. "The fate of the Confederacy was sealed when Vicksburg fell." Champion's Hill made possible the siege of Vicksburg, and the capture there of 31,000 prisoners, 172 pieces of artillery, 60,000 small arms and great quantities of ammunition. The fall of Vicksburg carried with it Port Hudson, with 5,500 prisoners and large quantities of munitions of war. Thus, the Confederacy was cut in two, and National control of the Mississippi from its source to the Gulf was secured. Champion's Hill was the first really decisive battle of the war, and the beneficial results of the victory were incalcuable.

Survival of the Fittest.

For some time past the question of purity in baking powders has formed quite a feature of newspaper discussions, and eminent doctors of philosophy have given opinions as to the ingredients which compose many of the articles sold under that name. The investigations have narrowed down to the limit which awards the Royal Baking Powder the palms of purity, and the most distinguished scientists have testified not only that no extraneous or deleterious matter enters into its composition, but that its use is positively healthful, making, as it does, lighter, sweeter and more digestible food. The Royal Baking Powder Copany have achieved a wide-world reputation for the success which has marked their preparation of cream of tartar for baking purposes. It is indisputably shown that they have eliminated all elements of tartrate of lime, alum or other impurities, and present to the public a healthful and chemically pure article. The United States Government chemists and others widely known have verified its superiority over other manufacturers, and testified, through practical experience, to its excellence. It is well for families to observe the fact that it costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other, but it is, as shown by chemical analysis, the only "absolutely pure" baking powder made.

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

Obituary.

Joseph C. Loveland, was born June 20, 1840 and died March 29, 1890, making his age 49 years, 9 months and 6 days. Mr. Loveland was well known in newspaper circles having been a printer and publisher from his youth. From 1862 to 1865 he published a paper at Auburn, but at the latter date removed to Clyde, Ohio, where he started the Clyde Times. About thirteen years ago he established the Headlight at Corunna, which he has published ever since. Mr. Loveland was a writer of more than average ability, with a keen taste for the caustic and pointed in anything he treated. He was, besides, a good printer, showing a fine taste for artistic work, and a disposition to keep the business of the craft up to its best standard. His acquaintance especially with newspaper men was extensive and his death leaves a gap in the ranks of the fraternity. His mother departed this life about a year ago, and the blow made a great impression on his mind, as he was greatly attached to her. He leaves no immediate relatives, but his son Joseph, and sister Mary, to mourn the loss of one who had proved a kind and indulgent father, and a loving brother.

Failures in Life.

People fail in many ways. In business, in morality, in religion, in happiness and in health. A weak heart is often an unsuspected cause of failure in life. If the blood does not circulate properly in the lungs, there is shortness of breath, asthma, etc.; in the brain dizziness, headache, etc.; in the stomach, wind, pain, indigestion, faint spells, etc.; in the liver, torpidity, congestion, etc. Pain in the left side, shoulder and stomach is caused by heart strain. For all these maladies Dr. Miles' New Cure for the heart and lungs is the best remedy. Sold, guaranteed and recomended by F. E. Davenport. Treatise free. 3

Card of Thanks.

To the many friends and neighbors of the late Joseph Loveland, we wish to extend our best thanks for help and kindness in his last illness and his death and burial. We can only trust you may all be as well remembered.

THE NEWS RECORD.

A SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World—Political, Commercial, and Industrial News, Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc., Etc.

The Mahoning.

The Pittsburgh and Western Railroad, which extends to Akron, has purchased the Toledo and Delphos Narrow-Guage road, which is finished from Carey to Delphos, Ohio. The track will be made standard gauge and extended to Chicago. It is proposed to build from Plymouth to Findlay, and then purchase the American Midland system, now in operation between Findlay and Ottawa, and which is graded as far west as Fort Wayne. Then, by building a short distance, make a great trunk line between Pittsburgh and Chicago, fifty-two miles shorter than any route now connecting these two cities. This new line is known as "the Carnegie road." The American road is now in the hands of a receiver, and is soon to be sold.

The Carpenters' Strike.

The carpenters' strike at Chicago took place Monday morning according to program. It is estimated that between five and six thousand men went out. The carpenter work on nearly all of the large jobs was brought to a standstill. No trouble was reported from any quarters so far. The strike was for eight hours as a day's work with wages at 40 cents per hour. A great many of the non-union men quit work out of sympathy with their union brethren, and it was claimed that most of them would join the Carpenters' Union. After being out all day a compromise was effected at $3.50 per day.

The Law Unconstitutional.

RICHMOND (Va.,) special: Upon appeal by Armour & Co., of Chicago, United States Judge Hughes has rendered a decision declaring the meat inspection law passed by the Legislature to be contrary to the federal constitution. The decision is elaborate and takes the ground that the inspection is not meant as a sanitary measure, but as a State revenue measure; that the tax of one cent per pound is outrageous and that the meat slaughtered within 120 miles of the delivery could be sold under the law in an unsound condition.

Killed Three Negroes.

Three negroes were stealing railroad iron at Irondale, Ark., when City Marshal England and Deputy Sheriff Fortenberry came up and called for their surrender. The negroes ran a mile, with the officers in pursuit, when one of them turned and shot England. Deputy Fortenberry opened fire on the negroes and when the firing ceased all three were dead. Marshal England will probably die.

Coffined, but Came to Life.

Mrs. Cynthia Moller, aged 91, of Wichita, Kan., appeared to die from a disease from which she had been suffering recently. The body had been placed on ice before it was discovered that life was not wholly extinct. Physicians were summoned and Mrs. Moller was resuscitated. She recovered sufficiently to converse with her friends, but in the afternoon a relapse occurred and she died.

Chocked to Death.

When Rev. Thomas Gefton, pastor of one of the leading Presbyterian churches, of Wichita, Kan., returned from church he found his little girl, 1-year-old, hanging in a hammock, dead. She had been left by a servant girl playing in the hammock, and the child apparently got her head fast in the meshes and swung down, her feet failing th touch the floor by six inches.

Local Option Beaten in Iowa.

Local option has been beaten by two votes in the Iowa House of Representatives. The test came at last on the motion to report the option bill back for the indefinite postponement, and the motion to postpone was carried by 51 to 49 votes. The fifty-one were made up of Ewart, the Union Labor-Prohibitionist, and the Republicans. They held firm against local option as a substitute to prohibition and carried the day.

A Cyclone in Illinois.

A Burlington (Iowa,) special, dated the 8th inst., says: It is reported that Prophetstown, Ill., has been swept away by a cyclone. No particulars except that thirty freight cars were blown to atoms. The whole town has been wiped from the face of the earth. Many people have been killed. The wires are down. It is not proable that additional information will be secured to-night.

Thirteen Coolies Killed.

A dispatch from Hong Kong reports a desperate encounter on board the German ship Chowfoo, on its passage from Amoy to Delhi, between the ship's force and 250 coolies, who mutinied and attempted to burn the steamer and murder the officers. Thirteen coolies were killed before the mutiny was suppressed.

A Double Killing.

At Chamber's Station, near Mt. Sterling, Ky., Will Barnes and Billy Day were killed by Albin Barnes and George Stephens. The Barnes were cousins and the shooting grew out of an old feud. Day was a bystander, without any share in the quarrel. Albin Barnes is thought to be wounded.

A Silcott Scent.

Denver (Col.) special: The various detective agencies here fail to confirm the report that Silcott had been captured in Portland, Ore. It is reported, however, that the woman whose name has been mixed up with Silcott's passed through Denver on her way west about a month ago.

CERNEAU MASONS.

They Apply for a Temporary Injunction Against the Grand Lodge in Ohio and It Granted.

Cleveland special: For several years past the Masons of Ohio have been divided on account of what is known as the Cerneau rite. Recently the controversy was taken into the Common Pleas Court. Three suits were filed by County Recorder A. T. Anderson, Deputy Probate Judge F. M. Chandler and A. E. Gilbert, against the Grand Lodge of Ohio, Leander Burdick, Grand Master of the State and the Forest City lodge of this city. The petitions allege that a conspiracy was entered into by the Grand Lodge to oust certain members who have become Cerneau Masons. By systematic work the Grand Lodge was captured by the alleged conspirators and all those not in sympathy with them had to go. The edicts of the resolutions were passed in direct conflict with the constitution and the Grand Lodge went outside of its duties to expel members of the lodges obnoxious to the sight of the conspirators. Charges were preferred against Anderson, Chandler and Gilbert. The hearing of these charges was to take place at a special meeting called for that purpose. The plaintiffs claimed that the hearing would be a farce so far as a just and equitable hearing is concerned and say they have no adequate remedy at law in case they were expelled. They asked the Court to enjoin the hearing for expulsion of the plaintiffs in these three cases. One of the principal charges again Chandler was that he delivered an address at a Cernean banquet, in which some of the secrets of Masonry were given away. Judge Lamson heard the motion for restraining order and granted it, pending a hearing.

FAMILY POISONED.

A Father and Mother Both Dead—A Daughter Dying and a Brother Dangerously Ill.

A Chicago special, dated the 7th inst., says: A mysterious and sensational case of poisoning occurred last night at the residence of George E. Noonan, a wealthy retired real estate dealer. It caused the death of Mr. Noonan and his wife, and may lead to the death of the daughter, Grace, a beautiful young lady, 16 years of age. The brother, Frank, was very ill last night, but it is thought that he will recover. The youngest child, Cora, was but slightly ill. Last night, at dinner, the family ate heartily of canned corn. Shortly after the meal symptoms of poisoning were noticed. The members of the family were greatly distressed by pains in the abdomen, and neighboring physicians were summoned. Before the doctors arrived Mr. Noonan was beyond medical aid and he died in great agony at 3 o'clock this morning Mrs. Noonan died at 11:30 o'clock. Dr. Crutcher, one of the attending physicians, secured the can of corn, but could discover no trace of poison in it. The physician, learning that Emma Stark, a domestic, who had come to the house only yesterday morning, was missing, notified the police of the strange case. She assisted in the preparation of dinner at 5 o'clock, and disappeared about 6 or about when the first symptoms of sickness were shown by any of the family. The police developed the fact that a girl answering the domestic's description had purchased some "Rough on Rats" at a drug store, corner of State and Sixty-first streets. She was arrested by the police, and, although she has been identified by several persons as the domestic who was at the Noonans yesterday she denies the fact. Her strange denials make the case all the more mysterious. The police think the girl frightened at the sudden illness of the various members of the family and fearing suspicion would be directed toward her, put on her hat and cloak and fled. The prisoner said she was a variety actress under the alias of Della Foster, and that her real name was Mrs. Starr William Ray, her husband from whom she was living apart being a bill poster at Fort Wayne, Ind.

"JUST FOR FUN."

A Couple of Tough Chicago Lads Go Into the Train Wrecking Business.

The grand jurors investigated a startling case of youthful depravity at Chicago. It was presented to them by J. W. Norton, of the Northwestern road. The company had been annoyed for some time by the theft of brass and pieces of iron from cars and switches. On the night of December 18, a switch located a little out of the city was turned and a freight train had a narrow escape from serious wreck. The guilty parties, however, were not discovered until some time afterward, when one night they fired two shots through the windows of a rapidly moving Woodstock passenger train. The officer who made the arrest was surprised to find his prisoners to be tow-headed boys of 12 and 14 years, Fred Krueger and Charles Borak. George W. Field and F. Stiesley, of Plainview, Minn., told how near they came to being killed by the shots fired. The boys declared they had attempted to wreck tne train and did the shooting "just for fun." Four indictments were returned against them, bail being fixed at $4,000. Krueger's bail was subsequently reduced to $2,500 by Judge Longer at the request of the lad's father.

Found Dead in Bed.

Columbus special: Edward J. Dowdall, an active local politician, and last year a member of the State Democratic Central Committee for this district, was found dead in bed at his residence in this city. Mr. Dowdall has been in poor health for some months, but lately had been gaining strength, and his friends hoped he would soon be well again. He had been about as usual the past week, and Saturday night retired feeling as well as for weeks past. His wife left him about 11 o'clock, retiring to her own room, and upon going to her husband's room in the morning found him cold in death. The physicians say he must have been dead three or four hours when discovered, and ascribe his death to heart disease. Deceased was prominent in secret society circles, being a 32 degree Mason, an Odd Fellow, K. of P., Red Man and identified with other orders, His father was the late Joseph Dowdall, who, at the time of his death, was Supreme Keeper of Records and Seal of the Grand Lodge of the World, Knights of Pythias, and the son filled out the unexpired term of his father.

A Clever Attempt to Rob a Chicago Jeweler

Chicago special: A bold attempt to rob a leading jewelry firm of $1,500 worth of diamonds was made by a young man who registered at the Palmer house under the name of Ralph Allen. Allen sent to Hyman, Berg & Co.'s jewelry store and requested the firm to send some diamonds to him for inspection as he was suffering from a sprained ankle and unable to visit their store. Wm. A. Bigler, a salesman for the firm, carried $1,500 worth of stones to Allen's room. After carefully examining all the jewels, Allen selected one ring and a pin. While the salesman was repacking the remainder of the diamonds, Allen came up behind him and struck him a terrible blow with a heavy cane on the back of the head; knocking him down. As the salesman got upon his feet and faced his assailant, Allen struck him again, cutting a wound two inches long in the scalp. The wounded man screamed and Allen, without stopping to grab the package of diamonds, rushed out of the room and ran down the hall way. After an exciting chase Allen was captured by an employe of the hotel and taken to the Harrison street station.

Too Reckless with Revolvers.

Louisville special: The people of Bryantsville are very indignant over the actions of four young Lexington men who passed through that place en route to Danville to attend the oratorical contest at Center College. Before reaching Bryantsville they shot at a man who was fishing, shot just between two men who were walking along the turnpike, invited some girls to get in and ride with them, stopped in Bryantsville and swore a few lines. Passing on they fired into a school-house while school was in session. The first door being open one ball struck the partition of the vestibule. Mr. Jenkins, one of the school trustees, followed them to Danville, but as the warrant he had only contained the name of one, the other three did not appear when 'Squire Dunn opened court. Their names are S. L. Pottinger, James Pugh, Lewis Mulligan, and Blythe Anderson. Anderson was fined $75, which was promptly paid. From his statement it appears that Pugh is the only one of the other three who is guilty.

Opposed to the Chinese Bill.

Representatives of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, the American Board (Congregational), the Protestant Episcopal Board, the American Baptist Missionary Union, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, the American Bible Society, the Evangelical Alliance and Society of Friends, met at the rooms of the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Board in New York, to consider the Chinese enumeration bill, now before the Senate, with special reference to its bearing upon missionary work and property in China. The sentiment of the meeting was strongly opposed to the bill. It was urged that its adoption would be a violation of treaty rights, and all who were present were apprehensive that it would endanger the personal safety of the American missionaries now resident in China and greatly hamper them in their work. It was decided to leave more specific action to be taken by the missionary societies separately. All the societies represented have missions in China.

Badly Burned.

Mrs. Geiger, of Fort Wayne, was burning sulphur near some bedding at her home, when in some manner the bedding became ignited and in her efforts to smother the blaze her clothing caught fire. The fire had gained considerable headway before she noticed it and her efforts to extinguish the same were in vain. She began screaming for help and ran out of the house. Her clothes were completely in flames, but there happened to be a street car passing, and the driver jumped from the car and throwing his coat around the woman succeeded in smothering the flames. Her clothes were almost completely burned from her body, and upon the arrival of a physician it was found that her head, shoulders, breast, arms and limbs had been badly burned, the hair being burned from her head, although her face was in no way injured. She was tenderly cared for, and it is thought that with careful nursing there will be no danger to her life.

An Eccentric Heiress.

Staunton (Va.) special: The news of the arrest in Philadelphia of Miss Mary Rebecca Shipley, on a charge of shoplifting, excited great surprise in Staunton, Va., where Miss Shipley is well known and highly respected. A telegram was sent to a lawyer of this city, now in Washington, to go to Philadelphia and defend Miss Shipley, and some of her neighbors will attend the trial to testify to the character. Miss Shipley was for many years separated from her parents, and during her early life she worked as a bonnet trimmer. In 1875 her parents were reunited and they began a search for their daughter. Soon after they discovered her they died, leaving her a fortune of $35,000. This money was invested for her and she has been living on the income from the investment. She has always been rather eccentric and her friends think her mind is affected.

A Novel Method.

The water which has flooded the New York end of the Hudson River tunnel was rapidly pumped out and every means that could be thought of have been employed to stop the leaks. Two divers descended and after spending considerable time, gave up the search. They succeeded, however, in closing one of the doors. Then Engineer Moore used a novel method of finding the leaks. He secured a number of water rats yesterday and tied long pieces of oakum to their tails, caught in the middle by a piece of wire. The rats, were then forced into the caisson through air pumps. The rats, following the current of air, found the leaks and passing through the crevices left the oakum behind. This stopped the ingress of air sufficiently to enable the pumping to proceed with success.

Illicit Whisky.

Lawlessness and violence have again made their appearance in Rowan County, Ky., growing out of the manufacture and sale of illicit whisky. The United States revenue men made a sweep a week ago, destroying various stills, and things are being made decidedly uncomfortable for the people who are thought to have given the Government information. Eph. Cooper was shot from ambush and Bart Baumgartner and Tim Cooper were also killed in a fight. George Hogg, son of the Sheriff, was shot, Hiram Roberts was bushwhacked and mortally wounded. Nelson Egan was called to his door and received a bullet in his brain. It is all a mere question of whisky or no whisky, and there is no telling where the bloodshed will end.

Not a Coward.

Col. Charles De Arnaud, a Russian, who is pressing a claim against the Government for services rendered during the late war, visited the Washington office of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette to demand a correction of a published dispatch. The dispatch stated that Col. De Arnaud was a spy during the war. Gen. H. V. Boynton, the correspondent of the Commercial-Gazette, declined to retract the charge, and when De Arnaud called him a coward. Gen. Boynton threw him through the doorway of the office, and into the street. Col. De Arnaud returned to the office and apologized for his language, saying that he was firmly convinced that Gen. Boynton was not a coward.

Wanted to Murder.

Memphis special: Somewhat of a sensation was created here by the attempt of Mrs. Fannie Goldsby to murder her uncle, Gibb Williams. Williams is a clerk in a book store on Main street. His neice is the wife of a farmer living at Lucy, Tenn. She entered the store closely veiled, and as Williams came forward to wait upon her, she placed a revolver to his heart and fired. The weapon, however, was too insignificant to do any serious damage. Williams escaped with a bad scare, and a slight scratch. Mrs. Goldsby is 21 years old, her uncle, 25. She claims that he wronged her when she was but 9 years of age. Williams says she is crazy. She was locked up.

Idaho Admitted.

The House has passed the bill admitting Idaho to Statehood. The Democrats refrained from voting and Speaker Reed counted enough of them to make a quorum. The Democrats say that they intend to make this a test case and to have the courts pass upon the constitutionality of the rules, allowing the Speaker to count a quorum. It had been intended to make one of the contested election cases a test case, but as this could be done only by a suit for salary brought in the Court of Claims this course was abandoned and the present action decided upon.

A Chinaman's Deed.

Helena, (Mont.) special: A colored woman of bad repute was found with her body horribly mutilated by knife wounds. A Chinaman had been seen running from the house some time before. The house into which he entered was raided by the police and thirty Chinamen found there were arrested, the identity of the supposed murderer not being established. The case is being investigated.

Sad State of Affairs in New Jersey.

A misfortune which has come upon the farmers of the town of Germania causes intense excitement all over Southern New Jersey. Over forty families are now homeless. Sheriff Johnson, of Atlantic County, has sold within the last two days 200 farms to satisfy mortgages which have been foreclosed. One of the farmers evicted was George Ling. His misfortune made him crazy and he set fire to his home and burned it to the ground, dying himself in the flames. Another farmer, Fred Wersho, has barricaded himself in his house and announces his intention to keep possession or die.

DeWitt, Iowa, Visited by a Small Cyclone

The little city of DeWitt, Iowa, had a small but genuine cyclone from the southwest. Its path was but a rod or two in width, but several buildings were demolished and others unroofed, and sidewalks transplanted. A curious feature was the transplanting of a heavy porch from the front to the rear of the residence, knocking off a chimney in transit. A couple of rods off either side of the storm center scarcely a breath of air was discernible. None were injured, but the property damage was considerable.

A Horrible Accident.

A terrible accident occurred at Adams Canon, near Santa Paula, Cal., where the Hardison & Stewart Oil Company is boring a tunnel for oil. An explosion of gas occurred in the tunnel and a sheet of flame shot out, blowing the building 100 feet from the mouth of the tunnel. Two men were terribly burned and one died. The names are unknown. A force of men was put to work to clear the tunnel and there was another explosion, collapsing the whole tunnel and burning in the ruins six men, who are certainly dead.

Fatal Gas Explosion.

An explosion of gas in No. 4 slope of the Susquehanna Coal Company's Mine at Nanticoke, Pa., occurred in the sixth pit of the west gangway. The slope is situated in the heart of the town. A correct list of the killed and injured are: William A. James, miner, James Adams, miner; John Zubevago, laborer. Injured: John J. Griffith, fatally; Morgan Price, seriously; Joseph Brumski, dangerously; John Ruddick, slightly; Michael Barnisky, badly; George Almy, slightly.

Dying Amid Riches.

Marcus C. Stearns, a millionaire and a well-known business man, of Chicago, made a desperate attempt at self-destruction by shooting four bullets into his head. He was mortally wounded, and will probably die. He has been in poor health for some time, and his friends attribute the act to despondency. Mr. Stearns is the father-in-law of Ex-Mayor Carter Harrison.

Political Revolutionists.

Fifteen of the students arrested at Moscow will be tried on the charge of being political revolutionists. Forty-two have been expelled from the University. Of this number, thirty-seven have been allowed the right to enter other universities. Forty-four will be subjected to minor punishment; the remainder will be released.

An Important Discussion.

A most important discussion was rendered in the Circuit Court at Findlay, Ohio, declaring the new power of cities, towns, and villages in Ohio to pass a prohibitory ordinance under the provisions of the Dow law to prevent the sale of ale, beer, and porter to be unconstitutional, and thus null and void.

Thieves by the Wholesale.

Cheyene (Wyo.) special: All of the northern sheriffs are at full cry on the trail of a desperate gang of wholesale horse thieves. The freebooters finding themselves closely pursued, cut the telegraph wires. The thieves have by this time reached Montana with 200 head of Wyoming horses.

Stabbed to Death.

Henry Popp, stabbed Moritz Grether to death at Canton, Ohio. Grether is a saloon-keeper, and when Popp entered his place to demand drinks, refused them and put him out. Popp came back and cut Grethers' throat from ear to ear, severing the jugular vein. He was arrested.

Three Children Burned.

A Huron (S. D.) special says: The house of Wilhelm Brown, near here, was burned. Three of his children who had been locked in the house while the parents went to the city, were unable to get out and perished in the flames. The oldest was less than 5 years old.

$8,000 Fire.

Fire started in a dry kiln at the Creamery Package Manufacturing Company's plant at Portland, Ind. The flames were confined to the dry kilns and raw material in the yards. Loss, $8,000; fully insured.

New Justice.

The Governor of Michigan has appointed Captain Edward Cahill, of Lansing, Justice of the Supreme Court, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Justice Campbell.

The Louisville Relief Fund.

The relief fund for the sufferers by the tornado amounts to about $135,000.

Shocking Murder in the Jeffersonville Car Works.

A tragedy, shocking in its details, was enacted at the Ohio Falls car-works, in Jeffersonville, the principals to the affair being John Aldridge, aged 16, and William Gleason, aged 17 years, both employes at the works. The two boys quarreled about some trivial matter, and the Aldridge boy, who is known to be of an ugly disposition, insisted on a settlement of their difference then and there. The other declined to fight, saying he would wait till they were out of the shops before having any further trouble, and started away from the scene of the quarrel. The Aldridge boy followed his adversary, and picking up piece of iron threw it at him, striking him at the base of the brain and fracturing the skull. Gleason fell upon a nail-box, and expired thirty minutes after receiving the death blow. Several workmen in the shop where the boys were employed witnessed the tragedy, but were powerless to avert it, so suddenly was it done. Aldridge, after seeing his victim fall, ran to his home where he was arrested.

—A passenger on the Muncie Route road, ran into Mrs. Farrell, aged 45 at Sheldon, near Fort Wayne, horribly mangling the lady. She was walking on the track and did not get off at the engineer's alarm, which was heard by passengers on the train. She lived not one hundred feet from where she was killed and was crossing the track from her son's home.

—The case of Augusta Schmidt vs. the Christiana Hooper estate is being tried in the Howard Circuit Court. The estate, valued at $60,000, is claimed by Mrs. Schmidt, a neice of Mrs. Hooper, who lived with her a greater portion of her life, with the understanding, as claimant says, that she should have all the property after the death of her aunt. Mrs. Hooper had numerous other relatives, who are resisting Mrs. Schmidt's claim. The deceased had no children and left no will. An administrator was appointed to settle the estate.

—Alice, the 2 year old daughter of Edward Alexander, living eight miles north of Shelbyville, was fatally burned by her clothes catching fire from the stove. Mrs. Dorsey, a neighbor, had her hands and arms burned while trying to extinguish the flames.

Ogg; Vice President, L. P. Chapin; Secretary, James W. Stubbs, Treasurer; Thomas C. Hammond; Directors, Elder A. H. Morris, Capt. E. T. Chaffee, Mrs. Mary N. Matson, Mrs. Alice B. Allen, Frank A. Arnold.

—A serious injury recently befell William R. Woodard, contractor on the Monon from Orleans to French Lick. He was at Orleans and was setting a brake, when, by accident, he fell to the track of the moving train, injuring him very seriously. He is a son of W. R. Woodard, formerly Superintendent of the Monon, but now General Manager of the Louisville Southern.

—Thomas Hutsel was killed in the old McCoy grist mill near Warren recently. In putting the belt on the wheel which turns the bolter his coat was caught by the shaft and wound up until he was choked to death. He was dead when found a few minutes afterward. He formerly lived at Rochester, and was an old miller by trade. A wife and eight children are left.

—While going home from a neighbor's late at night, some three miles east of Shelbyville, Jerry Wheeler, a young farmer boy, was shot through the arm by some one ambushed along the road, making an ugly wound. One night before probably the same man attempted to stab him with a knife, cutting his clothes and grazing his flesh. Young Wheeler says he has no idea who his assailant is.

—The farmers in the neighborhood of Wheeling have been victimized out of about $400 by a walnut-stump shark. This robber represented that he was buying stumps to be used in veneering, and paid $1 each. For every stump he offered a twenty-dollar gold-piece, and received $19 in good money. From twenty to twenty-five purchases were made, and then the stump-buyer fled the country. The twenty-dollar gold-pieces which he worked off were all shown to be counterfeit.

—Govenor Hovey has pardoned Melvin Tyler, who was recently convicted of bigamy in the Delaware Circuit Court. Tyler married an estimable young lady of Muncie, claiming that he had been divorced from his first wife in New York. It afterwards transpired that no decree had been entered in the case, and he was indicted and convicted. The Governor believes that Tyler acted in good faith in the matter, and pledges have been made that he will remarry his Muncie wife as soon as he can legally do so.

—To Miami County farmers belongs the honor of the establishment of the first farmers' institute in the State, together with probably the largest average attendance and general good features. As a fitting climax to their successful second year meetings the closing session on April 4 and 5 was an immense affair, devoted to general business, but principally to the subject of butter. Prizes aggregating many hundreds were offered, special rates secured upon railroads entering Peru, and attendance was large from all over the State. The butter exhibit was held in the public hall of the city. There was also a grand exhibition upon the streets of the country's fine dairy cows.

Holman Davis, a colored man, living six miles north of New Castle, found a stake driven in the ground in his dooryard the other morning, on which was a White Cap notice, embellished with a death's head and bundle of switches, warning him to leave the country within fifteen days on pain of receiving 100 lashes at the hands of the Regulators. Davis is an inoffensive and respected man, and no cause is known for the warning except that his black skin is offensive in the eyes of the Virginia Bourbons who populate that neighborhood. Davis has armed himself heavily, and will give the desperadoes an interesting reception if they undertake to execute their threat.

—The faculty of Wabash College held an important meeting at Crawfordsville to take action in regard to the oration of Perry J. Martin, who secured the Baldwin prize of $40 by using the speech of another person. Martin had confessed his guilt and returned the money, and said that he never dreamed of securing the prize, and only wanted to make a creditable showing. He asked to be permitted to graduate next June. It was the unanimous decision of the faculty that Martin be dismissed from the college, and notice to this effect was sent to Martin. It was not decided who should get the Baldwin prize, but it is probable that the second best, Mr. Cain, of Danville, Ill., will receive it.

—Grant Sheirman, of Pulaski County, was lodged in the Cass County Jail at Logansport on the charge of horse-stealing. For some time a gang of horse-thieves have been operating in the counties of Cass, White, Fulton, Miami and Pulaski without detection. Recently three horses stolen from Cass County were found in the possession of Sheirman. His mistress who had been terrified into silence, told the officers of his connection with the stealing and he was arrested in Wabash County. Sheirman threatens to implicate others of the gang, and it is possible that an extensive combination of two or three in each county will be brought into the toils. Over fifty horses are said to have been stolen by the gang.

—William Justice, aged 45, a farmer living near Yorktown, was instantly killed by a falling tree. He leaves a wife and five children.

LOVE'S RIDDLE IN EGYPT.

BY MARY SHAW.

A desolate, sun-scorched desert and thirsty dying palm;
A pyramid, a brooding sphinx, a soft Egyptian calm.
On thoughts of love and wealth and pride, like Cleopatra, she
Now dreams the old dreams again in this land of mystery.
The old-time palm and pyramid, the sphinx beside the way,
And the passions of that long-dead time stir our hearts to-day.
The sands wherein the Christ child played cover the silent sphinx;
Waters which laved His sacred feet the heathen Mahdi drinks.
The gentle Christ and the Arab, to-day, dwell in our hearts,
And now our loves, and now our hates, force us to play our parts.
And life and love sweep onward past the sphinx and pyramid;
At last, as part of that sacred dust, their secrets we'll read.

CHAPTER IX.

THE MISSING LINK.

Flip, having a wonderfully tenacious memory, did not forget the conversation he had overheard between Myles and Miss Penfold; so, going to his patron's office, he repeated it in due course to Dowker. The result was that the detective became much exercised in his mind over the whole affair. He could not understand Desmond's refusal to tell the name of the woman he saw on the night of the murder. True, Desmond denied it was Lena Sarschine, but then his denial went for nothing, as he would do so to save himself from suspicion. Mrs. Povy said Lena Sarschine had been there between 11 and 12, and it was unlikely she would be wrong, seeing how well acquainted she was with the appearance of the dead woman. But then, judging from the drift of Desmond's remarks, his refusal to speak was dictated by a desire to screen the honor of a woman.

"You see this?" asked Dowker, showing Flip the dagger he had abstracted from Cleopatra Villa.

Flip intimated by a vigorous nod of his head that he did.

"I've got an idea," explained Dowker, smoothly, "that a dagger very similar to this is to be found in the possession of Mr. Myles Desmond, the gentleman you saw to-day, so I want you by some means to get into his rooms and find out if it's there."

Flip screwed his face into a look of profound thought and then smiled in a satisfied manner.

"I'll do it, guv'nor," he said, sagaciously.

"How?" asked Dowker, curious to learn how this juvenile detective proposed to deal with the problem.

"I'll doss on his doorstep to-night," said Flip, "and when he comes 'ome do a 'perish'—you knows"—in an explanatory tone—"say I'm dyin' for victuals—'e'll take me inside, and when I gits there you leave me alone, guv'nor, I'm fly!"

"Well, you can manage it as you please," said Dowker. "But don't you prick yourself with it, as it's poisoned, and Flip, if you bring me that dagger without him knowing about it, I'll give you half a sov."

"Done, guv'nor," said Flip, joyfully, and, bidding adieu to his patron, went off to get something to eat and prepare his plan of action.

It was now about six o'clock and very dark, the sky being overcast with clouds. Soon it began to rain steadily and the streets became sloppy and dismal. Flip drew his rags round him, shivered a little in a professional manner, and then going off to a cook-shop he patronized in Drury Lane, had a hunch of bread and a steaming cup of coffee for a small sum.

Being thus prepared for his work Flip wiped his mouth, and, sallying forth into the dirty lane, took his way up to Bloomsbury, combining business with pleasure by begging on the road.

Turning into Primrose Crescent he soon found the house he wanted, and, curling himself on the doorstep, waited patiently for chance to deliver Myles into his designing hands.

The rain continued to pour down steadily, and as it was now dark Flip could see the windows all along the street being lighted up. The gas-lamps also shone brightly through the rain, and were reflected in dull, blurred splashes on the pavements. Occasionally a gentleman would hurry past with his umbrella up, and a ragged tramp would slouch along singing a dismal ditty. It was dreary waiting, but Flip was used to such times, and sat quite contented, thinking how he could lay out his promised half sovereign to the best advantrge, till his quick ear caught the sound of footsteps inside.

This was his cue, so he immediately lay down on the wet stones and commenced to moan dismally. Myles opened the door and would have stumbled over him, for he was right in front of the entrance after the fashion of the clown in the pantomime, only he caught sight of him in time.

"Hullo," said Myles, crossly, "what the deuce is the matter?"

Flip made no reply to this, but groaned with renewed vigor, upon which Desmond, who was a kind-hearted man, bent down and touched the ragged little figure.

"Are you ill?" he asked, gently.

"Oh, Lor'—awful—my insides," groaned Flip, pressing his dirty hands on his stomach. "Ain't had a bit for days."

Myles was doubtful as to the genuineness of this case, as he knew how deceptive tramps are, but as the poor lad did seem in pain and it was raining heavily he determined to give him the benefit of the doubt.

"Can you rise?" he asked, sharply. "If so, get up and come inside. I'll give you something to do you good."

With many groans and asseverations of extreme pain Flip struggled to his feet, and aided by Myles went inside, up the stairs and was at last safely deposited on the hearthrug in front of the fire, where he lay and groaned with great dramatic effect.

"I'll give you some hot port wine," said Myles, going to the sideboard and taking out a glass and a bottle, "so I'll have to go downstairs and get some hot water—you wait here."

Flip groaned again and gyrated on the floor like a young eel; but when the door had closed behind his benefactor, he sprang to his feet and took a survey of the room.

It was a large and lofty apartment, with a pair of folding-doors on one side, which being half open showed Flip that the other room was a bedroom.

There was a sideboard in the sitting-room, and near this a writing-table, toward which Flip darted and commenced to turn over the papers rapidly with the idea of finding the dagger hidden underneath.

Nothing, however, rewarded his efforts, and though he looked into the sideboard, examined the bookcase and lifted up the covers of the chairs, he found no sign of the weapo

"Must be in the bedroom," thought Flip, scratching his head in perplexity and wondering how he could get in, when suddenly it occurred to him that he had not examined the mantel-piece.

There was not a moment to be lost, as Myles might return at any moment, so in a second Flip scrambled up on a chair, and was eagerly looking among the ornaments on the mantel-piece.

There was a mirror framed in tarnished gold, and in front of this a tawdry French clock under a glass shade, two Dresden china figures simpering at one another, and two tall green vases at each end. Flip saw nothing of what he wanted till he peered into one of these vases, where he saw something looking like steel, and drew forth a slender shining blade with no handle.

"Wonder if this is what the guv'nor wants?" he said to himself, turning it over gingerly; "'taint got no 'andle."

He thought for a moment, and then, as he had been so lucky with one vase looked into the other, and found a cross handle. He joined the two and they fitted perfectly. Being certain this was what Dowker wanted, he was thinking how he could take it, when he heard Myles ascending the stairs. Jumping down he hid the broken blade and the handle securely among his rags, being very careful not to prick himself as he remembered Dowker's warning about the poison, then he lay down upon the hearth-rug again, and was groaning painfully when Myles entered with the hot water.

"Feeling bad?" asked Myles, sympathetically, pouring out some port wine.

"Awful!" groaned Flip, with a feeling of compunction at the treacherous part he was playing. "It's cold, I think—weak with 'unger."

"Here, drink this," said Desmond, sitting down beside him, and giving him the steaming tumbler. "It will do you good."

"Thanks, guv'nor," said Flip, gratefully, feeling if the broken blade was all safe, "it 'ull warm me up."

Desmond lighted his pipe and sat watching the ragged little arab drinking the hot wine, never thinking for a moment that he was nourishing a viper—a viper that would turn and sting him. Honest himself, he never suspected wrong-doing in others, and while succoring this outcast he did not know he was doing an evil thing for himself.

After Flip had finished the wine, he declared he felt better, and, with many asseverations of gratitude, took leave of his benefactor.

"Poor little devil!" said Desmond, as he closed the door, and saw the ragged little urchin scudding away in the darkness, "he seemed very bad—well, I've done one good action, so perhaps it will bring me a reward."

It did, and the reward was that next morning Myles Desmond, of Bloomsbury, journalist, was arrested for the murder of Lena Sarschine.

CHAPTER X.

ANOTHER COMPLICATION.

Though he had arrested Myles Desmond, Dowker was by no means certain that he had got a hold of the right man. Judging from the conversation reported by Flip, Desmond himself appeared to have strong suspicions about Calliston, and Dowker in his own mind became convinced that there was some connection between the elopement of Lady Balscombe and the murder of Lena Sarschine.

He wanted to find out the name of the woman who visited Lady Balscombe on the night of the murder, for a sudden thought had presented itself that this unknown visitor might have been Lena Sarschine. But the idea seemed absurd, for a woman of such a character could hardly have the audacity to visit Lady Balscombe.

"And yet," pondered Dowker, "I don't know—these two women both loved the same man, and a free-lance like Lena Sarschine would not hesitate for a moment in slanging any woman who took her man away—but why did not Lady Balscombe kick up a row and order her to leave the house? I'm hanged if I can get to the bottom of this!"

At length Dowker decided that the best thing to be done would be to find out from some servant of the Balscombe household all that took place subsequent to Lady Balscombe's departure. First, however, he decided on seeing Lydia Fenny and finding out if Lena Sarschine had let fall any hint of calling on her rival.

Lydia Fenny received the detective eagerly, as she evidently loved her mistress and wanted to do all in her power to further the ends of justice. As there was no time to be lost, Dowker plunged at once into the subject matter of his visit.

"Did Miss Sarschine state, on the night of her murder, where she was going?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Lydia; "as I told you before, she said she was going to Lord Calliston's rooms."

"Nowhere else?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"Humph! she did not make any remark that would lead you to believe she was going to Lady Balscombe's?"

"Lady Balscombe's!" echoed Lydia in astonishment; "why, what would she want to do there?"

"I don't know, but I think she was there on that night." And Dowker detailed to Lydia the conversation overheard by Flip, at the conclusion of which she said:

"I suppose you want to find out from the servants if Miss Sarschine was there?"

"Yes; do you know any of the servants?"

"One—Lady Balscombe's maid—Annie Lifford."

"Oh!" said Dowker, in a satisfied tone. "Can you ask her to come along here and see you? I can find out all I want to know from her."

"I daresay I can get her to come here to-day, as her mistress being away she can not be busy."

"Good!" replied the detective. "Send for her at once. I will wait here."

"Very well," said Lydia, and was leaving the room when Dowker called her back.

"Could you let me see your mistress' private desk?" he asked.

Lydia looked at him doubtfully.

"I don't know if I ought to let you see her private papers."

Dowker laughed in a subdued manner.

"Why not?" he said lightly; "she is dead, and we want to find out who killed her; looking at her papers can not do any harm and may save the life of an innocent man."

Lydia Fenny hesitated no longer, but leading the detective to the end of the drawing-room showed him a recess wherein was placed a very handsome desk of the ordinary office character. Dowker tried some of the drawers.

"Locked," he said quietly. "Have you the keys?"

"No, she had them with her."

Dowker made up his mind to commit a burglary.

"Bring me a chisel."

"At once," replied Lydia Fenny, going; "and I'll also send for Annie Lifford."

She left the room, and Dowker, sitting down in front of the desk, examined it carefully. It was one of those table desks with a knee-hole in the center and a row of drawers on each side. At the back were a number of pigeon-holes containing papers, and these Dowker examined, but found nothing more than bills and blank sheets of paper.

"Whatever private papers she's had," said Dowker, on discovering this, "are in these drawers."

Lydia Fenny arrived with a chisel and a small hammer, both of which she handed to Dowker, telling him at the same time she had sent for Annie Lifford. Dowker nodded carelessly and began to force open the drawers.

After half an hour's hard work this was the result of his labors:

First, a bundle of old letters addressed to "Miss Helena Dicksfall, Post Office, Folkestone," signed F. Carrill.

Second, a photograph of a handsome, white-haired old man, on the back of which was written, "Your loving father, Michael Dicksfall."

Third, a photograph of Lena Sarschine, taken in a white dress, with a tennis racket in her hand.

Dowker examined the photographs carefully and then coolly read all the letters, of which there were about ten. After doing this he turned to Lydia Fenny, who had been watching him all the time, and said:

"I can read a whole story in this. The name of your mistress was not Lena Sarschine, but Helena Dicksfall. She lived at Folkestone with her father, Captain Michael Dicksfall, and a lady she calls Amelia, whom I take to be her sister. Lord Calliston went down to Folkestone, saw her, and fell in love. All these letters show how he conducted his intrigue, which he did under the name of Frank Carrill. He loved Miss Dicksfall, but did not wish to marry her. At last he persuaded her to run away with him, and at last she did so. Ashamed of her position, she changed her name to Lena Sarschine so as to conceal her identity. The portrait of the old gentleman is that of her father, Michael Dicksfall, and this one is herself."

Lydia Fenny listened in silent amazement to the way in which he had pieced the story together, and then taking the portraits in her hand she looked at them long and earnestly.

"Ye," she said at length, laying down the photographs with a sigh. "It is Miss Sarschine, but it must have been taken some time ago, for I never saw her in that dress, and I have been with her for about a year."

Dowker was about to make a reply, when the door opened and a woman entered. Tall, thin, with a pale face, dark hair, and an aggressive manner, dressed in a green dress, and bonnet to match.

"Oh!" observed Lydia on seeing her, "is this you, Annie?"

Dowker looked sharply at the newcomer, whom he now knew to be Lady Balscombe's maid, and she returned his gaze with a look of suspicion.

"Well, sir," she said at length, in a rather harsh voice, "I hope you'll know me again."

Dowker laughed, and Lydia hastened to introduce him to Miss Lifford, who, being an extremely self-possessed young person, took the introduction very calmly, though she manifested some surprise when she heard Mr. Dowker's calling.

"This gentleman," said Lydia, when they were all seated, "wants to ask you a few questions."

"And for what?" asked Miss Lifford, indignantly, "my character I hope being above policemen's prying."

"I'm not a policeman," explained Dowker, smoothly, "but a detective, and I want to know all that took place on the night your mistress eloped."

"Are you employed by Sir Rupert?" asked Annie, grandly; "because, though I knows they fought bitter, yet wild bulls won't drag anything out of me against my mistress, she being a good one to me."

"I don't want you to say anything against your mistress," replied Dowker, mildly; "but I am invetigating this case of murder."

"Murder!" echoed Miss Lifford, in a scared tone. "Who is murdered—not Lady Balscombe?"

"No," said Lydia, bursting into tears, "but my poor mistress, Miss Sarschine."

"A person of no repute," sniffed Annie, coldly.

"Leave her alone," said Lydia passionately. "She's dead, poor soul, and, even if she was not married, she was better than Lady Balscombe, carrying on with Lord Calliston."

"Oh, indeed, miss!" said Annie, rising indignantly. "This is a plot, is it, to mix up Lady Balscombe with your mistress? I won't have anything to do with it."

Dowker caught her wrist as she arose and forced her back into her chair.

"You'll answer what I want to know," he said sternly, "or it will be the worse for yourself."

Upon this Miss Lifford began to weep, and demanded if she was a slave or a British female, to be thus badgered and assaulted by a policeman. At last, after some difficulty, Dowker succeeded in making her understand that what he wanted to know was not detrimental to her mistress, upon which she said she would tell him what he required. So Dowker produced his note-book and prepared to take down Miss Lifford's evidence.
